"Humoresque"

featuring
ALMA RUBENS

THAT "Humoresque is to this season what "The Miracle Man" was to last is now definitely known.

Not since that unforgetable masterpiece of George Loane Tucker's has there been a production of such vital humanity, such a mighty theme, or one so wonderfully acted.

Crowded houses all summer long at the Criterion on Broadway, the unanimous opinion of the critics, and the emotional response of those who see it, demonstrate beyond all chance that it will be the outstanding box-office sensation of the new season.

SIR JAMES BARRIE'S FAMOUS PLAY "HALF AN HOUR"

AT seven-thirty she said farewell to her husband—forever.

And then—in a crowded thirty minutes—she knew, for the first time, Life! She knew joy and tragedy, sorrow and disillusionment—and finally—

At eight o'clock she was another woman! Dorothy Dalton was never more magnificent than in this master drama by England's greatest living dramatist.

But she was!

And when the revolution overthrew her she came to New York.

What happened then, all the delightful adventures that followed—these make a picture of a new kind for Dorothy Gish—one that your people will more than enjoy.

SEPTEMBER

A George Fitzmaurice Production "The Right to Love"—Lavish and beautiful with more human passion and more spectacular thrills than "On with the Dance."
Charles Ray in "A Village Sleuth"—A Thos. H. Ince Production. Here's Charlie again in a funny hick role—full of laughs.
Elsie Ferguson in "Lady Rose's Daughter."—Never before has Miss Ferguson appeared to such advantage as in this, her biggest picture, dramatically and scenically.
Wallace Reid in "What's Your Hurry?"—Here are thrills and more than thrills; comedy and more than comedy. A thundering drama that is as vital as the elements.
"Humoresque," featuring Alma Rubens—A Cosmopolitan production. Its Broadway record tells the story. The biggest picture of the year.
Dorothy Dalton in Sir James Barrie's famous play "Half an Hour."—The author of "Male and Female" and "Peter Pan" has written here a tremendous emotional drama.
A Hugh Ford Production, Thomas Meighan in "Civilian Clothes."—The good-luck star in a great comedy drama, wonderfully produced.
Dorothy Gish in "Little Miss Rebellion."—A princess making flapjacks! Something different for Miss Gish. Wholly delightful.

OCTOBER

Cecil B. DeMille's Production "Something to Think About."—Into simple humanities DeMille has gone in this production, with his magic touch.
Douglas MacLean in "The Jailbird,"—A Thos. H. Ince Production. He broke out of jail and started a lot of things, and then broke back in to finish them.
Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in "The Round Up."—A George Melford Production. Fatty's first full length drama! And made from the great melodramatic stage success.
Maurice Tourneur's Production "Deep Waters."—An idyll of New England's coast that tells a story of a love that could not be drowned even in the deep waters of jealousy.
William S. Hart in "The Cradle of Courage."—Hart is a crook who turns cop and fights a mighty fight to be square. Action and thrills to the limit.
Ethel Clayton in "A City Sparrow."—A heart interest story that will move the most calloused to tears and the gloomiest to laughter.
William Gillette's "Held By the Enemy."—The biggest of all stage startlers, acted by an all star cast and produced on a gigantic scale. A punch in every scene.
Bryant Washburn in "A Full House."—A riproarious game of love that wasn't played exactly according to Hoyle. A royal flush of laughter that'll win all hands.
Cosmopolitan Production "The Restless Sex" with Marion Davies.—Robert W. Chambers' great novel translated to the screen with all its passion and romance.
Charles Ray in "An Old Fashioned Boy."—A Thos H. Ince Production. It's a typical Ray comedy drama.

NOVEMBER

George Melford's Production "Behold My Wife."—Sir Gilbert Parker's famous story. Backgrounds of marvelous color; acted by an all star cast.
Ethel Clayton in "Sins of Rosanne."—She loved only jewels, and her heart was as hard as her diamonds. Until a man found a way to awaken her. Wierd, thrilling and mystifying.
Wallace Reid in "Always Audacious." ("Toujours de l'Audace")—A crook who looks like a millionaire and cops his sweetheart, his home and his millions—until the beans are spilled.
Enid Bennett in "Her Husband's Friend."—A Thos. H. Ince Production. A domestic drama with a different angle, and thoroughly captivating.
Billie Burke in "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson."—Clyde Fitch's famous play of a woman who sacrificed even her reputation to save her friend. Billie Burke's best role.
Bryant Washburn in "Burglar Proof."—He was so stingy you couldn't get a nickel out of him with dynamite. But a girl found the combination to his heart as well as to his pocketbook.
A George Fitzmaurice Production "Idols of Clay."—In the South Seas, in London's Bohemia and in the palaces of the rich, she searched—for love. Stupendous in drama, opulent and spectacular in production.
Dorothy Dalton in "A Romantic Adventuress."—Against her will an adventuress—a blackmailer! Forced to trick the man she really loved. How does she save herself from her fate?

"'Tis always morning somewhere in the world."

HOMELESS and friendless, young Ed Simpson had neither the education nor the inclination to define the optimism which sang in his heart. But it was there, just the same.

You see, Ed was a foundling, a nobody's child, and he was growing up in an orphan's home. The jeers and sneers and general abuse which he suffered, form the background for the smashing

WILLIAM D. TAYLOR

Special Feature

THE SOUL OF YOUTH

Now available at all Realart branch offices.

Ed Simpson grips your sympathies because of his plucky, up-hill fight against a sordid and unfair environment. The lad did not recognize it as a moral struggle. He was boy to the core and most of his fighting was done with his fists. Under dramatic circumstances and by his courage and originality Ed won militant friends and his progress toward real happiness began right there.

The role of Ed Simpson is portrayed by LEWIS SARGENT, perhaps the greatest boy actor in the business. Young Sargent will be remembered for his superb portrayal of Huckleberry Finn in the tremendously popular screen production of Mark Twain's immortal classic which was also directed by Mr. Taylor.

THE SOUL OF YOUTH is Realart's first special feature. It typifies Realart's idea of what a special feature should be — big story, exceptional cast, super-direction and production befitting these other necessary qualities. It is a play, not alone that arouses sympathy, but one that appeals strongly to reason. It has more of the so-called big moments than any two or three ordinary feature productions; it is packed with punch!

There is the moment when the boy battles with his fists against a whole gang to protect a stray dog that is being persecuted.

There is the moment when he meets his first big test of a new friendship by holding up the cop on the beat long enough to permit his newsboy chum to escape arrest — and then himself goes to jail with the policeman.

There is the moment when he limps away, dangerously wounded, from an exploit of daring undertaken to clear the good name of a friend who loves the sister of his benefactor.

There is the moment when, friendless and alone, a man of influence as his prosecutor and with every incentive for lying, he faces the judge in court—and tells the truth.

There are many more such moments — adventures in streets and alleys, in foraging for food as a homeless lad must, in meeting the problems of the great, wide world.

Space is inadequate to list them all, but together they constitute a drama that will play on the heart strings and pull at purse strings. In offering THE SOUL OF YOUTH, Realart is confident that it is well started in a new phase of its career and fully justified in its decision to limit its activities along special feature lines to the production of four pictures a year.

THE SOUL OF YOUTH is available today at any Realart branch office. You can get playing dates now, but there are weeks of waiting in store for those who long delay action.

Congratulations to William Fox Upon His Tremendous Growth

Associated Producers, Inc., view with pleasure the announcement of William Fox and his Fox Film Corporation for the amusement year now about to open.

We wish him well with his great volume of product distributed in virtually every part of the world through his own organization.

William Fox is the first great independent producer and distributor of this industry. He alone broke the monopoly of the Motion Picture Patents Company and through this courageous step made this a "free industry" in which strong and able men could establish themselves and in which, rightly, weak men could fail as weak men fail in other industries and professions.

No men agree on all points at issue and there may be, and are, doubtless many points over which we would differ with him over the multitude of phases of this industry and its problems.

But we admire his daring and insistence upon independence and we hail his gigantic imagination that has built a powerful, sound, world-wide independent organization to establish his name.

It is fair to point out that Associated Producers, Inc., places the same emphasis upon its freedom and independence that William Fox places upon his own. Like his own organization, ours is being kept free of entangling alliances and intrigues.

Competing fairly and cleanly with him at a thousand points or more, it may be a pleasing surprise to William Fox to know that Associated Producers, Inc., sales organization of a hundred men carries our liking and respect for this first great independent out across the broad map of America to the exhibitors we mutually serve, as well as to those we expect to serve.

MOVIE FIRE ATTRACTS BIG CROWD

Excitement Attends Filming of Night Scenes for Neal Hart's Big Special, "Hell's Oasis"

GLENDALE, CALIF., Aug. 21.—(Special to The News.)—The red glare of what appeared to be a large conflagration attracted thousands of excited men, women and children to the studios of Pinnacle Productions, Inc., on East Windsor Road in this city last night, and supplied plenty of excitement for a short time.

Motorists gathered at the spot in the belief that a part of Glendale was aflame, but remained to witness the spectacular event upon learning that it was "just a movie stunt."

No damage was done, except that a small section of the high fence surrounding the spacious grounds of the Pinnacle gave way under pressure from the crowds outside.

The fire was staged between 9 and 10 o'clock. The scene was one of the final ones in the picture, "Hell's Oasis," upon which Neal Hart and his company have been working for the past six weeks, and the script called for the burning of a frame church. It will be remembered in the story of "The Fighting Parson," from which "Hell's Oasis" is taken, that the action takes place in a Western town which has become a hot bed of vice, sin and violence. By freak of chance there comes to this town a girl of refinement and high ideals, and the story tells of her contact with the rough inhabitants and the influence she exerts upon one man whose feet have wandered far afield, and who has almost forgotten there is any good in the world.

A Bullet-Scarred Church

Almost—for chance puts it up to him to protect the girl from harm, and his acts antagonize the powers of evil.

There is a little church, long deserted, whose windows have been targets for bullets. The girl's influence on the man-about-to-go-wrong flowers in his determination to re-open the forlorn and disused house of worship. His intention becomes known, and the opposing faction sets fire to the church to defeat him.

All preparations had been made. A frame church had been erected at the studio and a line of hose was run and connected to a water plug in case of emergency. But no word of this leaked out of the studio.

Thus the flames came as a complete surprise to the townspeople. The frame building ignited quickly and was soon a red hot furnace. The ruddy glare against the sky was made more brilliant by the calcium lights and Cooper-Hewitts used for better photographic effect. The result was that Manager C. M. Griffin found his hands full in handling the crowd that stormed the portals of his studio.

Public Supplanted the Extras

"Chuck" Welty, cameraman for Hart, said he got some remarkable shots. It was one of the most realistic fires ever seen locally for motion picture purposes. A crowd of extra players had been employed to register excitement in the picture, but so many outsiders found their way through the broken down fence that Manager Griffin could have spared the expense of the extra mob had he known what was coming.

When the walls fell in a great shower of sparks and burning embers was sent high in the air, but fell harmlessly on the open fields surrounding the Pinnacle grounds.

But little work remains to be done in the finishing of "Hell's Oasis." All location shooting was finished some time ago, and upon the taking of a few more interiors in the studio the production will go to the cutting room. It is expected that the assembled negative will go to Chicago for printing within the next ten days.

Hart's Romantic Career

Hart has had a romantic and vivid career, though still a young man, and is today one of the few genuine Westerners to be found in picture work. He was for two years a deputy sheriff in the roughest part of Wyoming, and helped in many an outlaw chase. Prior to that time he had been a cowpuncher and cattle inspector. When Neal Hart is called upon for gun-play in the movies, he is on familiar ground. He is an expert horseman, never permits any double to work for him no matter how hazardous the stunts he is called on to perform, and is a big, good-natured, slow-speaking he-man—the outdoor type of American manhood that American audiences love.

The picture, "Hell's Oasis," is scheduled for release on October 1, and will be distributed by the Independent Films Association of Chicago.

NEW IDEA BACK OF PINNACLE COMEDIES

Do you find pretty girls easy to look at?

Does your heart leap at the spectacle of a winsome little queen moving daintily along, all dolled up like a million dollars?

Or do you need to see a doctor about goat glands?

Well, ole top, that makes about sixty million of us in the United States alone, not to mention Canada and Bessarabia and the South Sea Islands and Sawtelle, Calif. What man does not thrill to the sight of a pretty woman?

But hold, mates! Pretty girls are not rare in this favored land. We can see them on every side, and sometimes front and rear. Feminine beauty is no novelty. Put the costumes—ah, there you have it!

What a difference just a few ribbons make!

O. W. Moore, general manager of Calumet Productions, Inc., maintains that the costume is the thing. Mr. Moore has discovered an entirely new method of achieving ultra-bizarre effects of feminine accoutrement. Calumet Productions will use this method in making a new line of attractions to be called Pinnacle Comedies.

Pinnacle Girls are to appear against a background of dainty, sparkling, clever comedy in twenty-six annual releases. Production has already been started at the Pinnacle Studios in Glendale, Calif., and distribution will be handled by the Independent Films Association of Chicago.

The first release of Pinnacle Comedies is slated for November 1.

PEERING AHEAD

This column is compiled, with the aid of our best wee-ja board ,as a forecast of what will appear in the I. F. A. News for August 14, 1930.

Billy Saal was a visitor at the London offices of the Independent Films Association this week, after a very successful sojourn at Monte Carlo. It is reported that Billy has purchased eleven theatres located in South France and will add them to the chain of the Southern Enterprises, Inc.

Neal Hart last week announced his donation of $250,000 to the fund being raised to provide a home for broken down branch managers thrown out of employment several years ago when Independent Films replaced the old branch exchange system with its modern clearing house method.

A suit for $400,000 has just been filed by the Rivoli Theatre, New York, against the Gotham distributors for Independent Films. The Rivoli, it seems, has been playing Pinnacle Comedies first run on Broadway, each comedy running three weeks. They sought to increase the run to four week but allege the distributors refused to allow the additional time on account of other bookings. The amount sued for represents the loss in actual business for the additional week, according to plaintiff's petition.

In an interview published in the New York Morning Telegraph, D. W. Griffith predicts for the coming year the most successful season the film industry has ever enjoyed. "Bigger productions than ever before are being made," said Mr. Griffith, "and they are enjoying longer runs." All of the D. W. Griffith Productions are handled by the Independent Films Association.

SQUIDGELUMS

SUNSHINE AL, of the Kansas City KAHN family, reports his lil' ole Crescent Film Co. as having done a whale of a summer business with the "Lost City." "And now," says Al, "Watch us knock 'em dead with the Neal Hart Independent Specials this Fall."

UTELEMUKAHNDOIT

In the New Orleans and Atlanta territory, the Neal Hart Specials will be distributed by Pearce Films, Inc. J. EUGENE PEARCE, general manager, affixed his signature last week to the documents that give him exclusive handling of "Hell's Oasis" and seven other big productions within his territory.

HURRAHFORTHESOLIDSOUTH

MAX WAINTROUB, manager of the Fontenelle Film Exchange, dropped in as an association visitor last week with his regular Omaha smile and left two days later with a whole flock of Chicago grins. Max is preparing for the new series of Pinnacle comedies to dove-tail with his very successful campaign of the "Hallroom Boys."

OHUWINTERGARDENMAX

ABE DRESNER wires that the coming Neal Hart Specials are causing more comment in Washington than the political chatter as to who's going to decorate the White House. The Exhibitors Film Exchange, which Abe pilots so successfully, has just released Roy Stewart in "The Lone Hand" and reports capacity bookings.

WHYNOTNEAL4PRESIDENT

"There will be nothing in the whole wide world like Pinnacle Comedies," says Eddy Eckels. "I know—I've seen some stills. Wait till you've glommed these! My prediction is that they will leap overnight into the grandest popularity ever enjoyed by any line of independent comedy release."

WHEREARETHOSESTILLSNOW?

DAVE WARNER felt so contented with the world in general after signing a year's contract for Pinnacle Productions, that he immediately went vacationing to the Maplewood Shore Club. Phil Selznick has joined the Warner Film Attractions forces and Dave is already warning the Cleveland exchanges to "watch out for Death Shot Phil."

WISHWECOULDVACATION?

PHIL GOLDSTONE of the Sterling, Omaha, blew in and glad-handed the help last Saturday. Used to know Ph. when he was selling World fillum in Nebrasky. Them was the happy days. Phil has stuck around Omaha so long all the film boys are beginning to know it as Goldstone, Nebr.

WHATKEEPSPHILINOMAHA?

It was raining in Chicago when DAVE MUNDSTUK, the w. k. chief of the Strand Features, reached our fair city from Detroit, but Dave was plenty dry and craved creme de menthe.

HARRY CAREY in BLUE STREAK M'COY"

Directed by Reeves Eason
Story by H. H. Van Loan

MANY of our western character players take themselves very seriously. They want to be sure that their " stuff " gets over. So some are deadly—and some are super-deadly—and some are simply awful.

Harry Carey's just human. And that's what people like. Says one exhibitor: " When I play Carey my audiences just sit there and grin and chuckle—until the villain pulls something rough—and then it's a real pleasure to see Mister Lazy Loafing Laughing Carey drop that easy nonchalance and get into action like ten tornadoes. And when the fight's over, does he stick out his chest? He does not! He goes to nursing his sore thumb that he pretty nearly busted on the other fellow's bean—just like a big human kid after a scrap in the high-school yard—it does me good to see him—he's so darn natural!

Play human Harry Carey in his latest, " BLUE STREAK McCOY "—it's the picture of a fighting terrier of a man who wouldn't let his boss's wife elope even if he had to bore a dozen men to keep her from it.

"I'll Make You Pay The Penalty!"

Blizzard! Arch fiend. Sworn enemy of humanity. Twisted soul and face of Satan. The most unforgetable character that ever dominated a motion picture!

In his brain seethed a plot to loot an entire city and wreak horrible vengeance on those he hated.

Lon Chaney, as Blizzard, contributes a performance that is literally astounding. And "The Penalty", telling a big story in an unusual way, is easily one of the finest pictures of the new season.

Public Notice and

Information has reached me that certain persons are and for some time have been endeavoring to induce Larry Semon to leave the employ of the Vitagraph Company of America and to engage in the production of motion pictures for some other company.

I wish to warn the motion picture trade in general and particularly those who make a practice of stealing motion picture stars from reputable producers that Larry Semon is at present under written contract with the Vitagraph Company which will not expire until December 1, 1924, unless before that date he completes thirty-six (36) motion pictures with the aid and assistance of the Vitagraph Company of America.

Under this contract Semon has agreed to devote his entire time and attention to the business of assisting in the production of these pictures for the Vitagraph Company of America, and he has expressly agreed that he will not, until the full completion of his contract, engage in similar work either in his own behalf or in behalf of any other person or corporation. Thus far only five of the 36 pictures have been produced.

The Vitagraph Company of America has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in exploiting its pictures of Semon and in popularizing Semon throughout the world and it does not propose to have its property stolen or appropriated either by the unscrupulous or by those who are ignorant of Semon's present obligations to the Vitagraph Company of America.

We shall, as we have in the past, protect our property in this contract and in the contracts of all of our stars by litigation, whenever necessary, and we will prosecute to the fullest extent of the law any or all firms, persons or corporations who, by offers of increased salary or other inducements, aid or encourage Semon to breach his existing contract with the Vitagraph Company of America.

YES, BOYS! IT'S REAL! NO CATCH! COME AND SEE US WHEN IN N. Y.

"BABE" KELLY KNOCKS A "HOME RUN"

GEE! WHAT A LANDSLIDE FOR THE FIVE WEEKS FREE SERVICE

Lord, folks, they came like a deluge!!!! Telegrams—Night letters—Letters!!!!

Just think! 1,250 applications in 3 days time. However, the trouble was:

MOST OF THEM CAME FROM NEARBY POINTS IN AND AROUND N. Y.

and although we appreciate these, and will live up to our promise with them, we want AN EXHIBITOR CUSTOMER IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES, whom we can depend upon to give us his MORAL SUPPORT. (Note: We said Moral and not FINANCIAL, which most of the other large concerns are demanding.)

If we are successful, and we are sure that we will be, in lining up FIVE THOUSAND EXHIBITORS, who will give us this MORAL support and use our product at "Live and let Live" rentals (after the FREE DEMONSTRATION), with NO DEPOSITS OR ADVANCE PAYMENTS. We will have "A BIG STICK" that will cause The Trust to "Jelly with fear" every time we get busy.

Please bear in mind these IMPORTANT FACTS:

We are not trying to SELL YOU ANYTHING for the present!!! There are NO STRINGS Attached to our proposition!!! It is bona-fide in every respect!!!

GIVING AWAY OUR SERVICE FOR A LIMITED PERIOD

With no obligations on your part to continue thereafter unless you so desire. . . . Pretty plain, isn't it? Sounds TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE. For example, here is what some of the boys wire in:

"Put the Rex in! Hurrah for Smiling Jim."—Conger, Rex, Cleburne, Tex.
"Saw your ad, and don't believe it, but put me down anyhow."—Andrews, Emporium, Pa.
"I'll bite, if no strings attached, put me down."—Bailey, Rialto, Akron, O.
"Gotchaboy, should be Sunshine instead of Smiling Jimmy."—McAvoy, Morgan, Auburn, N. Y.
"Hook me to the tail of your kite, here's luck, Jimmy."—Costello, Beverly, Brooklyn, N. Y.
"Don't sound right, but if you are sponsor must be O K."—Pollard, Guthrie, Okla.
"Welcome as a bottle of six per cent, lead me to it, Jimmy."—Hopper, Victory, Peotone, Ill.

And hundreds of others just like the above, most of them SCEPTICAL, but willing to give most anything a "Fling" in order to get away from oppression.

THE EXHIBITOR HAS A RIGHT TO BE SCEPTICAL

He has been browbeaten—Cheated—double crossed—Flimflammed out of deposits, and in fact there is no telling what he has had to undergo in order to "Get by." However, STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER, BOYS, if the Good Lord will give me strength, I am going to develop an organization composed of—

REAL HONEST TO GOODNESS FARSIGHTED EXHIBITORS with BUSINESS INSTINCTS, who will very shortly be in a position to "Wield the Big Stick" with a vengeance, and then: Let the "Money Grabbers," "Grafters" and "Petty larceny boys" BEWARE!!!!! And just as long as I have anything to do with, the exhibitors can rest assured that they will receive MORE THAN AN EVEN BREAK.

I'm having my inning NOW!!!! And I'm batting for the exhibitor!!!!!

HERE IT IS: Up to and including September 1, 1920, to any exhibitor who will wire or write me name of theatre and town. (Only one theatre in towns under 10,000) I will give:

FIVE WEEKS SERVICE OF TWO PICTURES EACH WEEK ABSOLUTELY FREE OF CHARGE AND WITH NO OBLIGATIONS TO CONTINUE THEREAFTER!!!!! PRETTY PLAIN, AIN'T IT??? THAT'S STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER AND ENOUGH!!!!

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THE TRADE IN GENERAL

We have our own studios.—Our own producing staff.—Our own laboratories.—A ONE HUNDRED PER CENT DISTRIBUTION SYSTEM with our own Branch Offices in 22 large cities. We have NO HIGH SALARIED STARS.—We don't want 'em—as we are going to spend our GOOD MONEY on production and not on "Rattle brained Stars" who flitter about like humming birds from bush to bush. And best of all WE HAVE OUR OWN WORKING CAPITAL and do not need to be financed in any way, shape or manner!!!

GET ON THE BAND WAGON NOW, MR. EXHIBITOR!!! YOU HAVE NOTHING TO LOSE AND EVERYTHING TO GAIN!!! OUR "CHARTER" CUSTOMERS WILL REAP ALL THE BENEFITS!!!!!

The score is TWO TO NOTHING against The Exhibitor!! but there are TWO MEN ON THE BAGS!!!!! with "BABE" Kelly at the bat!!!!!!

MITCHELL LEWIS

King Spruce

From the Novel by
HOLMAN F. DAY
Directed by ROY CLEMENTS

If his producers had given Mitchell Lewis regularly such stories as the powerful "King Spruce" and Rex Beach's "The Barrier" you would be paying more for his productions than you pay for any other male star. "King Spruce" puts Mitchell Lewis right where he belongs.

"King Spruce" is a story of the Big Outdoors. Full of the smell of the forests. Thrilling with the excitement of breaking a huge log-jam; smoky with the thrills of a vast forest fire. Aquiver with the leaping blood of battle. And never ignoring a tender, clean love story.

"BRIDE 13"

The serial supreme in fifteen episodes

Staged by RICHARD STANTON
Story by E. LLOYD SHELDON
Scenario by EDWARD SEDGWICK

To the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America:

In presenting to you "Bride 13", the first serial I have ever produced, I am conscious of a deep responsibility. I have not attempted to embark upon a policy of serial production without the most careful consideration of your needs, and the most painstaking preparations to insure you BIG PROFITS.

Before permitting a serial picture to bear my name I made doubly certain that the creation should reflect abundantly the experience, knowledge and success that have come to me as a producer of feature pictures of worldwide fame. "Bride 13" is therefore the fruit of earnest endeavor to provide the exhibitors with a serial that outclasses anything ever done before. It represents Fox Showmanship applied to Serial Production.

This picture was made on a very ambitious scale. An entire fleet of the United States warships and aircraft, with thousands of men, assisted in its making—a fact unique in film annals. I am confident that it will not only evoke the enthusiasm of serial fans but will convert to that class of picture a huge following of persons heretofore uninterested. "Bride 13" promises BIG MONEY for theatres of every description.

"Bride 13" is only the first of serials that will bear the name of William Fox. Another is in the making, the first episode of which will be released the week following the final episode of "BRIDE 13". Others will follow. Under my new policy one serial episode will be released every week in the year.

For sheer daredeviltry, for a startling succession of thrilling stunts and narrow escapes from death, "Bride 13" stands pre-eminent. There is no faking anywhere in the picture. Everything seen on the screen was actually performed by the players as called for in the script, and there is not a single incident that taxes the credulity of the most discriminating.

This picture is remarkable for the high speed with which it moves. From start to finish it progresses with an amazing dash, its interest never lags for a moment and there is surprise after surprise in each of its episodes. If ever there was suspense on the screen it is revealed in "BRIDE 13"

Nowhere is there a man, woman or child who does not delight in motion pictures of breath-taking adventures by sea. "Bride 13" is replete with such scenes, many of the episodes being devoted entirely to action on the water. Fights on submarines, on destroyers and yachts, battles with seaplanes and dirigibles and fearful encounters in the waves themselves are offered in large measure. Beautiful and unusual effects were obtained in the marshalling of the great fleet that helped in the making of the picture.

A magnificent tribute to the devotion and bravery of our womanhood is embodied in "Bride 13." Face to face with the hideous influence that aims to besmirch the hearths of the Nation, the Thirteenth Bride bids it defiance, though her death seems certain. Crystallized in this one sterling character are all the fine qualities of the good woman so beloved by Americans.

From the mansion of a millionaire to the hold of a pirate submarine, into the depths of an iron mine, in the torture chamber of a castle, in mid-air in a seaplane, in the desert in North Africa—such is the broad sweep of "Bride 13." Through forests and over streams, on land and on sea the serial carries the onlooker irresistibly forward to the final episode. The picture is an example of perfection in staging, the interiors representing studio art at its best and the exteriors displaying a complete grasp of the niceties and skill of first-class directing.

Now we are skimming over the sea on the deck of a submarine chaser; a minute later we are sailing high over Newport in a seaplane pursuing the villain in his automobile. Again, we creep through subterranean corridors with the hero, striving to evade the pirates; then we take part in a happy reunion on the deck of a palatial yacht. Later we witness the wreck of a schooner on Mediterranean shores and see the hapless brides seized by African tribesmen. Variety, speed and withal coherence—that characterizes "Bride 13."

Thanks to the Navy

To the Secretary, Officers and Men of the U. S. Navy:

It is to you that thanks are due for having made possible the filming of "Bride 13". Without your generous co-operation this serial could not have been presented to the exhibitors of this country.

I wish to assure you of my appreciation of your invaluable assistance. For months men, ships, seaplanes and dirigibles of the Atlantic Fleet were engaged in a great photoplay. Your part was not an easy one. "Bride 13" is not a war picture, as you know, but unfolds to the American people a clear and vital conception of the peacetime activities of our men afloat and ashore. Officers and men gave the limit of their energies to the task. The work of our Navy has been splendid and I feel that your efforts have been capably portrayed on the screen.

The best way to thank the Navy for its help was to make a good picture. I know "Bride 13" IS a good picture. Every citizen of this country must come away from a screening of the serial with a comfortable sense of the security of these shores while the United States Navy remains to see that right shall prevail over might.

Sincerely and appreciatively yours,

William Fox

"FICKLE WOMEN"

Critics All Proclaim It

"Great Attraction"

MOVING PICTURE WORLD, AUG. 21ST:
"David Butler plays the lead in a satisfying manner. The types are all good, and there is no overacting, no straining for effect. "FICKLE WOMEN" will probably be favorably received wherever shown."

MOTION PICTURE NEWS OF AUG. 21ST:
"David Butler is a real state rights attraction. David Butler's state right attraction proved to be one of our best summer productions on Broadway. . . . The state rights man who gets some or all of the remaining territory will make no mistake for he will have a picture that deserves, in every respect, the classification of an independent production."

WID'S SUNDAY, AUG. 15TH: "New star shines in very pleasing comedy-drama. . . . The star's acting gets right under the skin. . . . The fights are fine, well staged and so realistic that they thrill with every punch. . . . This one is certainly there with a big entertainment value. Most all of you will find "FICKLE WOMEN" a fine piece of entertainment property. The star creates a character quite out of the ordinary and makes it human and appealing down to the ground by his fine acting."

These Reviews prove that "FICKLE WOMEN" will stand the acid test

"'The Notorious Miss Lisle,' which stars Katherine MacDonald, is actually a sensible and plausible story of divorce, love, disgrace and intrigue. It is one scenario out of a hundred well knit, logical and convincing. It is flaring proof that unreality is not the essence of filmdom.

"Miss MacDonald has much more variety of expression than when she made her screen debut. Her classic is more plastic, and she is a warm blooded, impassioned emotional actress now."—New York Mail.

SPLENDID ACTING

"Katherine MacDonald seems to grow prettier with each photoplay. She could, it seems, just smile, or frown, or walk or sit—as she choose—before a camera for an hour and a half without even attempting to 'act' and gain the admiration of those who see her. But in 'The Notorious Miss Lisle,' presented at the Strand, the young woman with the blond hair and bewitching eyes is supplied with a story that holds the interest through each minute of the play. The story seemed to have been written just for her.

"A very pretty story, splendidly acted—and then, you have Miss MacDonald to look upon for ever so many minutes."—New York Tribune.

CAPABLE AND BEAUTIFUL

"Miss MacDonald is certainly a beautiful woman, and to her beauty may be added capability. Her direction is also good, and the technical execution of the picture is of high order. Altogether delightful."—New York Evening Post.

STORY SUSTAINS INTEREST

"Miss Katherine MacDonald exercises her striking beauty in 'The Notorious Miss Lisle' at the Strand. The story sustains the interest."—New York Sun and Herald.

LENDS IT DISTINCTION

"Katherine MacDonald lends distinction to 'The Notorious Miss Lisle,' headlining the Strand's attractions.

"Miss MacDonald plays the role of an English girl with her usual serenity and wears a gorgeous assortment of smart frocks."—New York American.

QUANTITY AND QUALITY!

THE greatest master of the English language living couldn't write advertisements that would continue to sell razor blades that wouldn't shave, soaps that wouldn't wash, or pencils that wouldn't write.

For it is absolutely true that every great and long successful business is based upon the fact that it is producing and selling an article of genuine merit! Which is particularly true of the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. whose success depends not upon its initial sales, but rather upon the volume of business that follows them. Its success is essentially based upon the quality of its posters,—their advertising quality,—their ticket selling quality.

The fact that there is an ever increasing tendency to use more and ever more RITCHEY posters is sure and positive evidence as to the quality and efficacy of our product.

Motion Picture News

VOL. XXII AUGUST 28, 1920 No. X

A Friendly Word

THE agreement reached last week between Mr. Zukor and the Exhibitors' Committee will be greeted with general satisfaction and considerable relief. It will clear the air.

In brief the agreement states that Famous Players-Lasky will not attempt to acquire more theatres except where a local situation demands such action, this action, however, to be submitted, first, to an Exhibitors' Committee.

We do not see why such a statement could not have been made a year ago by several producers. It would have saved considerable lost motion and a good deal of volcanic disturbance. It will even now however, accomplish immeasurable good if it brings about on all sides a new policy of utter frankness between the trade divisions of the field.

It is far from our mind to do a bit of professional scolding, and we hold no particular brief for the exhibitor when we say that considerably more frankness is needed if we are to acquire the stability so large an industry as this positively demands, for its continued healthful growth.

This is a highly important matter and we put it up straight and emphatically to every executive here in New York.

The one fundamental weakness of this business today is the general lack of confidence that exists within it.

THE exhibitor has lost confidence. Never before, since our connection with the business, has this fact been so evident. And when the buyer of the goods in any business loses confidence, that business, although it may be superficially prosperous, is not in a healthy way. It is unsound at its core.

The exhibitor today is afraid of his own shadow. He suspects everyone and everything. He sees a knife in the hand extended to him and a joker in every contract. Here and there he puts faith in an exchange man who has proven himself a genuine friend and faithful coadjutor, but he regards the head offices here in New York as fundamentally hostile to his interests.

This is all wrong; and we all know it is.

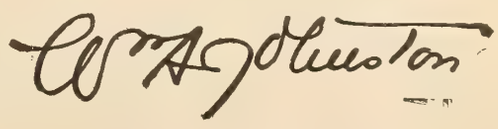
We have tried not to overstate the case. Perhaps we have. But we put the question flatly to the executive here: Have you got the confidence of the retailer body of the business? And if not, why not?

There are many reasons which you know better than we do. We can recite one.

It is just this matter of frankness.

Oceans of publicity are sent to the trade press, and most of it deals with matters of inconsequence or else camouflages subjects of importance. The exhibitor has come to respect the man who saws wood and says nothing—who is known by his deeds and not by his words.

But why not come out, when the big moves are made and lay the cards all face up on the table. Be frank, even brutallly frank. Explain why and what—even if it is known in advance that the move won't be a popular one



That's the way, the one and only way to build confidence.

This business is getting too big for trade secrecy. It is decidedly too big to lack a general spirit of confidence, especially upon the part of the man who stands between the producer and the public, and who is the producer's own cooperative business partner.

WE are out of the swaddling clothes and at a period in our industrial development where we can stand frankness—and benefit by it.

The trouble clouds of the coming year will gather only around the head of the man who fails to avail himself of the opportunities offered by the trade press. It is within the power of any man to state his case intelligently, to have it received with intelligence; to keep motives clear and actions on the record.

Pantages Open Theatre in Los Angeles

Pantage's De Luxe theatre, in Los Angeles, opened on August 16th, with a combined program of six acts of vaudeville and motion pictures. The new house seats 2,200. The program consisted of an overture from "Thanhauser," and Vitagraph's "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," followed by vaudeville. There is one matinee performance and two performances in the evenings. The general admission is forty cents, and lounges fifty cents, including war tax.

Pantages other Los Angeles house has adopted a policy of an hour and a half Follies show with fifty people. The remainder of the bill consists of a comedy, news weekly and feature. The opening bill included the Vitagraph feature, "Dollars and the Woman," starring Alice Joyce.

The number of Pantages houses is now sixty-six, in twenty-two states, and ten others are to be completed this year.

Louis B. Mayer en Route to New York

Louis B. Mayer, producer for Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin, left Los Angeles for New York Saturday, August 21st. Mr. Mayer has been at the coast since last fall, devoting himself entirely to the production of big pictures.

While there he produced four pictures starring Anita Stewart and five pictures starring Mildred Harris Chaplin. Mr. Mayer is planning a trip to Europe shortly after arriving in New York, but he does not intend to allow this trip to interefere with the production plans he has made for next season, which call for a minimum of twelve productions, four starring Miss Stewart, four starring Mrs. Chaplin, and four specials with all star casts.

Balaban and Katz Buy Out Ascher Interests

An important film deal was consummated this week when Balaban and Katz purchased the entire interest of Ascher Brothers in First National Exchange, Chicago, the ownership of which previously had been equally divided between the two firms. An amount said to be in excess of $200,000 changed hands in this transaction, whereby Balaban and Katz come into National prominence as among the foremost motion picture distributors, as well as controlling and operating one of Chicago's leading chains of houses. Balaban and Katz also own the Educational Film Exchange.

R. C. Seery will remain as general manager of the First National Chicago Exchange and no changes in the staff of that organization are expected.

Henry M. Hobart Resigns from International

Henry M. Hobart, who, for the past year has been vice-president and general manager of International Film Service Co., Inc., on Thursday, August 12th, resigned both positions and will sever his connection entirely with the Hearst organization. At the general offices of International it was stated that Mr. Hobart would take a long vacation before he announced his future plans. It is understood that he has been offered the presidency of a large manufacturing corporation, as well as responsible position with one of the leading film companies. He will make no definite decision regarding his future, however, until after he has had a good rest.

J. P. Bradley to Manage Strand at Nashville

J. P. Bradley has been appointed to the managership of the Strand theatre of Nashville, Tenn. Mr. Bradley was formerly connected with the following film corporations: World, Republic and Pathe Exchange, Inc. During Mr. Bradley's connections with these corporations, he won for himself an enviable reputation as a "live wire" film salesman.

Springfield Exhibitors Discuss Union Demands

Theatre managers from throughout Springfield, Mass., were in conference at the Broadway theatre in that city on August 14th to act on the demands of the Musicians' Union for an increase of 50 per cent. Although refusing to make a definite statement as to action taken, it was admitted that a counter proposal had been drawn up and submitted. Its details were not made public. Among those in attendance at the conference was Louis M. Sagel of New Haven, Conn., official representative of S. Z. Poli. How soon the union will take action on the proposal is a matter of conjecture as most of the officials are out of the city and not expected to return for several weeks. General impression conveyed in theatrical and musical circles is that the terms of the counter proposal are considerably less than is demanded by the union.

New Laboratory Incorporated in New York

The Claremont Film Laboratories, located in New York, was among the firms which filed papers of incorporation in New York state this week. The company gives its capitalization as $35,000, made up of 1,000 shares without par value. The directors are given as Joseph A. Golden and Amiel Alperstein of 815 Longacre Building and Walter E. Greene of 729 Seventh avenue.

The National American Film Corporation also incorporated in this state this week, the amount of capital stock being stated as $1,000. The directors are Lawrence M. Martin of 1974 University Heights, C. P. Schroetter and Frederick J. V. Wagner of 64 Wall street, New York. Other firms include the Hugenot Theatre Corporation, which while capitalized for a million dollars, begins business on $500, and names as its directors James L. Watson, and F. W. Nixon of 37 Wall street and George F. Jebbett of 120 Sherman avenue, New York; the Rhonie Amusement Company of Brooklyn, with a capitalization of $1,000, and having Henry and Max Oestreicher and Samuel Rhonheimer of Brooklyn as directors.

Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce Outing

The Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, New York, held its first outing at Bear Mountain on the Hudson, Thursday, August 12th. An excellent shore dinner was served followed at 2.30 p. m. by a well-balanced series of contests in which the ladies as well as the men were permitted to demonstrate their athletic prowess. Then followed a supper, and the festivities at Bear Mountain concluded with a dance. Three hundred took part in the outing.

Zukor's Solemn Promises Form Basis of Agreement

To Take Up Complaints with Exhibitor Body; Lynch Investigating

FURTHER details of the discussion and agreement entered into between Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the Committee of Nine, representing the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, show that a spirit of fairness and conciliation existed on both sides. In addition to the solemn promises made by Mr. Zukor to aid in smoothing over the exhibitor-producer trouble, S. A. Lynch has agreed to make an investigation of the complaints submitted to him, according to word received from Sydney Cohen, president of the exhibitor body.

The committee based its agreement upon the pledge which was emphatically reiterated by Mr. Zukor when he appeared before the committee at its Headquarters in the Biltmore Hotel. "We do not want theatres," said Mr. Zukor, "and will purchase or acquire a theatre only in those places where we are locked out of proportionate and just representation of our production to which we are entitled, and the fewer these cases are the better we shall be satisfied.

"I invite any exhibitor who believes he has a just grievance against this company to communicate directly with me. I pledge my word that . . . I will see to it that he is dealt with fairly, equitably and reasonably and that he will find he will receive from this company every encouragement to conduct his own business in his own way, free from any dictation, coercion or threat of competition."

A modification has now been made to the pledge, according to Mr. Cohen, who headed the committee. Mr. Zukor agrees to take up at once any complaint of any independent exhibitor with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for adjustment.

Affidavits and letters of complaint were read to Mr. Zukor and his associates, which had been received from exhibitors in New England and the South, and on August 24 S. A. Lynch agreed to make a personal investigation of these matters, and the committee is waiting to meet with A. S. Black, of New England.

The entire committee finally dispersed and left the continuation of the meeting with Mr. Lynch, Mr. Black and Mr. Zukor and the other manufacturers with a subcommittee consisting of Sydney S. Cohen, C. C. Griffin, E. T. Peter, C. L. O'Reilly and John T. Collins.

Every Executive Committee member of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America had been requested by wire to gather in his zone all complaints and any specific instances of abuses towards independent exhibitors in their territory, and to send same to the committee for submission to the conference.

Any complaints which any independent exhibitor may have, and which have not been brought to the committee's attention, if sent in will be taken up for adjustment at once. Exhibitors are urged to hasten these complaints so that the committee may complete its arrangements.

In addressing the members of the committee after the form of understanding and agreement had been signed, Mr. Zukor made it plain that the scope of his pledges to the organization extended far beyond the written word. "Under no circumstances," said Mr. Zukor, "will I countenance any unfairness in dealing with independent exhibitors. If any of my representatives or associates at any time resort to threats or intimidations or any other form of coercion, I will promise you I will not tolerate same. You must know I have the power to call them to account and I will not hesitate to do so. If any theatres have been obtained by my organization in any manner other than a fair legitimate sale, I want to know about it and I will personally see to it that any man thus aggrieved shall be restored to possession of his theatre.

"I will go further than this and say that I will throw the whole weight and whatever influence my organization and my associates may have in the industry, in cooperation with the national organization of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, against any man or set of men who resort to unfair competition with the independent exhibitor."

The committee was very frank with Mr. Zukor and told him plainly that they felt the exhibitors of the country were anxious to settle this controversy with his corporation in order that his product would receive the same consideration from the independent exhibitor as that of any other producer without fear that his corporation would later take undue advantage in competing in the territory with the man who was willing to buy product on its merits alone.

The committee said that it had information from various parts of the country that other producers and distributors were using as a sales argument for their production, the controversy which had arisen between the Famous Players corporation and the exhibitor organization, and they felt under the circumstances that the committee should endeavor to use its every effort to come to a speedy and satisfactory arrangement with his corporation, so that the coming year could be met by the exhibitors of the country in a different frame of mind than they are in at present.

Mr. Zukor pledged his personal word to the committee that both Mr. Lynch and Mr. Black would act as if they were a part of the original agreement. The committee was impressed with Mr. Zukor's statement and signed the agreement submitted, and depend upon Mr. Zukor to see that both of his associates live up to the letter and principle of same.

Mr. Zukor also promised to adjust all complaints against 1919-1920 contracts according to Mr. Cohen. In some of the territories where specific instances were submitted to the committee in reference to the controversy over the 1919-1920 contracts between Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the independent exhibitor, satisfactory adjustments have already been secured. Telegrams are reaching the committee here from all parts of the country commending the business-like way in which the agreements have been so far reached.

The committee has had several conferences with Mr. Lynch on matters of dispute in territories in the Southern states, and Mr. Lynch has authorized the statement to be made that under no circumstances will he endeavor to secure the film of any other manufacturer or producer other than Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and Realart, and there is no foundation for the current rumor that he intended to force a booking arrangement upon the exhibitors of the South.

Mr. Zukor emphatically stated to the committee and gave it as his personal pledge that if any exhibitor who has disposed of his theatre through coercion or through intimidation or by threats of any of his representatives or of his organization or his associates, he will immediately arrange for the return of his theatre to the exhibitor if the proof is submitted to the committee representing the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The committee is anxious to make the conditions for the ensuing year one that will give every producer of film a fair showing based entirely on the merit of the production and its box office value. This organization is neither a selling force nor an auxiliary to the selling force of any producing company, and it wants the country at large to know that it will indeed be delighted if it can complete the arrangements that have already been entered into between the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to settle the dispute which arose at the Cleveland convention, so that the exhibitor may have a complete choice not alone of this company's productions but of other companies who are willing to deal fairly and squarely with the members of this organization.

H. Kopler and F. P.-Lasky to Settle Controversy

The long-standing controversy over the ownership and control of the ten motion-picture theatres in St. Louis between the Famous Players-Lasky Missouri Corporation and the Harry Koplar interests will be decided out of court, it was announced this week by both parties.

A tentative offer was submitted to Koplar early this week and it is understood he will accept. The offer provides for the payment of $750,000 to Koplar for his interests in the circuit of film houses. Koplar refused to comment on the negotiations in progress, saying he would make no definite announcement until the deal was consummated.

T. C. Deitrich Resigns as Advertising Manager

The resignation of Theodore C. Deitrich as director of advertising and publicity of International Films Service Co., tendered more than six weeks ago, became effective last Saturday, August 14th. During this stay at International, Mr. Deitrich was responsible for the entire exploitation of International's two most successful productions, "Humoresque," now in its twelfth and final week at the Criterion theatre, New York, and "The World and His Wife," in addition to his other duties. Before leaving International, Mr. Deitrich was presented with a magnificent traveling bag, fully equipped by Robert G. Vignola.

Theatre Building May Be Regulated in New York

A movement has just been launched which will probably result in the introduction of a bill at the coming session of the New York legislature, that will have for its purpose the uniform regulation of motion picture theatres in course of erection, to the end that proprietors as well as patrons will be better protected from fire hazards. Since the office of state fire marshal was abolished, New York state has had no say whatever as to the way in which motion picture theatres should be constructed, the whole matter being left in the hands of local authorities, with the result that there can be no uniformity, and in the case of small villages, theatre owners have followed out their own ideas to a large extent.

Welcome Home Dinner Given Abe Carlos

AFTER eighteen months spent in Europe, where he has been blazing the trail for the reception of Fox Film Corporation's product, Abe Carlos, who for many years has been in the employ of William Fox as his foreign representative, returned to New York and Tuesday night, August 17th, was tendered a welcome-home dinner in the East Ball Room of Hotel Astor by more than one hundred of his friends, including William Fox, president; Winfield Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of Fox Film Corporation; Edward Earle, president, Nicholas Powers Company, Vivian Moses, publicity director Fox Film; Paul Cromlin, president Inter-Ocean Film; Charles Abrams, Paul Mooney, Nathan Hirsch, and other representative men of the motion picture industry including members of the press.

Gus Rogers, of counsel for Fox Film Corporation, presided as toastmaster and called upon several for after-dinner remarks, including William Fox. Mr. Fox in a brief speech paid one of the most impressive and heart-felt tributes to Mr. Carlos, as an employe, as a friend and as a man whom the entire industry admired for his straightforwardness and integrity in business and as a friend.

Charlie Chaplin Secure in Salt Lake City

Charlie Chaplin has sought refuge in Salt Lake City, Utah, from process servers and newspapermen. He says he will remain until he has sold his big picture, "The Kid," which his wife, Mildred Harris Chaplin, now suing for divorce in Los Angeles, seeks to restrain him from selling.

A certain Utah law now protects Charley from the process servers as long as he remains in the state. He is making his home in the Hotel Utah. Chaplin said that he had spent two years on "The Kid" and does not propose to lose it.

New Journal to Advance Motion Picture Art

A new magazine devoted to the motion picture has made its appearance in Boston. It is known as The Eighth Art, and is published by the Poetry-Drama Company. It is stated that it is neither a trade paper nor a fan magazine, but a quarterly publication devoted to the motion picture as a form of art. It contains articles and interviews concerning men who are working for the advance of the screen along artistic lines, and is described as a medium for screen betterment, but not for high brow uplift. Robert DeCamp Leland is the editor.

The theatre will continue to offer big feature photoplays, as in the past. There will be only two shows daily and seats will be reserved for all performances.

Zukor's Promises

The committee also called to see Samuel Goldwyn, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, where they were received with every courtesy and obtained the personal assurances of Mr. Goldwyn that the counsel for his company would meet with the counsel of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for the purpose of drawing up a more equitable film contract, and that his company would not use taxable music in compiling their cue sheets.

The same promise was made by Lewis J. Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures.

Exhibitors' State Organization Formed in New Orleans

Ten-Thousand Dollars Subscribed; Officers Elected; State Canvass Begun

By John M. Ott, New Orleans Correspondent

TEN thousand dollars subscribed in a few minutes, not verbally, but with signed checks and the actual cash, spoke more forcibly than words of the earnestness and firmness of more than a hundred "independent" motion picture theatre men who gathered in New Orleans last week and organized the Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners, a branch or affiliation of the Associated Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

An investigation of the "practices of film exchanges in view of the monopoly of certain exchanges, and other organizations" is to be conducted, and in it the aid of the department of justice has been promised by the New Orleans agent.

A. J. Bethancourt of Houma, La., was elected president. He attended the recent convention of the national organization and probably was better acquainted with the purpose of the larger body than any of the other owners. Other officers are L. A. Peatross, Morgan City, vice-president; Bert Korn, recording secretary; Charles Korn of Shreveport, treasurer. The executive board comprises, in addition to the president and vice-president, F. H. Davis, W. T. Tebault, and J. Brunet of New Orleans; Charles Gordon, J. D. Parramore of Monroe; J. C. Keller of Eunice; B. A. Labarre of Leesville; and E. C. Miler of Pennings. George W. Garic was appointed temporary executive secretary.

H. A. Blankenship, manager of the Ivy theatre, New Orleans, Fred J. Tiller of Lake Charles, connected with the Southern Amusement company, and "Turk" Carter, an employee of the Saenger Amusement company, were refused admittance to the organization. They filed their application and paid the requisite admission fee during the morning session of the first day and waited until the credentials committee voted. The decision of the committee was unanimously approved on the floor of the convention. The convention was held at the Grunewald hotel.

In making his report, Charles Gordon, chairman of the committee, said:

"We refuse to admit these men because of their direct affiliation with the Saenger Amusement company. In our opinion there is no room for argument on this fact. We tendered them back their fee of $5 which they refused to take."

J. H. Herman of the Pearce Films company and Burk Keath of the Happy Art theatre acted as secretaries, pending the election of regular officers. Mr. Bethancourt was chairman pro tem. The prime mover of the convention was Fred J. Harrington of Pittsburg, Pa., national organizer for the associated "independents" and personal representative of Sydney S. Cohen of New York, president. He was enroute to New York from an exhibitors' convention in Wisconsin.

H. W. Eastman, for nine years owner of the Olympia theatre, New Orleans, complained of what he styled the "cut-throat policy of an exhibitor affiliated with Saenger company." He said this "policy" was about to rob him of his means of livelihood.

Nine resolutions, in substance the same as those which have been adopted in half a dozen states where "independent" exhibitors have organized, were adopted.

Firm opposition to percentage booking, "as a deliberate step of the producing interests to gain possession of our theatres and put the independent exhibitor out of business with the inevitable poorer pictures" was declared.

Efforts of distributors to force advance payments on pictures were condemned, and members were pledged not to enter into contracts requiring full payment sooner than seven days before play-date.

Opposition to all forms of film censorship as "vicious in principle, wholly alien to the spirit and genuineness of our institutions" was expressed.

Denial to all members of the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers the use of the screen and the stage, "until they discontinue their present inequitable and unjust demands, * * * an ingratitude on their part, inasmuch as we have popularized their compositions by slides and the use of our stages," was pledged.

There are 220 motion picture theatre owners in Louisiana. More than 100 memberships were accepted at the convention. The state was zoned, and zone managers or representatives named, who are to gather information needed by the executive secretary. The secretary immediately started on a tour of the state, seeking a 100 per cent membership of theatre owners not affiliated with the interests to which the organization is opposed.

Perhaps, unfortunately, in some sections there is a popular idea that the organization was formed solely to combat efforts of the Saenger Amusement company. Such is not the case. It is true the Saenger Amusement company is one of the organizations of whose activities and business policy the organization does not approve, but there are others. The others were not mentioned in the daily papers because it so happened no action was taken in which they were mentioned, such as was the case when membership was refused the men mentioned previously because of their alleged affiliation with Saengers.

One of the hardest fights on the floor developed over the number of votes to be allowed members; whether it was to be one vote per membership or per theatre owned. Apparently working against his own interests, the representative of one firm which not only operates two theatres in New Orleans but also distributes films, was the hardest fighter against multiple voting and won his point after two hours' argument. Each member is allowed only one vote regardless of the number of theatres operated or owned.

Offices are to be opened in New Orleans.

All Ready for Atlantic City Convention

WITH a big attendance promised, everything is ready for the opening of the convention of the Exhibitors' League of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, which opens August 22nd at Atlantic City.

On the first day of the convention, the delegates will be registered and the first business session will open at 10 o'clock on August 23rd, with an address of welcome by Mayor Bader of Atlantic City. Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, will also speak. In the afternoon there will be a beach party and athletic contests and in the evening a Movie Ball at the Garden Pier.

The third and last day will open with the regular business session. A roller chair sightseeing tour is scheduled for the afternoon, and a shore dinner and cabaret in the evening. Jules E. Mastbaum, Adolph Zukor, William Fox, W. S. Hodkinson, Marcus Loew, Harry Schwalbe, Fred B. Warren and Senator Walker, are among those invited to address the convention on vital issues.

Lasky Field Force Presents Gift to Chief

Claud Saunders, exploitation manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was given a handsome solid gold cigarette case together with a framed letter signed by all the members of the field exploitation force upon his return to New York recently. The gift is a memento of the first anniversary of the establishment of the exploitation department under Mr. Saunders' direction, and is a token of the high esteem in which its general manager is held by all of the twenty-eight members of the field force.

Musicians' Strikes Unsettled in Two Cities

Wage Increase Accepted in Buffalo But Rest Period Controversy Keeps Fight Open

REPORTS from various centers affected by musicians' strikes show the opposing sides to be still at loggerheads over a settlement. In Buffalo the Theatre Managers Association have offered the strikers a 50 per cent increase. The musicians have accepted this, but refuse to close the controversy because the managers will not agree to their demands regarding playing and rest periods. In New Orleans, too, the musicians' union have presented demands which are regarded as exorbitant by the new local managers' organization of that city.

In Buffalo the working conditions demanded are fifty-minute playing periods and rest periods of forty minutes in the afternoon and seventy minutes in the evening. Under present conditions the musicians get one hour and forty minutes in rest periods during the day, but when the pictures are longer and the program requires it, they sometimes receive only one hour and thirty minutes.

The exhibitors declare that if they acceded to these demands they would be forced to regulate their programs to suit the musicians instead of their patrons. They also contend that in granting a 50 per cent wage boost they are forced to increase admission prices and in so doing cannot possibly give patrons a show that measures up in every way to the standard of present presentations.

The exhibitors have spoken their last word, according to Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, and if the musicians strike on September 1, there may be shows in Buffalo without music.

"The musicians will quit the picture houses September 1," said Harry C. Davis, secretary of the local musicians' association, "if the demands for longer rest periods are not granted."

Mr. Davis declared the musicians asked for a rest period of fifteen minutes after each playing period of fifty minutes. He said the men are now playing as long as eighty minutes in some cases, and this is too much of a strain upon them.

"The problem revolves greatly around conditions in Shea's Hippodrome," said the secretary. "The musicians there have been dissatisfied with their working hours for some time, and a number of them quit because of this."

According to Mr. Franklin, the musicians at his house play only three hours and forty minutes each day. They begin at 2.30 in the afternoon and stop at 5. During these hours they have forty minutes to rest, he says. At night they start at 7.30 and play until 11, with rest periods aggregating seventy minutes. Thus, he added, musicians work less than four hours a day, although they spend more time in the theatre.

Mr. Franklin denied that musicians ever worked for continuous periods of eighty minutes, as alleged by Mr. Davis. He said the time limit usually amounts to one hour or one hour and five minutes. "The longest stretch they ever worked, he declared, was one hour and ten minutes." He also denied that the difficulty was chiefly between the musicians and the Hippodrome. The demands of the musicians are equally disagreeable to other exhibitors, he said.

Managers of New Orleans theatres employing musicians and stage hands formed the United Theatrical Protective League last week when musicians presented wage demands they thought excessive.

Musicians' Mutual Protective Union of New Orleans asked for a wage boost of 40 per cent. The present weekly wage of sidemen in the orchestras of the Crescent and Palace is $40. The Orpheum and Tulane pay $41.25; the Strand, $40; Liberty, $35; and Trianon, $32. Organists have been getting $40, $45 and $50. Leaders have been getting $60.

The increase was considered exorbitant by the managers who claimed the wages paid already are greater than paid in other cities of similar situation. The increases amount to $16 or more a week.

Wiliam H. Gueringer, assistant manager of the Saenger Amusement company, said that the forty-one musicians of the Strand were paid a total of $9,000 a month and that they played a maximum of four hours a day and a minimum of two hours and fifty minutes, playing anywhere they please at other times.

Other union organizations of theatrical employees, it is expected, will present their demands within the next few days, based on a wage increase of 20 to 30 per cent.

Goldwyn at Minneapolis Banquet

Addresses Exhibitors on Questions of Advance Deposits and Theatre Acquisition

NORTHWEST exhibitors were guests of Manager Robert Cotton of the Minneapolis Goldwyn exchange, August 6, at an informal banquet given in honor of Samuel Goldwyn at the Assembly Room, Hotel Radisson, upon the arrival of the producer in the Twin Cities on his way to Culver City.

About seventy-five exhibitors, including a good percentage from outside the Twin Cities and practically all of the Minneapolis and St. Paul showmen, were in attendance, making the affair one of the largest exhibitor gatherings in this section in the past two years.

W. A. Gilles, manager of the Northern theatre, Minneapolis, and president of the Theatre Owners Protective League, acted as toastmaster, and in introducing Mr. Goldwyn asked the executive to answer two questions which he stated were of utmost importance to exhibitors of this section. The first question asked was, "What is the reason for the demanding of advance deposits?" and second, "Why are producers entering the exhibiting field, and are they going to continue to buy theatres?"

In replying to the first question Mr. Goldwyn stated that so far as Goldwyn was concerned the firm did not need the exhibitors' money in advance of delivery of "the goods" but added that the deposits were a protection to exhibitors as well as of great assistance to producers, who sought to make bigger and better pictures. Mr. Goldwyn stated that when exhibitors themselves were successful in getting unreliable and "fly-by-night" showmen from the field, they would automatically eliminate the need of any advance deposits, he believed.

Responding to Mr. Steffes' second question, Mr. Goldwyn stated that he believed producers would not have even thought of entering the exhibition field unless they were forced to do so because bodies of theatre men and various circuits gained monopolies in various locations, refused to pay producer-distributors a fair price for their products and stated that the market was overflowing with pictures and they were not in need of further attractions.

Mr. Goldwyn declared that the producers are forced to depend mainly upon first and second-run bookings to earn the money for which to pay for their negatives and prints; when first and second-runs could not be obtained in key cities at anything but an impossible rental then something had to be done to make their (the producers') future advancement, which, he said, was of utmost importance to the industry generally, possible; hence, exploiting their own pictures in their own theatres was the only solution to the complex problem. Mr. Goldwyn stated that when the producers were assured a fair price for their good pictures in the principal cities and reasonable support from the second and third-class cities he could see no reason for their continuance in the exhibition field.

Educational Managers Meet in New York

Exchange Heads at Divisional Conference Hear Plans for Future

MANAGERS of all of the eastern branches of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., assembled Friday, August 20th, at the Hotel Astor for the first divisional conference of that organization. This convention was called for the purpose of discussing the problems of the new distributing organization and to hear a number of important plans for the immediate future.

Among those attending the sessions are John J. Scully, manager of the Boston office; Stanley W. Hand, New Haven; D. J. Savage, Buffalo; John J. Iris, New York; C. S. Goodman, Philadelphia; J. H. Beaver, Washington; C. A. Lynch, Pittsburgh; H. R. Skirboll, Jack Skirboll and William Skirboll of Cleveland and Cincinnati, and Lee L. Goldberg of Louisville.

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., is presiding at the sessions. "In the few weeks that you have been in operation," he told the visiting managers, "you have justified our estimate of the demand for the best in short subjects and the unusual in two reel comedies. Though most of you have had time to do little more than 'hit the high spots' the contracts that you have turned in have reached a figure that would do credit to most of the feature distributors."

Mr. Hammons went ahead to cite the records of some of the exchanges outside the territory included in the present meeting, and the reports concerning those offices brought hearty applause. In his whole talk he impressed upon the representatives that just as Educational had compelled every product seeking its distribution to meet a high quality standard, that the selling organization must maintain a similar standard in selling on merit and affording exhibitors a distribution and exploitation service that should be distinctive.

Full explanation of the company's policies were made by the heads of the production, domestic sales, advertising and publicity and distribution departments and the branch managers were invited to ask questions and offer their own suggestions. All of the speakers, both department heads and territorial representatives, voiced the sentiment that though the organization was blazing the trail as an organization devoted to short subjects they would put the same energy, intelligence and enthusiasm behind the single reel as they would behind the super-feature.

The meeting comes to an end Saturday with a luncheon at the Astor at which there will be several distinguished speakers and a pre-view of all of the two reel comedies and specials in the vaults of Educational.

First of September, it was announced, sees Educational exchanges showing practically one hundred per cent activities. On that date the Atlanta office will open while Seattle, Louisville and several others will have their physical arrangements completed and will be able to work without handicaps.

Immediately after the convention, Henry Ginsberg, manager of the domestic sales department, leaves for an inspection of the exchanges now included in this convention. He will first visit New Orleans and Dallas where he will open branch offices, operation of which has awaited some pending arrangements.

Prizma Plans Important Film Innovation

PRIZMA has laid definite plans for the introduction of an innovation which is due to mark a highly important step forward in the evolution of the cinematographic art. To make this contemplated step a fact, Prizma addresses itself to the producers of the motion-picture industry, seriously, convinced that in their cooperation will be realized a photographic advance greater than any since the fade-out and double-exposure and destined to enhance immeasurably the entertaining and artistic values of the motion picture.

What Prizma proposes to do is this: To incorporate into feature-productions color effects which will emphasize the beauty of colorful settings and lend additional appeal to the "high spots" of the production. To do this Prizma has organized a new department to be known as the Commercial Department. Its representatives stand ready, it is announced, to "sit in" with any producer at his convenience and discuss with him the possibilities of interpolating color effects into any of his present or future productions, bringing to this conference all their technical knowledge of the enhancing value of color to the public's visual sense. For these suggestions, the producer will be in no way obligated. Prizma believes it is on the threshold of a new epoch in motion-picture photography and is anxious to confer with the producer to hasten its advent.

The preceding paragraphs contain the main gist of a statement made recently by Carroll H. Dunning, vice-president of Prizma, Inc., during the course of an interview with a NEWS representative. Tracing the rise of interest in the part that colors now play in motion-picture entertainment, Mr. Dunning said:

"The application of colored photography to feature productions is only another step forward in the evolution of the picture industry. Quite a while ago certain exhibitors introduced 'atmospheric color' in their program to attune the mind and sympathies of the audience to the theme of the feature. Early in 1919, Samuel Rothapfel secured from Prizma 'The Skyland,' a picture in colors of the haunts and costumes of the Blackfoot Indians, to serve as a prologue for the feature, "The Squaw Man." In June, 1919, Hugo Riesenfeld used Prizma's 'China' in conjunction with Nazimova's 'The Red Lantern' for atmospheric purposes. Since then progressive exhibitors, realizing the entertainment values of colors in the theatre, have been repeating the lead of Rothapfel and Riesenfeld.

"The producer, experimenting with his blacks and whites, has evolved the fade-out, double-exposure and 'vision' effects to augment the visual appeal of the picture. The possibilities of the blacks and whites are apparently being fast exhausted. Now Prizma approaches the producer with a proposition that opens up a new field of opportunity in the development of the photographic side of the photoplay. This proposition is a serious one, and we want the producer to approach it in a serious way. Prizma has spent $1,300,000 in perfecting its process. It is past the experimental stage. The proposition we have in mind is a practical one.

"Either I or Mr. William Kelly, technical adviser of Prizma, will 'sit-in' with any producer and discuss the matter. We will go over his present or his future productions, suggest those parts in the action which we believe would be enhanced by the incorporation of color effects and then await the producer's pleasure in the matter. If the producer decides on the color interpolation, we will send our cameraman to the studio or 'location,' who will shoot the require footage in colors and bring the scenes taken for treatment by the Prizma process. Thus colorful settings, gorgeous gowns, beautiful details otherwise lost in the blacks and whites, will be enhanced by being presented in all the glory of their original colors. Suppose, for example, the characters of Famine, War, Pestilence and Death in the 'Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse' were to appear garbed in a range of colors suitable to their parts, how much greater would be the force of the symbolism taught by the story."

Art titles in colors are also to be undertaken by the new Commercial Department, according to Mr. Dunning's announcement. These will be made direct from paintings, water-colors or colored poster designs.

His tragic death was a shock to Chicago film circles, where he has been known and liked for years, as one of the "white men" of the business.

The Illinois and Indiana rights for "The Common Level," featuring Edwin Breese and Claire Whitney, have been purchased by President Frank Zambrino of Unity Film Corporation. The Peerless theatre was also visited by the robbers, who held up Mrs. May Martin, the ticket seller, and Manager Henry Jaster, escaping with $125 in currency. At this theatre they also overlooked the bulk of the money on hand, $1,500, that was wrapped in a bit of paper.

Hal Hodes of Fox Film Corporation, was in Chicago this week exploiting "The White Moll," now running at the Boston on Madison Street and which gives Pearl White the popular serial star, her first opportunity to appear in an eight reel production.

Wabash avenue, the consideration being given as $290,000 for the term. It is expected that Goldwyn will get possession about November 1st, upon which date it is expected that remodeling of the building at a cost estimated at $200,000, will be completed. The quarters will have a floor space of 9,000 feet, and both exchange offices and film handling departments will be located there The structure will be known as the Goldwyn Building.

Work on the Balaban & Katz great loop theatre, the Ambassador, is making real progress and the street crowds this week watched, with interest, the installation of two of the largest steel girders ever put into a Chicago building. They are sixty feet long and each weighs sixty-seven tons. The walls of the Ambassador now are arising above the street level and workmen are swarming about the new structure.

He is expected to return to Chicago about September 1st.

Exploitation Man Sends Out Personal Messenger

"Exploit and Get Results" is the title line that heads a suggestion booklet that Hal Olver, exploitation man for F. P. Lasky of the Minneapolis exchange, is sending out to exhibitors in his territory.

The text of the booklet contains practical suggestions of what to do in putting a feature over with success.

The service is of course of most value to exhibitors in the smaller communities and Olver makes his suggestions with this class of house especially in mind.

Enter Tom Mix as Top Notch Star

IT is quite an upward step from riding a bronc behind a herd of steers for 'steen a month and chuck to the position of movie star of sufficient importance to command stellar place on the program of the world's largest theatre, all of which is a long way of saying that Tom Mix in "The Untamed" is to be the feature attraction next week at the Capitol theatre, New York.

The fact that a Mix picture is to have a showing in one of the Broadway picture palaces is an item of more than passing interest, signifying that the former cowboy has become not only a capable actor but also lending weight to the reports that have been coming in from the hinterland for some time, concerning the popularity of Mix and Mix pictures.

Mr. Rothapfel has the reputation of being a good judge of box office attractions and of always having an ear to the ground in the matter of estimating the trend of public movie opinion. When a Mix film goes into the Capitol it is to be taken as proof that the ex-cowpuncher has arrived.

York State Small Town Idea Listens Good

Dipson Theatrical Enterprises has announced an unusual method of deciding upon a booking policy for the Havena theatre, at Olean, New York. Beginning in September the theatre will give full months to the productions of various producing or distributing companies and will ask the public of Olean to express their preference by their attendance during the different months.

The first month in the schedule—September—will be given over to productions of Associated First National Pictures. Norma Talmadge in "A Daughter of Two Worlds" will open the campaign and will run during the first three days of the month. Other First National pictures will follow for the balance of the month when the features of another produce will be substituted.

The theatre is devoting considerable newspaper space to the advertising of the event with special emphasis being laid upon the producing company. The management feels that confidence in a producing company is a greater asset to a theatre than a star following and hopes to popularize brands so that future advertising can based upon the producing company rather than upon stars.

Hyman Exploitation Stunt Got the Dough

Details of the Campaign for "The World and His Wife" at the Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

WHEN Edward L. Hyman played "The World and His Wife" at the Mark Strand theatre, Brooklyn, he was not satisfied with the immense amount of publicity the picture had received in the Hearst newspapers, or with his own well directed efforts in display advertising, but decided on some specialties of his own origination that he figured would attract still larger audiences to the new Brooklyn playhouse for this engagement.

One of the first stunts which Mr. Hyman put over was an "Abie Kabibble" review written by Joe Hershfield, originator of this funny cartoon. Mr. Hershfield made it a point to visit the Strand on the opening Sunday, and his review, published in the New York Journal, caused endless comment.

To top off the excellent advance campaign, more publicity was obtained during the film's engagement through the personal appearance of Robert G. Vignola, the director of the picture; Alma Rubens, star of the production, and Montague Glass, who plays an important part in the story. These three individuals did not appear on the same evening. Mr. Vignola appeared on Tuesday evening, Mr. Glass on Thursday evening, and Miss Rubens on Saturday evening. This was the means of many of the patrons of the Strand coming to see the picture two and three times. Large crowds of admirers almost injured Miss Rubens on the night that she made her appearance, and a veritable panic ensued. The daily papers played up the appearance of the noted film folk at the Strand all through the week.

The most effective prologue that has ever been conceived by Mr. Hyman was used just prior to the presentation of "The World and His Wife." In this enterprise he had the help and co-operation of Mr. Vignola. There is a scene in the picture wherein several Spanish dancers are seen in a rendition of native Spanish dances as a part of a marriage celebration. Mr. Hyman arranged with Mr. Vignola for the use of two of the dancers who appeared in the film production for his prologue.

The specialty was opened by Walter Smith, singer of international reputation, who rendered "La Paloma" (an old Spanish favorite) as a bass solo. This was followed immediately by the two Spanish dancers in a castanet dance, and also a repetition of the dance that they perform in the film play. The entire number was staged in front of a specially painted drop, depicting a Spanish street scene faithfully and accurately. This novelty helped in creating the Spanish atmosphere prevalent throughout the entire story, and gave a touch of realism seldom acquired for its presentation. Spanish music and tunes were in profusion in the assembling of the music score.

The above mentioned campaign was supplemented with advertising in twenty-five other New York dailies, bill board displays, advance film trailers, and a personal letter was mailed to over five thousand patrons.

Needless to say, "The World and His Wife" played to unusually large business during its engagement at the Mark Strand. This is in itself remarkable, considering the fact that the opening Sunday and Monday of the week's engagement were the hottest days so far this year.

Chicago Theatre Puts Over Good Exploitation

Park Theatre Has Permanent Advertising Idea

A decorative and permanent lobby display can be made to play a part in the exploitation of current and coming attractions by a method devised by the management of the Park theatre at Franklin, Pa. The lobby decoration consists of four massive frames which hold pictures of four stars and each frame has an open panel at both the top and the bottom by which titles of pictures and date lines for showing can be inserted. Portraits of Constance and Norma Talmadge, Katherine MacDonald and Mildred Harris Chaplin are set permanently into the four frames. These four stars are the most popular quartet with the Park theatre audience and it is seldom that the theatre hasn't contracts for the appearance of each of them. The title of the picture as well as the dates are painted by hand to correspond to the coloring of the portraits. The title card is placed in the top panel above the portrait and underneath the dates of the engagements. The day prior to the opening of a production of any of the stars the date panel is taken out and a "tomorrow" sign substituted. Then when the production opens a "Today" card succeeds the "tomorrow." As soon as a production of one of the stars closes the title of the picture in which she appears that will next show at the theatre is immediately placed in the panel above her portrait with the dates underneath, and thus four boosters for the stars and their productions are continually working. None of the portraits are identified by the name of the stars, as it is the theory of the management that the name makes a greater impression.

Capitol Quintette Sings Selections from "Die Meistersinger"

As a vocal attraction on the Capitol bill this week, Wagner's quintette number from "Die Meistersinger" is being sung, with Athena Buckley as "Eva," Melanie Verbouwens as "Magdalene," Sudworth Frasier as "Walter," Le Roy Ruffield as "David" and Bertram Peacock as "Hans Sachs."

The stage setting is a black velvet drop with flood lightings from the wings.

The singers are costumed for their roles as in the original production of the opera. They render the number from the stage without attempt at acting the roles.

The number recommends itself both from the fact that it is well rendered and also from its musical beauty as a composition.

Barbee's Loop Uses First Lobby Display

The run of "The Revenge of Tarzan," at Barbee's Loop theatre, was made the occasion for a new departure at that house in the shape of a lobby display, in which the striking cut-outs are utilized.

The display, backed by a good amount of newspaper advertising, has proved a real puller and during the week ending August 7th Barbee's did its largest business, with the exception of opening week, and the picture has been booked for a second week and may run into a third. This is one more proof that lobby displays are useful.

Minature "Bill Harts" Hand Out Envelopes Filled with Sand

A touch of exploitation which aroused considerable interest and enthusiasm in the fashionable St. Louis residential district in which the Pershing theatre is located was carried out by Manager William Goldman in connection with his engagement of "Sand."

The first thing done was to dress up a number of boys in regular western cowboy fashion with spurs and boots, etc. Each of the miniature Bill Harts was given a knapsack containing a large quantity of small envelopes about two by three inches bearing this inscription:

The Wind and Rain Made It—
William S. Hart played it—
EVERYBODY will want to see it.

But the most important thing to this bit of exploitation was the fact that each of the small paper envelopes contained a small portion of sand and advised to visit the Pershing at the specified date. The "sand-bags" were distributed at the doors of all the residences in the entire district and were the subject of much favorable comment.

Because the envelopes were sealed, it was impossible to realize what was inside until an incision was made. As there was nothing in the inscription to indicate the contents of the paper, many persons believed that they were being presented with a bag of sugar. When they opened the sack they found out.

Koppel Takes Advantage of Picture's Title

Famous Barbee's Loop Theatre, Chicago Joins the Ranks of "Hokem" Exploitation Exponents

THE downtown section of Chicago, with its millions of passersby daily, has been a magnet that drew the attention and toilsome thought of exploitation directors like the proverbial candle does the moth. But the "loop" district was hedged about with so many legal restrictions and ordinances designed to keep aspiring press agents from plying their trade that the call of the ballyhoo was unknown.

It remained for Harry S. Lorch, divisional exploitation representative for the Chicago territory for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, to break into the restricted "loop" with an exploitation stunt for "Scratch My Back" which brought its message to thousands of people, stopped street traffic daily for an entire week, and still kept to the letter of the law in every respect.

"Scratch My Back" opened its first run in Chicago at Barbee's Loop theatre, the brand-new, beautiful down-town picture palace presided over by William Barbee and managed by Joseph Koppel. The unlimited possibilities for exploitation suggested by the title, "Scratch My Back," at once suggested to Mr. Lorch his very effective stunt. The cost of the stunt was a negligible matter in comparison to the amount of attention it attracted.

At exactly twelve o'clock noon, when the crowds in the "loop" are the biggest, a powerful touring car, drove into State street and parked against the curb. In a few minutes fully 3,000 persons had crowded around the car, packing the sidewalk, overflowing into the street and completely stopping traffic. In the back seat of the big automobile were a couple attired strangely enough to awaken even the blase interest of passing Chicagoans.

A beautiful masked woman, in evening dress, her gown extremely decollete in the back, and a good looking young man, attired in top hat, English walking suit, cane, gloves and everything, sat in the automobile. While the curious crowd looked them over carefully, the woman suddenly developed an exasperating itch just between her shoulder blades. From one side to the other she squirmed, vainly reaching back to scratch the irritated place.

Her escort failed to notice her embarrassment, being apparently interested solely in the passersby. Finally, in sheer desperation, the masked beauty nudged her companion, and indicated the cause of her distress. With a sly wink to the surrounding thousands, the young man carefully, painstakingly and energetically scratched that beautiful back, until with a sigh of relief and smile of thanks, the masked beauty settled back in comfort.

Then while the crowd voiced its appreciation, the young man held up to view a sign reading "Scratch My Back at Barbees' Loop theatre this week." And while the spectators were still laughing and reading the sign, the automobile moved slowly away to the next corner, where the same stunt was repeated. All through the "loop" daily for the entire week, this exploitation was carried out, with the entire approval of the city officials and the police department.

Another "Scratch My Back" Idea

A masked boy on a bicycle with a large sign across a square cardboard on his back which read "Scratch My Back" was one of the novelty stunts used to let Denverites know that "Scratch My Back" was the attraction at the America theatre.

Manager Talbot, of the America, and R. P. Allice, district exploitation manager for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, sent the boy riding through the busiest thoroughfare of Denver for three or four days before the showing of the picture.

The stunt excited all sorts of comment, especially when the masked boy would occasionally dismount and the urchins on the streets would dash towards him in mass formation to carry out the admonition printed across his back.

Another attention-getting stunt was the distribution among all the cigar stores, the cigar stands of hotels, pool-rooms, etc., of a match scratcher. It consisted of a portrait of Helene Chadwick in evening dress at the left of a square of cardboard about 8 by 10 inches, with a masculine hand scratching her back; across the top of the cardboard was printed in large letters, "Scratch My Back," while at the right was a small square of sandpaper with the admonition, "If bashful, scratch here" printed above it. The name of the theatre was printed in large white letters on a black background underneath.

A large cut-out figure of Miss Chadwick in evening dress and endeavoring to scratch her own back, taken from a 24-sheet poster, was mounted across the lobby of the America, over the box office.

All of this special exploitation, taken in conjunction with the regular newspaper advertising, heralds, letters to patrons, throwaways, etc., got "Scratch My Back" off to a capacity start, a business that was maintained at practically all performances throughout the engagement.

And this despite the heat, the musicians strike and the street car strike.

Describing the Capitol Ballet Number

THE usual ballet number at the Capitol theatre this week, is a duet by Mlle. Gambrelli and A. Oumansky, in which the art of dancing and pantomime are about balanced.

The stage setting provided by Artist Wenger is a futurist creation whose greatest value is a blending of colors brought out by indirect flood lighting.

Japanese lanterns are strung about the stage over the heads of the dancers.

Mlle. Gambrelli is costumed in the usual ballet dress and Mr. Oumansky appears in a white suit and a jester makeup. The selection used by the orchestra as an accompaniment is Kriesler's "Caprice Viennois."

Garfield to Celebrate Another Birthday

The Garfield theatre, one of Chicago's finest residential houses, will celebrate its eleventh birthday the week of August 30th. These yearly anniversary weeks have become a decided event with the patrons of the Garfield, a special program with many novelty stunts being arranged by Manager Charles H. Ryan.

Attractive Exterior for "The Idol Dancer"

The Victoria theatre, Philadelphia, whose enterprising manager, Edgar Wolf, is constantly on the alert for new exploitation angles, had a very attractive front during the showing of "The Idol Dancer," which cames to the theare after a week's run at the Stanley.

The Victoria has a broad step leading to the lobby, four steps up from the street. In the center of this space is the box office, from the sides of which run glass doors leading to the lobby. The whole theatre is rather wide, and the space utilized for the effect was the outside, the broad step and the sides of the building back to the doors.

The box office was camouflaged into a small log hut, with just enough space left for the ticket cage to show. It had a thatched roof and was a clever imition of a tropical hut. One wall, at the side, was a tropical scene, with palms, and so forth; on the other a painted hut. Running from these along the back, to the box office on both sides were cut-outs of the various figures in the picture in a solid row, which gave the impression of a crowd standing there and hid the view of the interior, at the same time giving a view of tropical activities.

A couple of framed one-sheets were also prominently placed and on either side of the steps the customary frames showed stills and gave the names of pictures on the bill.

Above the entrance the usual electric lights proclaimed the name of the theatre and displayed large cut-outs of the star,

"Mary's Attic" Invades Staid Philadelphia

Metropolitan Opera House Showing Accompanied by Strong Exploitation Campaign

THE invasion of staid Philadelphia by "Up in Mary's Attic," the engagement being at the Metropolitan Opera House, is being accomplished with considerable fire works in the way of exploitation.

One of the first things done was to tie up with the U. S. Navy. In the lobby stood various "join the navy" posters together with a model of a battleship that attracted everyone's attention. Among the advertised feats were stunts by "Sailor Jim White" who pulled a truck on which was a small house with a large attic, across Broad street in front of the house before every performnce, and who did various other strong man feats on the stage after the picture.

Before every performance a Navy band played in front of the house, drawing crowds every time.

Another stunt was worked with a Navy aeroplane, which carried one of the live bathing girls used to exploit the show, over the central part of the city and showered down passes which were good for free admissions for those who found them. This was repeated each day while the picture was shown.

Posters were scattered freely about the city and the lobby and papers carried signs such as:

You'll find only happiness "Up in Mary's Attic."

A song, "Up In Mary's Attic," was sung immediately after the showing of the picture, and the second time the chorus was sung the words were flashed on the screen for the audience to see.

And live bathing girls were provided, in a revue showing the evolution of the bathing suit from the last century to the present with its consequent dimunition. also in various songs and dances, and these were advertised freely through posters outside the theatre and through the press.

Along during the middle of the engagement something happened that added to the flood of publicity that the exploitation the picture has previously been given.

The Navy strong man was doing his scenery truck stunt with his teeth. The bathing girls, one-piece bathing suits and all, were peering from the "attic" windows when a few city officials paused to watch them.

The bathing beauties were in a jocular mood, and not conscious that these dignified and portly gentlemen were the high chief moguls of the town, used their choicest expressions—both facial and lingual—in an effort to "vamp" them.

The police heard of it at once, the Navy Yard shortly afterward, and then the newspapers were notified that Philadelphia would no longer tolerate such reckless invasions on the modesty of the staid old Quaker town. The Recruiting Station had to admit that they had not had such effective advertising in a long time, so its up to the diligence of the police to curb further advances on the part of scantily attired bathing queens especially when they are perched "Up In Mary's Attic."

Telephones Used Extensively by Prendergast

Manager Prendergast of the Odeon at Columbia, Mo., has found a new way of gaining the highest favor of the motion picture enthusiasts in his town. Besides sending out to several hundred patrons each week the program for the coming show, Prendergast has conceived of a new plan.

There are about 12,000 permanent residents in Columbia. Of these he figures at least 8,000 are ardent "movie fans." Well, it only takes about 450 people to fill the Odeon at each show, there being two shows each night, and the energetic manager works hard to see that there are a minimum of 800 paid admissions each night. Here's how he does it.

Telephone conditions at Columbia are in the same state that they were in the large cities before the war, in other words you don't have to give central the wrong number in order to get the party you want. So Prendergast has selected a list of about 200 telephone numbers of the best families in town—by best he means those with the largest number of children. Dividing the two hundred into six sections, he calls a section on the telephone each night and informs them of the name of the picture and asks them if there is any special request they care to make with reference to music.

Columbians flock to the Odeon every night and the trouble of calling them on the phone is very small as not more than 25 or 30 calls are made each day.

"Phone 'em and tell 'em what you have and the supply of tickets will run out before second show starts," he advised.

Pictorial Song Strand Specialty

ANOTHER film novelty sponsored by C. Sharp Minor, formerly of Los Angeles, is being presented at the Strand theatre this week.

In conjunction with the vocal rendition of "When You and I Were Young Maggie," by John Hart, baritone, a film which is a pictorial interpretation of the famous song is projected, so synchronized as to follow the sentiments expressed in the selection.

The picture is the second of its kind to be presented at the Strand, the first being one fitted for the orchestral rendition of the opera "William Tell."

The idea is, of course, an elaboration of the old time illustrated song which was a part of the bill in all of the first picture theatres and which declined in favor after a year or so of use.

Patterson Revamps "Brickbat" Into "Bouquet"

It is doubted if many exhibitors can appreciate the fact that "Every knock is a boost" as much as did W. C. Patterson, manager of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Georgia, especially when it is the method of presentation rather than the production being shown that got the knock. After the showing of "Married Life" Mr. Patterson received a letter from one of his patrons stating that he liked the picture but the drummer, by making silly and unnecessary noise deprived him of a great deal of entertainment but despite this, he claims he succeeded in getting a great deal of enjoyment out of it. Upon receiving this letter, Patterson had it duplicated and printed as part of the newspaper advertising on the picture with the remark that the drummer was temperamental and therefore he did not care to mention this to him although even at his best he could not spoil "Married Life." The worth of this newspaper advertising was shown by the fact that patrons of the Criterion, after the advertisement was printed inquired as to whether the drummer was on the job for present performances.

Jack Callicott's Novel "You Tell 'Em" Stunt

Los Angeles Showman Comes Through with Another Real Exploitation Idea

IN addition to the startling exhibitors with his ideas on prologues, Jack Callicott, the managing director of the Kenema theatre, Los Angeles, has come to light again with a brand of novel exploitation and free advertising he gets over, as well as volume of same.

Recently, the population of Los Angeles became interested in the slang expression, "you tell 'em." Everybody began to use the expression until it was as popular, or even more popular, than the old time slang, "I should worry." It got to be a regular habit with the public of Los Angeles.

And it was just about the time that the expression was reaching its height of popularity that Mr. Callicott hit on his novel and interesting plan of gaining more publicity for the Kenema theatre.

With the co-operation of Harry Grayson, sporting editor of the Evening Express, Mr. Callicott organized a contest under the name of the "You Tell 'Em." The Los Angeles public was invited to send in original "you tell 'ems" to the paper for entrance into the contest. Each day while the contest was under way, there were twenty tickets given away to the ten people sending in the best "you tell 'ems," two tickets to each winner.

The stunt made a hit with the public. The Evening Express began to experience a general rush of answers, which grew each day. At the first the intention of both the paper and Mr. Callicott had been to run the contest for only about three weeks, but at the end of that time the thing had become such a fad that it would have been almost an insane idea to discontinue it.

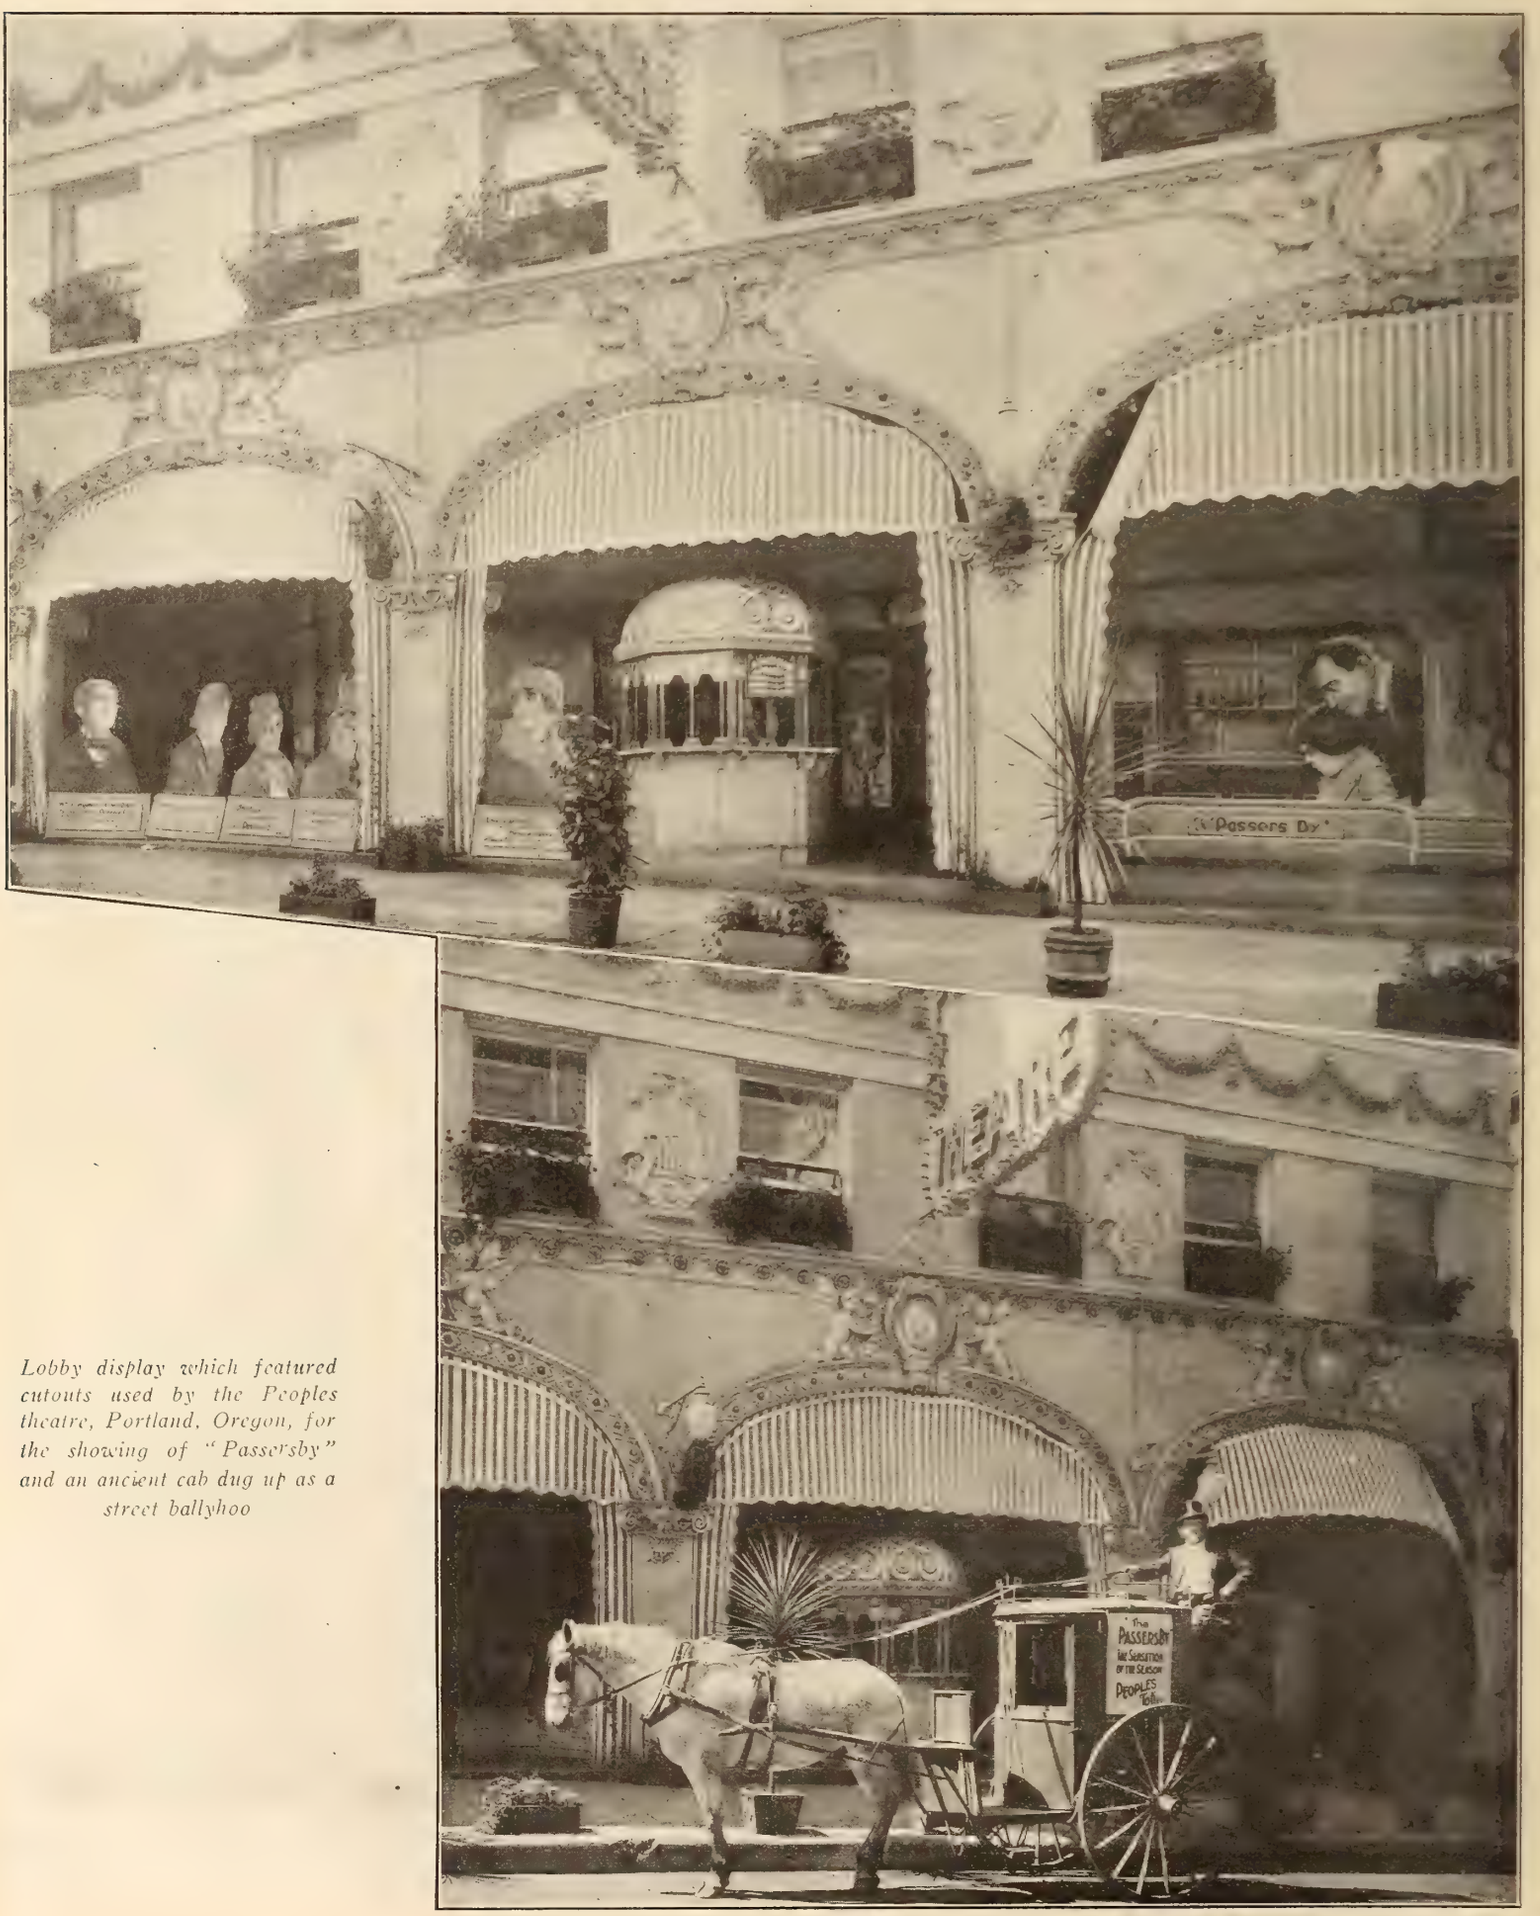
At the present time thousands of cards and letters are being received daily at the office of the Evening Express, as the theatre going public sends in its original ideas. Daily a special man has to be placed on the job to take care of the very immense mail which comes in to the paper, and that special man has his hands full at all times.

The contest is conducted on the sporting page each day. It has a two column space of about an average of ten to fifteen inches as a minimum, sometimes occupying almost half a page. Daily, besides the names of the winners and the publication of the winning "you tell 'ems," there is an article running from one hundred to five or six hundred words describing the contest, telling the public the nature of the bill at the Kenema for the current week, and often devoting more than a little space to the exploitation of some special star performing on the screen at that theatre. There have been, in connection with this contest, about half a dozen two column pictures of the Kenema performers reproduced on the sporting page of the paper.

Each week end the fifteen best answers received during the week are flashed on the screen at the Kenema and a special prize given to the writers of the best of these. And it can easily be seen that each week-end brings out quite a crowd who otherwise would not have dreamed of attending a picture show, or who would perhaps have visited some other theatre. The idea has paid for itself time and again, not alone in the business it has brought to the theatre but also by the general exploitation given the Kenema and the pictures being run there weekly.

For the benefit of other exhibitors over the country who may wish to organize a similar contest in their city, Mr. Callicott lists below a few of the answers sent in, in order to give them an idea as to the general nature of the contest. They are:

You tell 'em, CAIN, I'm not ABLE.



You tell 'em, CHINA TOWN, you've got the DOPE.

You tell 'em, BILL, to have a HART.

You tell 'em, BEER NOSE, you're WELL READ (red).

It is a certainty that if they can put over the idea as well as it was put over in Los Angeles, the only one who would have cause for regret would be the poor, over-worked "You Tell 'Em" editor.

Waycross, Ga., Has Live Wire Showman

Waycross, Ga., is a small town and has only two theatres both controlled by the Amusement Co., Inc., and managed by W. L. Bradenburg.

Usually in any town large or small where there is no competition the exploitation and often-times the quality of the attractions booked is something which doesn't bat in the 400 class.

However, Mr. Bradenburg is a live wire showman fully alive to the fact that he is selling something that his public doesn't have to have and in consequence it is necessary to produce the goods from every angle if he would reap the greatest financial harvest.

He books the best pictures obtainable, runs them when the prints are new, sometimes day and date with the big cities and spends more money on his exploitation that many exhibitors in small cities usually do for their films.

Mr. Bradenburg has already played "Don't Ever Marry," a picture that is still being used in the first run city houses. He purchased $45 worth of paper although he was to run the picture only two days. He opened his newspaper campaign a week before the first date of showing. The space he purchased in the newspaper would total more than most village show shops use in a year. He wrote his ads with care and he saw that his paper went up in plenty of time and on choice boards. He arranged a special musical score, selecting jazzy tunes with a fine eye for the comedy possibilities. He presented his show just the same way he would if he were managing a movie palace in a metropolis with the result that his initial expense enough to scare most small town exhibitors into calling in the sheriff, was only a drop in the bucket in comparison to his gross receipts which with all his overhead deducted left a substantial margin of net profit greater than most theatres of its kind earn in a week.

The moral of this story is that you can't run a theatre the same way as you would a grocery store and that exploitation and showmanship pay as well if not better in the "tanks" as it does in the cities.

Rivoli Ballet Number Artistic

"THE BOY AND THE BUTTERFLY" is the title under which the usual Rivoli theatre ballet number is being staged. Paul Oscard and Vera Meyers are the artists who present it.

A futurist stage setting showing a rural scene back drop with a woods cut-out a few feet in front of it is used as a backing for the number.

Miss Meyers dances on from left to be followed a few moments later by Mr. Oscard. The interpretation of the dance includes considerable pantomime suggestive of the chasing of an imaginary butterfly.

The dancers are attired in pretty costumes, Miss Meyers' being of the orthodox ballet dancer design, while Mr. Oscard wears a gaily colored suit suggestive of the old world peasant boy.

"Lost City" Float Horns in on Civic Parade

"The Lost City" opened at the Weller theatre, Zanesville, Ohio, on July 4th. That day the nation was celebrating in various ways and Zanesville celebrated with a civic parade of considerable dimensions.

So it was that the management of the Weller, Messrs. Brown and Crawley, decided that they had found an opportunity to gather some good publicity for their serial attraction and made a successful attempt to horn in on the parade with a "Lost City" float as shown on the opposite page.

The animals used in the "cages" were all cut-outs pasted on both sides of beaver board making a startling and effective display.

Stellings Goes with Howard and Wells

Ernest C. Stellings, old friend of the News readers by reason of the many exploitation stunts published which he has originated, has hooked up with Howard and Wells at Wilmington, N. C., after a considerable experience as the manager of the Grand theatre, Washington, Ind.

Mr. Stellings' first exploitation stunt on the new job was to get out a novelty post card for "A Widow by Proxy."

The card read "I'm representing Marguerite Clark in "A Widow by Proxy," followed by some appropriate boos for the offering.

The News wishes Mr. Stellings the best of luck in his new position.

This "Fooler" Fooled Even the Constable

Harrington Puts Over Good Stunt for "For the Soul of Rafael"

THERE is a very indignant and outraged constable in Cataraugus, New York, who will hang anyone by the name of "Rafael" to the nearest tree-top, if any personnage by that surname ever lights into the town. The reason reveals a tragic tale which goes to show to what extremes a simple stunt will lead a man to. It might be said at the outset that our constable is the victim of the stunt, while the rest of the town folks, including Dan Harrington, breezy proprietor of the Palace, are suppressing their laughter at the expense of the "Keeper of the Peace."

The fun began as follows: Dan Harrington, one sunny day last week, inserted a three-inch "ad" in the personal column of the Cataraugus Argus to the effect that he had lost a ring containing eight diamond stones, in the center of which was a ruby about ¼ inch in diameter. The "ad" went on to state that the ring was priceless to its owner due to a peculiar charm it possessed of bringing good fortune. The finder was promised a large cash reward.

This "ad" was carried on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday of last week A few small posters were printed by Harrington himself and stuck on to fences in prominent spots of the main road. Soon the farming folk of Cataraugus took notice, and a public inspection of men's and lady's fingers began in full swing. The notices sent out by Harrington through the mails only accentuated the excitement. The trouble began when Harrington bought some cheap rings looking like that described in the "ad," with a "ruby" as big as a house and had some friends of his from the neighboring town of Denton parade the streets in open daylight with the rings sparkling in the sun. Harrington then pulled his big card when he had a friend of his "tip off" the Constable that the finder of the diamond-studded ring was coming down the street. The Constable, as anxious for the reward as anyone, accosted the unconcerned possessor of the ring and immediately brought him to the "lock-up."

The prisoner, of course, made no protest and did not deny that the ring was imitation, but let matters get to a head till the local press featured the capture of the robber of the precious ring. The man gave his name as "Rafael" and claimed that the ring was a talisman "for the soul of rafael," bearing a charm for its possessor.

Naturally, there was no longer any doubt in the mind of the public that the ring was the one lost by Harrington, as it fitted the qualities described in the "ad" to a "t."

What was the consternation of the Constable and the town-folk in general to find, the next day, that the ring was worthless, and was by no means the one lost by Harrington. The prisoner, never having claimed that the ring was of genuine diamonds, was released, by which time the news spread that "For the Soul of Rafael" was the title of the new Clara Kimball Young picture at the Palace theatre, and that a ring of magic power was the feature of the picture.

Wintz's Jazz Exploitation Puts Over Comedy

Lobby display used for the showing of "Down on the Farm" by George Wintz, manager of the Wick opera house, Kittany, Pa. Full details of Mr. Wintz's exploitation campaign on the opposite page

Fully Equipped Farm Yard as Exploitation

Still another record of what a wonderful exploitation vehicle "Down on the Farm" has proven for live wire exhibitors is to be found in a recital of the stunts which George E. Wintz, manager of the Wick opera house, Kittanning, Pa., put over in connection with his showing of the feature.

He actually brought a real live, honest-to-goodness farm to the front of his theatre, and there left the pigs, dogs, chickens, rabbits and lots of other animals roam about the enclosure to their heart's content. In keeping with this, he also had his ushers and orchestra dolled up in farmer costumes and everything about his show was in keeping with the occasion.

The exploitation drew people like candy does flies. They didn't simply look, they hung around a short while, and then they got "that impulse" to see what was inside.

Soriero Grabs Piece of Ponzi Publicity

Thomas D. Soriero, managing director of the Strand theatre, Lowell, Mass., has an exploitation penchant which is little short of genius. He can think of more schemes to pull down free newspaper space than some exhibitors can to produce alibis that there is no money in the picture business. No better example of Mr. Soriero's ingenuity in obtaining publicity can be given that to relate how he horned in on the space that has been devoted to the "Get-Rich-Quick" Ponzi of Boston.

Mr. Soriero interested himself in the operations of Ponzi and when the Federal investigations began he was in the thick of the giving evidence crowd with attendant personal publicity.

In this case the advertising probably did not do the Strand or its attractions any great good but it kept Mr. Soriero in practice. We are not fully informed just how much Mr. Soriero was interested in the Boston wizard's schemes. If it was a matter of dollars and cents, which we doubt, he has our condolences.

"Bedouin Love Song" Is Vocal Number at Capitol

ONE of the vocal numbers at the Capitol theatre this week is the rendition of "Bedouin Love Song" by Wilfred Glenn, baritone.

The artist is attired in the costume of an Arabian sheik and sings before canvas showing a desert scene at night. A star twinkles in the sky and the painted desert stretches away in perspective for miles. The stage is dimly lighted to carry out the night effect of the canvas.

The number has no connection with any other part of the bill and is not intended as atmosphere, but it would make an excellent prologue number for a picture having an Arabian locale.

As a composition the "Bedouin Love Song" is meritorious.. It is the work of Pinsuti and a standard number.

New Traffic Rule Used Effectively in Exploitation Stunt

When Manager John Evins, of the Odeon theatre, in Savannah, booked "Scratch My Back," he had no idea that the (more or less) venerable City Fathers were going to hand him a corking ready-made exploitation stunt. But they did.

It being an unusually hot season, they disliked the bother of thinking up anything to work on, so they decided to amuse themselves with something simple. They "reorganized" the city's traffic system, making some freakish rules about "Don't Park" signs.

Woe and gloom hung the city with a pall of black—but there are always a hundred people who have a cheerful disregard to brand-new rules, to the scant dozen who gloomily observe them. So autos continued to be parked in all sorts of weird places.

And then Mr. Evins' scheme was all set, with the aid of Mr. R. C. Gary, Goldwyn Exploitation Manager for the southeastern territory. Twenty-five hundred bright yellow cards, 9½x5½ were printed in heavy, "box-car" letters—one side reading "No Parking Here," and having a most fearsome aspect to the careless "parker." But when turned over, the card temporized with "Unless You Come to See 'Scratch My Back'." The "stunt" made quite a hit.

Five thousand "banners" of thin yellow paper, carrying just the line, in heavy black letters, "Scratch My Back," were distributed all over town, and created a great deal of interest in the picture.

New Tie-up in Treasure Hunt Exploitation

Sprague Links His Exploitation With Civil War Buried Gold Legend

MANY of the most remarkable exploitation stunts have been planned and worked by the manager of theatres in the smaller towns; therefore it is not astonishing that one of the most ingenius stunts recently attempted should be contributed by an exhibitor in Sarcoxie, Mo. He is J. J. Sprague, manager of the Star theatre in Sarcoxie. The stunt is a "burried treasure search" employed in connection with Mr. Sprague's campaign for "Pirate Gold," the ten-episode Pathe serial.

Ever since the Civil War days the inhabitants of Sarcoxie have kept in circulation a story of buried treasure. It is a true tale and one of the natives, now an old man, has made repeated attempts to locate a chest of money buried on his farm by two brothers in 1860 to save it from a band of "bushwhackers." Mr. Sprague was, of course, acquainted with the tale and he was quick to seize upon it to work up enthusiasm for "Pirate Gold," which is a romance dealing with buried treasure and in many ways parallels the Sarcoxie legend.

Sprague first got a statement from the man credited with knowing the general location of the treasure and an account of his attempts to unearth it. The showman then organized a searching party of about 35 boys and 40 girls. This party is to go in search, in accordance with "eleven sealed orders," for a map, which, when found, will start them on an adventure of exciting incident in the town and a cave nearby. The events will lead them further and start them digging on the spot where the "Old Civil War Treasure" is supposed to have been buried.

They are certain of finding a box containing a gold nugget which has been on exhibition in the town for sometime. In addition the box will contain some money and a season ticket to the Star theatre. It will be a three day search commencing August 12th. The opening episode of "Pirate Gold" is to be shown at the Star on September 4th.

In addition to the novelty of the stunt, there is the possibility that the original Sarcoxie treasure will be unearthed. These features have made strong appeal to the people of the town and the wonderful enthusiasm worked up by Mr. Sprague's idea is reflected in the amount of newspaper space he is getting in every issue of the local papers. His stunt has already created such widespread interest in the serial that the manager writes that he "does not think he will have to use any big posters to get out a theatre full for the showing of the first episode." The story of the "Civil War Treasure" as told him, states that two brothers were traveling through Sarcoxie in 1860 with their entire worldly possession, $5,000, in gold. Their wealth became known to a band of "bushwhackers" and the brothers buried their gold and hurried toward Texas. Years later a man returned to Sarcoxie with a map he claimed was given him by one of the brothers, but, after one attempt at locating the gold, he departed. It is firmly believed that the $5,000 is still in the ground in the original hiding place. It is a strange coincidence that the details of this story resemble in many ways the plot of "Pirate Gold."

Premier Will Release Three Comedy Series

Premier Productions, Inc., has a company formed by Claire Woolwine, former assistant district attorney of Los Angeles, Alonzo L. The new organization plan to make pictures at a studio at Long Beach but no announcement is made respecting directors, players or writers.

Walter Hall Finishes Script for Artclass

Walter Richard Hall, a well-known writer of screen adaptations, has completed the screen version of Lillian Friedland's original story, "The Unfair Sex," which Artclass Pictures will place into immediate production under the direction of John Joseph Harvey.

The plot of "The Unfair Sex" is said to be something entirely original in the way of screen stories. A large array of wild animals, now in the Artclass Zoo, will be used in the vivid African jungle scenes, anything of a like nature never before attempted in a screen drama. The production will be staged at the Artclass Studios in Yonkers, where the work of building the massive sets required by the story are under construction under the supervision of John Holbrook.

Carmel Myers Returns in "Folly's Trail"

Carmel Myers, the latest Universal star, makes her return to the screen in a production under the direction of that able director, Rollin Sturgeon. It is titled "In Folly's Trail." It was written by Katherine Leiser Robbins and originally appeared in Snappy Stories. Miss Myers will be remembered for the part she took in the musical comedy, "The Magic Melody," which had quite a run on Broadway last season.

Proving that she could be just as successful on the legitimate stage, and acquiring many new dramatic tricks useful to her art, she has returned to her first love—the screen.

Michigan Co. Has First Nat'l Sub-franchise

Announcement is made by W. S. Butterfield, president of the Bijou Theatrical Enterprises Co. of Michigan, that a sub-franchise in Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has been secured by that company for the Regent Theatre, the newest theatre in Flint, seating 1,300. The announcement discloses the fact that the company has for the past six months kept tabulations of the drawing power of every picture run in all of its houses, which comprises the biggest chain of theatres in Michigan, for the purpose of determining the booking policies for the various houses during the coming season.

"Pictures obtained through First National have been our best money makers," says the statement issued by Jack Prescott, manager of the Regent. "They have given the best satisfaction to our patrons."

Live News From The Producers

Exploitation Staff Confers

Mayflower Managers Swap Ideas and Plan in Five-Day Meeting

PREPARED to give exhibitors a new and highly practical form of exploitation service as the result of plans formulated at a five-day conference, the divisional heads of Mayflower's field exploitation force left New York early this week for their respective territories. According to John W. McKay, general manager of the producing organization, the daily sessions proved productive of several promising plans for a more thorough and complete method of producer-exhibitor co-operation.

Several hours of each daily session were devoted to the mapping out of a comprehensive campaign for Mayflower's Fall and Winter offerings which include Allan Dwan's "In the Heart of a Fool," "The Scoffer" and "The Sin of Martha Queed"; R. A. Walsh's second independent production as yet unnamed; and George Loane Tucker's "Ladies Must Live". That much may be expected from the campaigns outlined at the conference is attributed to the fact that they represent not the ideas of one man, but the welded ideas and experiences of a group of trained specialists.

In returning to the field, Mayflower's exploitation representatives carry with them a definite plan for the exploitation of each production. A wealth of unusual publicity devices evolved at the conference backed by the personal co-operation of expert showmen will, during the coming year, give to exhibitors a promotional service of unusual scope and practicability, declared General Manager McKay.

Awaiting British Authors

Well-Known Writers Will Study Production Methods in the West

IN order to study the technique of the screen on the home-ground and to write original stories for Paramount, some of Great Britain's most noted authors will soon be in Los Angeles, according to an announcement made in Hollywood by Jesse L. Lasky, First Vice-President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has just returned from abroad.

"Among those who are definitely scheduled to come to California soon," said Mr. Lasky, "are Edward Knoblock, Arnold Bennett, Henry Arthur Jones and Compton MacKenzie.

"They will write original stories for Paramount pictures and study carefully the technique of the screen because it is now apparent that the motion picture must have a literature of its own and this fact is now recognized by the foremost writers of the world as well as by the producers.

"This means, of course, that despite the fact that conditions are good in England, France and elsewhere for picture production, and that it will be necessary to produce there and in the East where our own studios in Long Island City are to be ready next month for capacity work, there is no question but that California will continue to be the film capital of the world for many years to come. My present reason for coming West is to arrange for the biggest season in the history of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. I may state that at the Lasky studio from twelve to fifteen directors will be working continuously here from September through the winter. Our policy is definitely fewer and better pictures—but whereas in the past one director might turn out eight or ten pictures a year, it now requires three directors to accomplish the same result, owing to the greater care and longer time required to make the kind of pictures that Paramount has adopted as its standard."

Robertson-Cole Sells Summer Pictures

The "Snow Pictures Drive" instituted recently by the Robertson-Cole selling force has borne good fruit, according to the branch managers' reports which have thus far reached the home office. The "drive" was evolved for the purpose of furnishing the exhibitors with summer-showing subjects which would have a tendency to keep audiences cool.

Robertson-Cole, possessing three five-reel features, "The Bottom of the World," "Man's Desire" and "The Mints of Hell," which came under the category of "snow pictures" because of their snow and ice scenes, felt that the exhibitor on the lookout for service designed to please as well as entertain audiences would be only too glad to show these pictures during the heat of summer.

Synchronized Novelties Being Prepared

The Beverly Studios, Inc., of Los Angeles, are preparing to make additional pictorial overtures and film-synchronizing novelties under the direction of Louis Chaudet, who is responsible for the making of the William Tell subject, recently shown at the Strand Theatre, New York. Correct timing of the film is to be worked out in advance on future productions and in making a list of the musical compositions synchronized to films those that are best suited for action and photographic effects are being listed. Considerable footage has been taken by two other companies in Los Angeles for similar musical novelties.

Metro Contracts with Wyndham Standing

Metro's list of featured players has been augmented by a notable acquisition. Wyndham Standing, well known star of the legitimate stage, whose work also is known to picture fans, has signed a contract under which he will appear exclusively in Metro productions for a term of years.

Mr. Standing is at present playing the leading male role in Viola Dana's new picture, "Blackmail." Dallas Fitzgerald is directing.

Skinner in "Kismet" on Screen

Film to Mark Final Appearance of Star in Famous Role

OTIS SKINNER, America's celebrated romantic actor, will never again be seen in the leading role of "Kismet" after his appearance as Hajj, the beggar of Bagdad, in the screen version of the play, now being filmed at the Robertson-Cole studios in California under the personal direction of Louis J. Gasnier. Mr. Skinner himself has made declaration to this effect.

This authentic statement by Mr. Skinner should be pregnant with meaning to the up-to-date exhibitor who is always on the lookout for important developments in the motion picture world, says Robertson-Cole. Mr. Skinner's assertion means that the screen version of the noted play, will be the last and only opportunity the American public will have of seeing the actor in the greatest success of his career.

Robertson-Cole, knowing these things, and fully sensing the importance of Mr. Skinner's decision and its undoubted influence on increasing the box office attraction of "Kismet" in pictures claims that it is leaving no stone unturned to make the screen version of the play a performance worthy of America's leading romantic actor and one that will justly immortalize both the player and the play.

Elinor Fair as "Marsinah" and Otis Skinner as "Hajj" in "Kismet," a forthcoming Robertson-Cole special

As on the stage, the action in the screen version of "Kismet" covers but a single day. But a day in which there is crowded a series of incidents that cover the whole range of human emotions and which is as rich and diversified in color as the Magic Carpet itself. Mr. Skinner, as Hajj, the beggar, who asks for alms in the name of Allah at the door of the Mosque of Carpenters, in that day, between sunrise and snnset, rises from poverty to affluence and travels a distance on the road of adventure rarely achieved by some in an entire lifetime.

And all of this action takes place within the city gates of Bagdad While there are many interior scenes most of the gripping action takes place in the streets and squares of the city and this entailed the building of a new Bagdad on the slopes of Hollywood. A big order, the exhibitor will say, but Robertson-Cole, determined to do justice to the production, saw to it that the city was fully reproduced, and today the towers and minarets of the Oriental city rear their crests against the blue of the California skyline.

More than one thousand carpenters, electricians, plasterers and decorators were used in the construction of the town, from plans and drawings dug up out of old books and manuscripts and from a close study of the ancient architectural landmarks of the modern city. The city proper has been constructed on the lot of the new Robertson-Cole studio; the interiors of the sumptuous palaces and harems are being built in the Haworth studios.

Regarding the enormous cost of the lavish settings used in "Kismet," Mr. Gasnier, the director, said: "It would be far more economical to take the entire cast to the Orient to film any of the big scenes, but for the nigger in the woodpile—the Bagdad of today is not the Bagdad of Edward Knoblock's story, hence the strange anomaly of getting greater realism with specially constructed sets."

Bacon-Packer Studios Bought by Levey

ANNOUNCEMENT comes this week that the Harry Levey Service Corporation of New York has bought outright the Bacon-Backer studios at No. 230-232 West Thirty-eighth street, which, it was announced two weeks ago, that the company had merely leased. The change in Mr. Levey's plans, and the decision of the company to own this property, comes as a result of his belief that with property that actually belongs to the company, he can make the most effective and extensive alterations for the purpose of producing the best in the way of industrial educational motion pictures, in which the company specializes.

Added to this is the fact that the new $4,000,000 post office, for which the deal was put through by A. E. Lefcourt, president of the Pioneer Film Corp., is to be directly opposite the Levey studios, increasing production and shipping facilities to a great extent.

Flynn Will Start Fox Picture Soon

Emmet J. Flynn has completed the casting of "A Yankee In King Arthur's Court" and the photoplay version of Mark Twain's classic satire on mediæval times will shortly be put into production at the Fox Hollywood studios.

Walsh Strives to Finish Fox Picture

George Walsh is working at top speed on "Dynamite Allen," which will probably be his last production for Fox. Walsh's contract expires the first week in September, so the time limit within which the picture must be completed is decidedly short.

Henry M. Berman, general manager of Universal Exchanges.

Farrar Picture Is Strong Drama

"The Riddle: Woman" Is Strong Triangle Play

GERALDINE FARRAR'S latest picture, "The Riddle: Woman," the first Associated Exhibitors production scheduled for release through Pathe on October 3, is said to present to the public in picture form one of the strongest and strangest triangular dramas ever written. It is the story of three women who have fallen one by one into the artful toils of a professional "handsome man;" how the second woman saved the first, and how the first woman saves the third from the machinations of this blackguard makes a three-ply plot of unusual interest. In the stage play, long an attraction on Broadway, Madama Bertha Kalisch scored a great success.

Miss Farrar in the screen version is described as touching in her early disillusionment and despair, glorious under the sun of happy wedded life, and magnificent in her anger when the shadow of her youth falls across her threshhold. Montagu Love, as a broad-minded, great-hearted young man; and William Carleton as Count Helsingor, the attractive and unscrupulous villain, are both strong masculine types. Adele Blood, as the common-sensible young lady, who was not so sensible after all, is well cast for the tragic figure of Kristine. And flower-like Madge Bellamy, as Marie, is said to be a delight to the eye.

Albert Payson Terhune, author of "Stories of Super-Women," and a student of all things feminine, has emphasized the fact that one must not go to see "The Riddle: Woman" in the childlike belief that the riddle: woman is solved by the author. "He does not attempt to vivisect his three lovable and logical feminine souls. Only a very presumptuous or a very inexperienced man enters into that labyrinth called the Mind of Woman. A few have tried it, and have stumbled out again more bewildered than when they went in. They tell of conventional, landscaped vistas; of stretches of wild, natural loveliness; of barren wastes; of fastnesses which they could not penetrate; of sacred gardens which they dared not enter; of sweet and poison flowers; of dumb and singing birds; of creatures blinding, beautiful and horribly repellant."

Edward Jose, director of "The Riddle: Woman," gave the subject an intensive, researchful study. He has introduced a little prologue—an artist's studio about the year A. D. 1515. In it a venerable man, gives the last delicate touch to a portrait which has been under his brush for years. He stands off and regards the work, as puzzled as though he had never seen it before; then drops on a sofa, as though he were baffled by his own creation.

That artist was Leonardo da Vinci; his subject was La Gioconda, the wife of Francesco del Gioconda; and the finished portrait, considered his masterpiece, is known as the Mona Lisa. It has had many viscissitudes, but the canvas is still intact, and the mysterious-looking lady now hangs again in the Louvre, in Paris. Many persons are fascinated, many are repelled by her peculiar, ambiguous smile. Some claim that it is the potential Madonna that looks out of her eyes; others that it is the eternal Eve which lurks somewhere in every woman. Probably it is supposed to reveal that both are inherent in the species, and come uppermost by turns. In "The Riddle: Woman" there is a suggestion that the Soul of Woman, like the Mona Lisa of Pater's fancy, "has been a diver in deep seas and keeps their fallen day about her;" that although the lips smile, "the eyelids are a little weary."

Richard Stanton, directed the production.

Sporting Writers Help Exploit Serial

San Francisco's sports writing fraternity turned motion picture critics for a day recently, when the Golden Gate office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., gave the first California presentation of Jack Dempsey's serial, "Daredevil Jack." As part of its exploitation campaign on the chapter-play, release of which had been held up while Dempsey was quickly clearing his good name of all Government charges, the San Francisco Branch Manager invited every sporting editor in town to see the production and every one came. The result was a flood of publicity, which reacted so forcibly in bookings that the exchange is said to have passed its big quota in less than two weeks after the preview.

"Nonsense" Is Third of Mermaid Comedies

"Nonsense" is announced by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., as the third comedy release of the Mermaid Comedy series, which is said to have established a new record for a new brand of fun films. In this picture Jimmie Adams, who had one of the principal roles in "A Fresh Start" becomes a featured player, while the cast includes Marvel Rea, Lige Cromley, Frank Coleman and Hap Ward. It is made under the personal supervision of Jack White, who established such a reputation with Sennett and Sunshine creations. "Dynamite" will be the fourth of the Mermaids, this one featuring Lloyd Hamilton.

New Exploitation Aid by Pathe Exchanges

Pathe announces that it has further extended its co-operation with exhibitors in the exploitation of its subjects, through the addition of three new advertising features, all of which are of valuable assistance to a showman in "putting over" Pathe pictures. The attractive covers of the Pathe campaign books have been made available on all features in either mat or cut form. They make illustrations for display and are said to fill a growing need for distinctive advertising.

"Bride 13" Is Well Received

Congratulations Reach Fox Offices After First Showings

WILLIAM FOX and all those associated with him in the making of "Bride 13," the first serial to be marketed by that producer, have been very much encouraged by the reception with which the pre-release screenings of this picture have met. From all sides congratulations have come to Mr. Fox upon the excellence of "Bride 13," its dash and action, its suspense and the general high quality of the production.

Mr. Fox explains that he had refrained hitherto from the making of a serial because he had not found material that met with his approval. He was of the opinion that the market was in need of a really first-class chapter story, but he decided he would not launch a serial campaign until he was certain his offerings struck an entirely new note. It was with this ideal that he set about the producing of "Bride 13."

The picture was entrusted to Richard Stanton, a director with a long line of screen achievements under Mr. Fox's banner. For eight months Stanton worked daily on the serial having the active cooperation of the U. S. Navy. When he completed his work he turned it over to Mr. Fox, saying:

"Here is your serial. It represents eight months of the hardest work I ever have done. It is natural for me to praise it, but I am confident that you will be enthusiastic when you see it on the screen."

The producer was enthusiastic when he looked at "Bride 13," and so were the branch managers from all over the United States, Canada, Europe and South America who attended the annual convention of Fox Film Corporation late in May. At that convention the first five of the fifteen episodes were screened, and the picture was acclaimed as the best of its kind.

The branch managers returned to their respective exchanges and proceeded to show the serial to exhibitors in their territories. Then was started a stream of commendatory messages from theatre managers who declared Mr. Fox had achieved a notable thing. Big theatres that never had used serials became interested, and contracts began to flow into the branch offices.

Aside from the natural interest in the operations of the Navy in "Bride 13," it has great historic value. Every American schoolboy has felt a thrill of patriotic pride on learning that chapter in the naval history of this country in which is described Decatur's brilliant and decisive operation against the navies of the Barbary States which had so long protected the pirates of Tripoli and Algiers. Of this same breed are the pirates who figure in "Bride 13" as abductors for ransom of the daughters of rich and distinguished citizens of the United States.

In the picture, when U. S. destroyers have compelled the pirates to quit their stolen submarines with the captive brides, and they have been placed in irons aboard the yacht bearing the ransom and the rescued girls, a young Naval aviator is given command of the yacht with orders to act in his discretion as an officer. Thereupon the destroyers depart.

By this time the yacht has reached mid-ocean. The Navy officer knows a cruiser with a strong party of marines is at Tangiers. His own bride is among those who have been taken from the captured pirates. He yearns to see these pirates punished, and is inspired by a recollection of what Decatur accomplished a hundred years ago. So he sends the yacht toward Tangiers. The outcome fully justifies his course.

This incident is typical of the serial. Throughout the fifteen episodes it teaches the finest lessons of courage, love of country and devotion to the best qualities esteemed by upright men and women. Besides its appeal to the romantic side of youngsters, "Bride 13" is distinctly of cultural value, as has been pointed out by educators who have attended private screenings.

This serial is bound to attract the attention of school principals and teachers, which opens up a wide field of exploitation possibilities.

Big Pictures for Small Towns

OF interest to the exhibitors of the small towns is the news which comes from the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to the effect that there has been recently organized a new branch of the sales department, that is to be known as "Small Town Department".

In order to handle the work of this department it has been necessary to more than double the existing sales force.

"It is a regrettable state of affairs," says the Hodkinson statement, "that in the past, due either to prohibitive rentals or to the condition of the film when it reached its last run stages, the smaller cities and towns throughout the United States have been unable to enjoy a really big production.

"It is this condition which the new Hodkinson department was created to cure. First of all there will be a staff of experts whose duty will be to keep prints of the different subjects in perfect condition. This will be done in the most painstaking manner and no thought will be given to expense. Prints will be inspected at frequent intervals and replacement footage will be inserted wherever necessary. Oil spots will be removed, broken sprocket holes will be cut out and everything done to keep the film in perfect condition so that when it comes to the small town theatre it will be quite on a par, in every respect, with the film which was shown in the first run houses.

'As has been stated the sales department has been more than doubled and an intensive drive is even now under way. It is expected that this idea will fill a long-felt want and that it is meeting with the approval of the exhibitors is best evidenced by the fact that thousands of new bookings have been reported in the past few months.

Novel Presentation of Pictures on Beach

An effective and original presentation of motion pictures is made by Timely Films, Inc., the producers of The Literary Digest "Topics of the Day", which is a regular feature of the Brighton Beach Rocking Chair Movies. On a screen erected on piles in the water, pictures are shown every clear evening. The audience is seated in comfortable rocking chairs placed on the beach down to within a few feet of the water's edge. There are 1,500 rockers.

The idea of "Rocking Chair Movies" was conceived by Manager Kean in the Spring of 1915 and has been an annual feature every summer since that year.

At the present time Pioneer exchanges are located in Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, St. Louis, Omaha, Baltimore, Washington, Milwaukee, Kansas City, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago, Boston, Pittsburg, Montreal, Toronto, Halifax, Minneapolis, Philadelphia, Portland, Atlanta and Dallas.

Title of Hope Hampton Picture Changed

The production which has recently been concluded by Hope Hampton at the head of her own company, under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, on the West Coast, and which was originally titled "The Tiger Lady," is now being edited, cut and titled for early distribution. Through an unfortunate accident to the animal trainer, it became necessary to substitute lions for the tigers in the picture, so that this picture will have its original title changed to meet this extraordinary situation.

Abe Mass Joins Metro; to Assist Zellner

After a period of publicity work for managers of the Rialto, Strand and Capitol Theatres in New York, Abe Mass has returned to Metro in the capacity of assistant to Arthur Zellner, who in turn is assistant to Maxwell Karger, director general, at the studios in Sixty-first street. Mr. Mass was with the Metro forces when they included the B. A. Rolfe Company, and has followed the fortunes of the company pretty well throughout its career, save for the brief time away from it prior to his recent return.

Mr. Mass was with S. L. Rothapfel at the opening of the Rialto, following which he went with J. Victor Wilson, who was then engaged in handling the publicity for the Strand Theatre. Mr. Mass later assisted Ben Atwell at the Capitol Theatre.

"Earthbound" Is Approved

Statement from Goldwyn's Offices Says, "It Surpassed Expectations"

ACCORDING to the statement issued by Goldwyn in connection with the premier showings of its latest production, "Earthbound", at the Astor theatre, New York City, and the Playhouse, Chicago, the picture has surpassed all expectations. The statement from the Goldwyn headquarters is submitted as follows:

"Goldwyn's production of Basil King's 'Earthbound' has lived up to and exceeded the promises made for it. The public, the critics, the producers and the exhibitors are agreed that it is the big success which the advance notices of the photodrama of life after death predicted it would be.

"Never has picture called forth such words of praise as have been accorded to 'Earthbound'. Its theme, life after death, or the continuity of consciousness as the psychologists phrase it has a universal appeal. Every human being responds in greater or less degree to the theme whether he believes in the immortality of the soul or not. Entirely aside from the interest of that theme is the highly dramatic entertainment value of the story unfolded.

"The Rothafel presentation of 'Earthbound' was characterized by dignity befitting the theme and the production. The accompanying music was based in three themes, the harvest song from Verdi's 'Forza del Destino', the old English song, 'Oh Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms' and the Russian 'Kamennoi-Ostrow'. They were admirable aids in keeping spectators in the heightened mood that Basil King and T. Hayes Hunter, the director, sustain throughout 'Earthbound'".

Fox Release Due August 22

"Her Honor the Mayor" Presents Eileen Percy as New Fox Star

PARTICULARLY timely with the political activity now sweeping the country comes the announcement of William Fox that his new star Eileen Percy will appear on August 22nd in her first starring vehicle, entitled "Her Honor the Mayor," from the celebrated stage play by Arline Van Ness-Hines.

It deals with women in politics, and it is expected that it will make a strong appeal to every voter, because of the fact that women today are regarded as a deciding factor in political life. Eileen Percy, as Her Honor the Mayor, shows just what women of this country intend to do—for she stands for clean politics. She gets the corrupt political boss out of the way, and wins over the district attorney—who, though an upright politician, is unalterably opposed to petticoat government. She succeeds in obtaining the backing of the entire feminine vote and gets the district attorney elected to the governorship, where she takes her place beside him—as his wife.

"Her Honor the Mayor" enjoyed a successful run on Broadway when it was presented on the stage, and the screen adaptation will but serve to heighten the popularity of the fascinating comedy, says William Fox. The production has been carefully handled throughout by Director Paul Cazeneuve, who has supplied many deft touches, it is stated.

This production, serving to introduce Eileen Percy as a Fox star, is a vehicle particularly selected to suit her temperament and versatility. Miss Percy, who enjoys an enviable following among picture fans, is well known for her work as leading woman opposite William Russell, also a Fox star. A supporting cast of marked strength is headed by Ramsey Wallace, and includes Charles Force, William Fletcher and Edwin Booth Tilton.

Guy Coombs Is Back in Harness Once More

Guy Coombs is one of the first selections by Ivan Abramson for his all-star super-special, "The Wrong Woman," which Mr. Abramson has already started production on. Mr. Coombs' part is one of the finest he has ever had, according to Mr. Abramson, and it will give him unusual opportunities for a display of the talents that have made him a popular screen actor.

Mr. Coombs' achievement on the stage are familiar to all theatregoers. He has been in juvenile or leading support of such famous stars as Joseph Jefferson, Mrs. Fiske, Wm. Gillette, Virginia Harned, Lena Ashwell and Wilton Lackaye. Perhaps his most notable stage successes were attained in his memorable performances with Miss Lena Ashwell, England's celebrated emotional actress.

New Assignments Made to Metro's Casts

William Lawrence has been engaged by Metro to play opposite Alice Lake in her new picture, "Body and Soul," which is now being filmed at the Metro studios in Hollywood. Mr. Lawrence will enact the part of Howard Kent, a youthful American who encounters many difficulties in Paris in looking after the girl he loves.

With the signing of Tully Marshall, the cast for Doraldina's initial Metro starring picture, "Passion Fruit," is now complete and the actual filming will start this week at the Metro studios in Hollywood under the direction of Douglas Gerrard. Mr. Marshall will enact one of his famous character roles in "Passion Fruit."

Mary Miles Minter at Rialto, New York

After a series of successful appearances in the larger cities of the country, "A Cumberland Romance," Mary Miles Minter's latest picture for Realart, arrived on the screen of the Rialto Theatre last week and carried off the honors as the leading drawing card of the week in the opinion of a majority of the newspaper reviewers.

The motion picture critic of the New York Tribune declared its love story was "Far and away more interesting than that of the ordinary photoplay." The Illustrated Daily News said that "Miss Minter's art was in fullest bloom on Rialto screen."

Universal to Hold Big Theatre Party Soon

Universal has taken over the entire house for that night. The audience will include the several hundred employees in the New York home offices, including the local Universal film exchange and the Industrial and Educational Department, as well as the army of workers in the Universal laboratories at Fort Lee, N. J.

McIntyre in Charge of Tourneur Studio

ROBERT B. McINTYRE, formerly studio manager for Goldwyn in New York, and for several years associated with William A. Brady, arrived this week in Los Angeles to take charge of Maurice Tourneur's studio at Universal City.

Tourneur's first subject for the new Associated Producers is J. Fennimore Cooper's "The Last of the Mohicans," which was adapted for the screen by Jack Gilbert. This is one of the most widely read books in American literature. It has been adapted for secondary school work, being selected from the seventy tales of Cooper. Its foreign sale was tremendous, and especially in England will this film prove of great attractive quality.

June Elvidge Cast for "Fine Feathers"

June Elvidge, the widely known motion-picture star, who is appearing on the stage in the popular musical play, "The Girl in the Spotlight" at the Knickerbocker Theatre, has been engaged for the part of Mrs. Brand in Metro's forthcoming all-star production of "Fine Feathers," the screen version of Eugene Walter's highly successful drama. Miss Elvidge is the fourth actress in recent months to appear in Metro pictures while continuing work on the stage, the others being Ina Claire, Wilda Bennett and Claire Whitney.

To Supply Exhibitors with Music Service

The New York Concert League announced this week the formation of a motion picture department, to take care of the needs of the first class motion picture theatres the country over, specializing in the booking of soloists in conjunction with pictures. The organization has opened offices at 1664 Broadway, and invites exhibitors to get in touch with it.

"Love Flower" Release Sept. 5

United Artists Will Handle Griffith Production

"THE LOVE FLOWER," the latest David Wark Griffith production, a drama in a setting of exquistie beauty, will be released by United Artists Corporation on September 5th, according to the announcement of Hiram Abrams, president of that organization.

The theme of the production is based on a story by Ralph Stock, that ran in Collier's Weekly, and created considerable interest among its readers. It was the featured story of that national magazine for several weeks and was exploited by Collier's in an exceptional manner. There was so much of the unusual, sensational and highly dramatic in it, that it is said to have stood out as one of the best contributions to magazine literature for the year.

Mr. Griffith is running a national advertising campaign for this production, beginning with a two-page spread in the Saturday Evening Post, issue of August 14th, to be followed by additional copy a few weeks later. Mr. Griffith is one of the most consistent national advertisers in the motion picture field, and he is planning to conduct a national advertising campaign for each of his forthcoming United Artists' productions. In addition to the extensive Saturday Evening Post campaign, the advertising agency handling this campaign for Mr. Griffith has arranged for a co-operative newspaper campaign in every city in the United States where the production is to be shown, a week or two prior to its release in that particular community. No other previous Griffith production will have had the enormous advanced advertising and publicity campaign that "The Love Flower" will receive.

United Artists' Corporation, through its advertising, publicity and exploitation departments, has outlined an extensive campaign of exhibitor aids that should be of great help to showmen in presenting "The Love Flower." Every aid suggested is devised to bring additional revenue to the box-office and many suggestions are contained in their folders that it is said will be the means of reaching every picture fan in all communities.

The story of "The Love Flower" is unusually dramatic, telling of the wonderful love of a daughter for her persecuted father. The father is being hounded to the very ends of the world, yet the girl dares to plan the undoing of the man who aims to bring disgrace upon the very light of her heart and soul.

The development of this theme, Mr. Griffith has handled in a masterly manner, and has carried with it a wonderful and spirited love plot between the girl and Richard Barthelmess. In the selection of his players for this picture, Mr. Griffith has used great care, so as to assure his story of the most faithful interpretation. His players, headed by Richard Barthelmess and Carol Dempster, include George MacQuarrie, Anders Randolph, Florence Short, Crauford Kent, Adolphe Lestina, William James and Jack Manning.

Sensational in the extreme are the under-water incidents in the story in which Carol Dempster demonstrates her exceptional ability as a swimmer. This is the first time that Mr. Griffith has used under-water scenes in any of his productions. There is a fight under water between Miss Dempster and Anders Randolph that is a genuine novelty in photodrama. This series of scenes alone will assure 'The Love Flower" of that always-to-be-desired asset—"word of mouth" advertising.

Nicholas Schenck, of the Marcus Loew organization, after seeing "The Love Flower," at a private showing at the home of Mr. Loew, last week, declared most emphatically that it was one of the very best productions that has come to the screen from Mr. Griffith's studio.

Conditions In West Excellent

JOHN E. STOREY, assistant to Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges of Pathe Exchange, Inc., brings back to New York a roseate view of conditions west of Chicago, following a trip which took him into the Rocky Mountain districts. He states the middle West is on the verge of having probably the greatest crops in American history, and in the industrial centres productiveness has increased to such a marked degree, giving Mr. Storey the impression that exhibitors in the territory he visited are in for another big season.

"Everywhere I went," said Mr. Storey, "I found evidence of prosperity. No centre had felt the pinch that some economists asserted must follow the long period of extravagance Americans have indulged in.

"Farmers never were so prosperous or independent in the middle West as they are now. On the entire trip from Chicago west, the most wonderful crops were in evidence. Alfalfa, oats, corn and wheat, such as even this wonderful belt is accustomed to seeing, surpasses anything on record. Also I understand this condition prevails in the entire Wyoming and Montana farming districts with excellent grass on the ranges. Precipitation seems to be following cultivation. The entire country is of as luxurious a green as in the spring.

"Exhibitors are reflecting the prosperity of their communities, by giving their patrons a better class of pictures than they have ever known. They are charging much more for them, to pay more for their amusement, when given value received in good entertainment.

"Showmen are running strongly to short subjects in this territory. Of course, they are not neglecting their features, but they are giving their shows variety by the addition of such subjects as the Pathe Review, Hal Roach Comedies, Topics of the Day, Young Buffalo Series, and Pathe News, and most particularly to serials. The chapter-play is a greater favorite in this territory than in past years. Of course, comedies have their place on every bill, and one finds the one-reelers prominently displayed.

The New York Review

John Morrell says:

"Cruise of the Elsinore" from Jack London Story Is Best Sea Film to Date

Metro Has a Fine Achievement in This Double Fisted Photoplay With "Big Mitch" Lewis in the Title Role—Noah Beery and W. V. Mong Aid in Making It Realistic.

There is no question that the Metro adaptation of Jack London's "The Mutiny of the Elsinore" is the most graphic picture of the sea ever presented. It throbs with action and suspense and carries a vividness and vitality which make it ideal entertainment. Jack London always wrote realistically. What he had to tell he expressed in most graphic terms. It is a great credit to Edward Sloman that he has given the story a production that carries the element of realism as its keynote. "The Mutiny of the Elsinore" is a tale written by a "he-man" of "he-men" for "he-men." As such it will probably make "The Pollyanna" lovers shudder. But those who want to see crisp action, spirited acting, wonderful atmosphere and clearly defined characterization, we recommend this newest Metro release.

It is a story which makes ideal screen material, because it deals so effectively in externals. There is nothing psychological about its theme or treatment. One doesn't have to argue "pro and con" over its subtitles in order to get a meaning between the lines. The action is focussed so that every vital ingredient is emphasized. A prologue establishes the relations of the principal characters and from that point the story builds with ever increasing interest. The hero is a stern, relentless figure with a heart as big as a mountain. He has a fine sense of honor and when his skipper is the victim of a feud he takes a lasting oath to pilot the ship and bring a steady income to the offspring.

The south is a land lubber not caring for the sea and inclined to step over the conventions in his search for pleasure. The late skipper's dying wish is to see his son married to the daughter of his bosom friend. And the hero is determined to see this wish carried out. Hence the scene which shows the youth being forced to ship as a common sailor is a humorous one. This light touch is admirably treated and comes at the opportune moment when the action is burdened with heavy ingredients.

Of course the picture relies upon its climax for its strength—a climax born from the title. One waits in anticipation for the event and one is not disappointed. Here is the hero battling against overwhelming odds. And not overpowering his opponents in the accepted movie style. The realism is maintained throughout and truthfully too. The rain beats down, the wind tosses the sails about, the decks are picturesque in their battle with the elements. And through the night the new skipper is in a terrible plight.

The villains are the biggest cut-throats imaginable and it takes an iron hand to rule them. They are incited to mutiny by an escaped convict who was once a member of the erstwhile skipper's crew. And he has come back heavily disguised to exact his vengeance. The schooner rolls, the water sweeps the deck and the hero gets through the long hours. But in the end he wins though the battle takes him to the hospital. He gives his blessing to the youth who has had a change of heart and the romance ends happily. But such an ingredient is really not necessary here. One doesn't pay much attention to it. One is too absorbed with the vivid action.

Mitchell Lewis in the role of the skipper is ideal. His rugged personality fits the part to a dot. Sea stories or those of the frozen wastes—they must come with good vitality for big Mitch. The other roles, those of the ringleaders are played with a graphic touch by Noah Beery and William V. Mong. These two actors are always excellent in character roles. Both are adept at make-up. The romance is taken care of by Casson Ferguson and Helen Ferguson. The extras are good types.

But the credit for this achievement belongs to Edward Sloman. He has been faithful to London. Not a maudlin touch nor a scene is executed that is foreign to the story. It is vital, it is real and atmospheric to the core. The continuity is perfect in regard to the finely attained sequences.

"The Mutiny of the Elsinore," is big. It is big in its fine, virile story of the sea, it is big in its excellent production and it is big in respect to its unusually capable cast which Mitchell Lewis heads. The story may or may not be one of Jack London's best, but it certainly makes one of the best pictures as treated here. The continuity provided by Albert Shelby Le Vino is a work of real skill when it comes to the handling of the various dramatic crises and the direction supplied by Edward Sloman is to be highly praised.

The story tells of the manner in which John Pike, first mate of the Elsinore, vows to care for Dick Somers, son of his benefactor, the captain of the ship, when his benefactor dies after being attacked by thugs. Pike sees that Dick is going to the bad and so forces him to join the crew of the Elsinore on a voyage. Margaret West, daughter of the present captain, is very fond of Dick and it is because of her that Pike, who loves her, brings the youngster aboard.

Shipped as second mate is Andreas Meallaire, one of the thugs who attacked the previous captain. He is now disguised with a beard. And the "Rat," Meallaire's enemy because of a betrayal, is among the crew.

After this "planting" of the characters and situations, the action moves forward with significant force. There is a fine sequence in which Dick overcomes his fear of the sea and proves his metal by rescuing a stunned man from a perilous position on a mast high above the decks.

Then Meallaire succeeds in bringing the villainous crew to mutiny. As a storm breaks the crew swarms the decks and attacks Pike, Dick and their few loyal followers. It isn't stretching the point at all to say that Director Sloman has here staged one of the finest sequences of his or any director's career. The storm effects are realistic to a degree, the lighting and photographic work without faults. And the fight itself is staged with all the terrific realism that one could demand. Meallaire comes to an end when the "rat" knifes him. The two are swept overboard in a death grapple. Pike is mortally wounded, but when the storm has cleared away he places Dick's hand in Margaret's, for the young man has proven himself.

Mitchel Lewis is fine as the big hearted, simple John Pike. He lives the role and creates many a wave of emotion on his own account. The rest are all very good and include besides those mentioned, Sidney D'Albrook, Norval MacGregor and John P. Lockney.

Book This and Get Ready for Some Red Letter Days

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Here is certainly a picture that you can bank on. Without doubt it is one of the best seen in recent months and the days you show it ought to stand long as red letter days on your calendar. An extended run is certainly justified in this case, for after a few performances the probability is that the crowds will come flocking to your house. This picture will advertise itself and do the job in a big way

You have much to advertise regarding this. The fact that it is an adaptation of a Jack London work is the biggest point in your advantage. Go strong on this angle. And then talk about the wonderful production that Director Sloman has given the story, particularly in the big scenes. They'll certainly remember him for his work here.

Mention also Mitchel Lewis. His work here is probably better than anything he has done since "The Barrier." The supporting cast will stand out too, so mention them prominently in your advertising.

"THE MUTINY OF THE ELSINORE"
(Shurtleff-Metro)

Rich Entertainment in This Realistic Jack London Story

THERE is no question about this adaptation of a Jack London story being a regular, full grown "he-man's" picture. The author always wrote in terms of vivid action, his plots and characters being vital and sharply defined. "The Mutiny of the Elsinore" easily takes the prize for being the most graphic and picturesque sea story that was ever told on the screen. The striking point in its visualization is the remarkable realism that accompanies the gripping incident. It is a picture of "he-men" for "he-men," and doubtless the feminine portion of an audience will shudder at the rugged character of the tale, the fact that it revolves around a mutiny on the briny deep and the vivid and clear-cut interpretation by the star and his capable assistants.

The director has fashioned his scenes so that realism is the keynote. Every detail is there that should be and nothing is presented that is out of harmony. The continuity is compact, the sequences being closely related, with emphasis placed upon the climaxes. "The Mutiny of the Elsinore" isn't a study in brutality, however. It has its tender moments which afford it an adequate balance. Yet it is a tale of the sea and its vigorous sweep is as certain as the tide itself. Painstaking effort is visible everywhere in making it faithful. The schooner, the cut-throats who compose the crew, the stern and relentless skipper, the mutiny itself, the storm-tossed deck with the rain and wind raising havoc—these are details and incidents which are thoroughly compelling.

A prologue introduces the reason for the hero following the sea and when the old skipper is killed the younger man takes charge. And his object is to take care of the schooner and see that it provides an ample income for the skipper's son. Humorous moments are provided when the new skipper forces the youth to join the crew. The romance is given up to the lad and a ward of the old man and it also has its note of conflict. Then the mutiny takes shape, inspired by a vengeful cut-throat. And it is true to life because the hero battles, unsuccessfully, against great odds, though he lives to sail again. Mitchell Lewis is an ideal choice for the part of the skipper and he plays the part convincingly. Great character studies are rendered by William V. Mong and Noah Beery, Jr.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A virile story of the sea is "The Mutiny of the Elsinore," by Jack London. Adapted to the screen it takes on a force and vitality which will be felt by every spectator when it comes to the ——— theatre next ——. with the rugged star, Mitchell Lewis, in the leading role. Albert Shelby Le Vino, who adapted the tale, has taken its graphic points and moulded them into an absorbing subject. And Edward Sloman, the director, has added a typical London touch through his graphic atmosphere which is expressed in terms of compelling realism.

The story depicts the adventures of John Pike during the cruise of the Elsinore. His captain, Nathaniel Somers, is the victim of an assassin, and he takes charge of the schooner in order to provide a source of income to the skipper's son, Dick. The latter dislikes the sea, but Pike forces him to go along in order to keep his obligations to Margaret West, the daughter of a former half-owner of the Elsinore. The crew is composed of cutthroats and at the first opportunity they mutiny, forcing Pike to battle for his life. It is the mutinous scene which gives vigor to the action and stamps the picture as one of the most realistic that was ever presented on the screen. Mr. Lewis is an ideal type for the part he portrays and his assistants are thoroughly in character.

PROGRAM READER

Jack London's stories are easily adapted to the screen. He wrote in terms of graphic action, there being a rich vein of adventure in all of his subjects. As a writer of sea stories he has never been excelled. "The Cruise of the Elsinore" is the latest of his tales of the briny deep to be translated for the screen. Patrons of the ——— theatre are assured of exceptionally fine entertainment when the picture comes here next ——. It tells a tale of throbbing action—action which is punctuated with genuine thrills and realistic incident. It is not a misstatement when we declare it to be the most graphic sea story ever told on the screen. Mitchell Lewis is the star and he gives one of his rugged performances. Edward Sloman directed the picture.

Divorce From New Angle

Mary Murillo Seeks in New Story to Approach Problem in Novel Way

IN adapting "A New York Idea," Langdon Mitchell's famous satirical comedy-drama on metropolitan marriage, to the screen as a starring vehicle for Alice Brady, Mary Murillo has tackled the problem of divorce in a manner uncommon to its general treatment in motion-pictures by abandoning the sentimental for the sex angle.

Miss Murillo believes that by this treatment she has been able to present the problem in its actual, every-day aspects. She admits that the usual saccharine detail that the motion-picture public is accustomed to expect in pictures of this kind is entirely missing from her script but believes that a stronger and more vital story has resulted.

"'The New York Idea,' with its smart, American up-to-dateness,' said Miss Murillo in discussing her work on this script, "differs radically from the usual divorce story in that it takes divorce from the sex angle rather than from the sentimental, which is after all, all that really matters.

"'Marry for whim and leave the rest to fate, and the divorce court,' is the philosophy expressed by that she is the typical American type, spoiled and self-willed, and the play deals entirely with the struggle between the two sexes, at no time making any mushy, saccharine reference to the effect of divorce on the children, such as is generally the case.

"After all, the love of children is not so everlasting and binding that it should be dragged into every divorce court story, and there is no doubt that many children are better off in a reliable school than with parents who are continually nagging each other."

Emerson Back from Trip

President of Actors Equity Returns After Six Weeks in Europe

THE European theatre is suffer- from shell shock, according to John Emerson, president of the Actors Equity Association, who returned to America on the steamship Imperator yesterday. Mr. Emerson spent six weeks overseas studying the European theatre and gathering data on foreign organizations of actors and dramatists.

"In both England and France the plays this season are far below the pre-war standard," said Mr. Emerson. "They are inferior in quality and comparatively few in number and the managers have been obliged to put on revivals or import plays from America in order to fill their theatres.

"This condition seems to be due to the blighting effect of the terrific strain of war on the creative power of the writers. In both England and France dramatists assured me that the poor showing this year and last was due almost entirely to the shattered condition of the writers' nerves which we know as shell-shock. After four years of almost continuous bombardment, whether in the trenches or at home in Paris or London, it is almost impossible for the creative artist to attain a degree of mental concentration necessary to the production of first class work.

Mr. Emerson was accompanied on his trip by his wife, Anita Loos, the scenario writer, who searched the European markets for new movie stories for Constance Talmadge.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Big Cast Support Farnum

Veteran Players Support Dustin Farnum in Robertson-Cole Film

"BIG HAPPINESS," is the first Robertson-Cole super-special featuring Mr. Farnum, aside from the appeal of Mr. Farnum as the "man's man" of the screen the picture has the advantage of a supporting cast which carries considerable weight with the motion picture fan as well as the exhibitor, states Robertson-Cole.

The supporting cast alone of "Big Happiness" should suggest to the exhibitor many unique and novel exploitation angles, say the producers. It is not difficult to visualize the desirability in the cast of Joseph J. Dowling, known wherever motion pictures are shown for his remarkable performance of the "Patriarch" in "The Miracle Man."

Dowling, veteran character actor of the screen and stage, plays a prominent part in "Big Happiness." He is cast as a titled Englishman who has a penchant for gambling on the stock market. He portrays the role with all the finesse and artistry at his command. Kathryn Adams, a star in her own right, who plays the lead opposite Mr. Farnum, and Fred Malatesta, the heavy, have many screen triumphs to their credit.

Jack Cunningham, author of many screen successes, is responsible for the screen version of the play. It is said to follow closely the original story, written by "Pan," the famous British novelist. Colin Campbell was the director.

Louis Mayer Studio Idle

With Stars in East, Production Company Prepares for Next Year

WITH both of its stars, Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin in New York, and with its contracts with First National fulfilled to date, the Louis B. Mayer studio at Los Angeles has temporarily ceased production activities and is preparing for a busy fall and winter season.

Miss Stewart reached New York last week after the completion of her latest picture, "Sowing the Wind," which was adapted by Franklyn Hall from the stage play by Sydney Grundy and was transferred to the screen under the direction of John M. Stahl.

"Sowing the Wind" is the fourth of Miss Stewart's four-pictures-a-year contract with Mr. Mayer. The others were "The Fighting Shepherdess," by Caroline Lockhart, "The Yellow Typhoon" by Harold MacGrath, and "Harriet and the Piper" by Kathleen Norris, all of which are magazine stories reissued in book form.

The completion, by Edwin Carewe, of Mildred Harris Chaplin's latest picture, "Habit," about two weeks ago left her free to pick out a vacationing spot, and she chose New York.

According to present plans, both of the stars will return to California and the Mayer studio to resume production in the early fall. In the meantime, it is probable that Mr. Mayer will start work on a big special all-star picture. Neither the title of the story nor the members of the cast have yet been announced, but it is said that it will be a James Oliver Curwood book.

Rothacker Will Film Farm Picture

Agriculture students in colleges throughout the country are to have the opportunity to study the methods employed on the world's largest model farm. D. Rothacker, manager of the Rothacker Industrial Division, has signed a contract to produce a six-reel picture which the owner of the farm will lend to educational institutions.

William H. Strafford has left to direct the picture. Heart's Delight farm—11,000 acres of it—is situated in northeastern New York, a short distance below the Canadian border. Not only is this one of the largest farms in the world but it is said to be the most wonderful. There is not a horse, cow, sheep, dog or chicken or pig on it that isn't a thoroughbred. All the crops are the most perfect that scientific methods can produce.

While there the movie camera will observe the herds of buffalo and deer which roam the corner of the farm reserved for them. The camera also will visit the farm college, conducted for young folk of that vicinity.

"Skirts" Has Notable Players

Del Ruth Has Array of Comedians for Sunshine Special

IN selecting the cast of notables for his own story, "Skirts," the six-reel Fox-Sunshine Special. Director Hampton Del Ruth was compelled to comb the stage and screen ranks of the United States. It required months of persistent effort before the work was finally completed and Mr. Del Ruth was able to begin active work on the filming of the big comedy—which is said to strike a new and lofty keynote in the motion picture comedy realm, so gorgeous are the settings, so beautiful the women and gowns used throughout, and so excruciatingly funny the story which runs through the six reels.

Before starting on his gigantic undertaking Mr. Del Ruth who set out to make a comedy entirely different from the usual slap-stick brand with which the screens of the country have been flooded. Mr. Del Ruth realied that real fun-makers were needed, if "Skirts" was to be the success he was determined to make it.

Heading the all-star list of comedians are the Singer Midgets, a team of Lilliputian fun-makers who have graced the vaudeville stage with marked success. "Skirts" signalizes the first screen appearance of these midgets, and it is said they outdo on the film anything they have done on the speaking stage.

Chief among the other fun-makers are Chester Conklin, whose brilliant achievements on the comedy screen are well known and "Slim" Summerville, who, is reputed to be the thinnest man in comedy. "Slim" is seen as the ringmaster in the Midget Circus, and his lanky frame is said to form a screamingly funny contrast to the diminutive figures of the Midgets.

Others equally well known on the stage and screen include the following: Alta Allen, the charming ingenue, who is a graduate to the films from the musical comedy ranks; Ethel Teare, well known as a leading woman in the Fox-Sunshine Comedies; Alice Davenport, who comes from the famous theatrical family of Davenports; Dorothy Lee, described as the "leader of the Sunshine Beauty Brigade," who formerly played in support of Lew Dockstader; Mrs. Laura La Varnie, an old musical comedy and vaudeville favorite, and Blanche Payson, who plays the policewoman in "Skirts," and who is a statuesque beauty of 215 pounds and stands six feet three.

Mrs. Rosa Gore is a member of the vaudeville team of Crimmins and Gore, and also appeared with Montgomery and Stone in "The Wizard of Oz." Mrs. Milla Davenport is a native of Switzerland, where for several years she achieved fame as a stage dancer.

Harry Booker has been on the stage since he first wore kneepants. He has been seen throughout the country in circus, vaudeville and dramatic productions. Ford West is a well-known "big time" vaudeville performer and was chosen to play the "big boob," because of his success in a similar role in vaudeville. Glen Cavender is reputed to be the best "boob" in comedies.

Jack Cooper is an eccentric comedian from England and formerly played in Sennett comedies. Harry Gribbon, who plays the "hero" in "Skirts," is a stalwart, handsome six-footer who formerly represented Fordham University on the gridiron. Bobby Dunn is said to hold the high diving championship of the world. Tom Kennedy is best known as a boxer, and Edgar Kennedy plays one of the "heavy villain" roles. Gus Pixley is a San Franciscan by birth and Jim Donnelly, who is seen as the sheriff, has played in vaudeville for years.

Kendall-Chambers State Plans

A STATEMENT recently received from the headquarters of the newly organized producing company of Messmore Kendall-Robert W. Chambers Productions in the Capitol Theatre Building, New York City, sets forth in detail the plans of that organization for its future production activities. The statement is submitted as follows:

"Five productions will be made this year based upon the present works of Robert W. Chambers, the distinguished novelist, and upon original scenarios written by him. The first of these, on which productions was begun this week, is 'Cardigan,' directed by John W. Noble. Paralleling these will be the Vivian Martin productions, of which the first is 'The Song of the Soul' and is already completed. This production is adapted from the William J. Locke story 'An Old World Romance' and was six months in the making, under the direction of Mr. Noble. The picture was edited by Robert W. Chambers, and is a drama entirely different from any production in which Miss Martin has ever appeared.

"Miss Martin's second picture, on which work has also begun this week, is by Edward Childs Carpenter, who wrote 'The Cinderella

Betty Carpenter, who will be seen in the role of "Silver Heels" in the Messomore-Kendall—Robert W. Chambers Productions photoplay "Cardigan"

Man' and is being directed by Sidney Ollcott, who made the Rupert Hughes picture, 'Scratch My Back.' The picture will not be named until it is completed.

"These pictures will be followed by 'The Younger Set,' 'The Conspirators,' 'The Maker of Moons' and others selected from thirty-six of Mr. Chambers' novels which are immediately available. Most of these have been 'best-sellers' and have splendid picture possibilities. All of them are now controlled by Messmore Kendall-Robert W. Chambers Productions.

"There will also be a group of five productions in the coming year by a third production unit under the sole supervision of one of the most important men in picture making. These will be produced on his own original composition and work will begin on October 1st.

"'Cardigan' scenes are being taken in their original atmosphere at Johnson Hall, the home of Sir William Johnson at Johnstown, N. Y., the building still stands, and in point of historic interest is one of the greatest in New York. The battle of Cresaps Fort is being staged on the scenes of the original battle near Pittsburg where it was fought during the Revolution. Two battalions of the State Guard participate in the action. The youthful Betty Carpenter, who has been selected for the part of Silver Heels in 'Cardigan' was formerly a lead in the Sunshine Comedies. She was chosen because her delicate blonde beauty and charming personality fitted her exactly to the role.

Tourneur Special Is Rated High

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION announces as among the most important of its early releases the Maurice Tourneur super-feature, "The Great Redeemer," a six-part special production enacted by a distinguished cast that includes House Peters and Marjorie Daw. This production, according to the view of Metro officials, should prove to be one of the strongest attractions of the coming season, bringing together as it does a novel and intensely gripping story and the creative genius of one of the world's foremost directors of the cinema.

"The Great Redeemer," says Metro, in a statement just issued, "conceived and written in story form by H. H. Van Loan, author of 'The Virgin of Stamboul,' for Priscilla Dean, and other noteworthy screen successes, is a drama that breathes the spirit of the rugged West; but running through it is a striking allegorical counterplot which tells in poignant fashion of the regeneration of a desperado and "stick-up" man and his love for a beautiful innocent girl."

Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation was so vastly impressed by the picture at the private showing which resulted in Metro taking over the distribution of the Tourneur Production, he expressed his firm conviction that it will be one of the biggest money-makers ever handled by the Metro organization.

"This is one of the year's outstandingly great productions," said the Metro chief executive. "We can offer it to exhibitors with the confident assurance that it will not only fill their houses, but will make them new friends and patrons. Intensely dramatic and sweeping in its climaxes, 'The Great Redeemer' carries a vital message as well. It is a picture that persons of all ages and conditions of life may well see with profit to themselves. It has the greatest 'punch' I have noticed in a picture for many a day."

House Peters has the rugged role of Dan Malloy, the bandit. Marjorie Daw appears as the girl. The sheriff is played by Jack MacDonald and Joseph Singleton contributes a powerful characterization as a condemned murderer whom Dan meets during his imprisonment.

Jack Gilbert and Jules Furthman put Mr. Van Loan's original story into continuity form. The production was directed by Clarence Brown under the personal supervision of Maurice Tourneur. It was photographed by Charles J. Van Enger, with special scenic effects by Floyd Mueller. The production is said to be distinguished by a number of remarkable motion camera "shots" with unusual lighting effects and astonishing double exposures.

Release of "The Great Redeemer" is tentatively set for the early part of October.

"In the Heart of a Fool" is based on a novel by William Allen White. The story, it is said, is characterized by an unusual wealth of dramatic material, surpassing in force and emotional intensity any heretofore visualized under Dwan's direction.

Tom Mix, the sensational western star of William Fox, has been selected by S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Capitol theatre, New York, to occupy the screen of the world's largest motion-picture playhouse for the week of August 22nd, in his latest production, "The Untamed"—from the pen of Max Brand.

"This production was selected", says William Fox, "because it is a strikingly unusual picture, teeming with virile action in picturesque western atmosphere, crowded to the last foot with breathless, hair-raising stunts, sensational feats of horsemanship and gun play. It is an absorbing tale with a big heart interest.

Will Rogers Has Novel Role in New Film

"A first cousin of Rip Van Winkle" is the way that Goldwyn characterizes Will Rogers' new role in his forthcoming production of "Honest Hutch." "Nearest it in character," continues Goldwyn, "is his Jim Fenton in 'Jes Call Me Jim', and in mood and setting his 'Jubilo'. Yet the resulting characterization of 'Honest Hutch' is as different from his tramp 'Jubilo' and his hunter Jim as those roles are from each other."

Universal Closes Big Deals

UNIVERSAL has made another big tie-up in the foreign field, it has just been announced at the Universal home office. This time it is an arrangement whereby the Universal product is to be distributed through the great part of South America.

The tie-up, arranged by C. H. Macgowan, temporarily in charge of Universal's Export Department, was with two of the principal film agencies in South America—the Empresa de Teatros y Cinemas, Ltd., of Chile, for the territories of Chile, Bolivia and Peru, and the Sociedad General Cinematografica of Buenos Aires, Argentine, for the territories of Argentine, Paraguay and Uruguay.

The South American representatives who figured in the tie-up, were Eduardo Rodrigo, manager and special representative of the Empresa, on his recent visit to New York and Juan Kunsler of the Sociedad General.

This gives Universal a complete and efficient distribution over the entire South American picture field. Brazil is covered by eight special Universal branches, which according to Mr. Macgowan, are enjoying unprecedented business at the present time. Ecuador, Colombia and the northern countries of South America receive Universal films through a highly organized exchange in Panama.

The present arrangement with the Chilean and Argentine agencies includes all Universal products except the super-productions and Universal-Jewel features. Special arrangements are being projected for these pictures and individual announcements will be made later on each picture.

The triangle tie-up is one of the largest contracts closed for any South American territory in recent months.

"It assures Universal of the best possible presentation in the most representative houses in South America," said Mr. Macgowan in a recent interview. It assures South American exhibitors of a steady supply of Universal features such as our Star Series of forty-eight pictures by six popular stars, including Harry Carey, Frank Mayo, Lyons and Moran, Carmel Myers and others.

"It also assures them of a complete serial program—a series of serials that over-lap for an entire twelve months, such as "The Lion Man" in "Elmo the Fearless," "The Moon Riders," "The Vanishing Dagger" and "The Dragon's Net." This is especially important in the South American market, where serials are more sought for than almost any other kind of film output. Eddie Polo and Marie Walcamp are prime favorites in the Latin Republics, and any serial made by them means big houses.

"This arrangement for Universal distribution throughout Latin America is further evidence of the superiority of American films. They continue to hold their own in South America, where a few years back, German, French and other foreign films were in equal or more demand.

"I recently was in Europe, and from what I saw and learned of the picture production game in that part of the world, I have no fear that European films will make any inroads in the American, in the near future. This theory is based altogether on the matter of quality stories, direction and photography,

"One reason why American films hold their own in foreign markets is because of their universal appeal. The American film makers, on the other hand, combine the productive and creative qualities of all races—our mixed heredity gives up the artistic qualities of the Latin, the practicability of the Anglo-Saxon, and the other good qualities of other races.

Enid Bennett in scene from "Hairpins," a Thos. H. Ince Production—C. Gardner Sullivan story

"Midchannel" Ready for Screen

AT last "Midchannel", the latest production of Clara Kimball Young is announced for release by Equity Pictures. The completion of "Midchannel" makes the fourth Young picture released by Equity in the year.

"Midchannel' is said to be the greatest drama from the pen of England's playwright, Sir Arthur Wing Pinero—and Pinero is the author of some thirty stage plays, many of Broadway fame. This production, it will be remembered, was enacted on the stage, at the Empire theatre on Broadway, with Ethel Barrymore in the same role that Clara Kimball Young takes—that of Zoe Blundell, the gay, spirited and pleasure-loving wife of a neglectful husband.

Throughout its six reels of concentrated action, the thread of the theme, which centers about the most stormy period of married life—the period aptly called "Midchannel", in comparison with the rock-bound center of the English channel which every voyager must cross on his way—is always tense and exciting. A glance at the criticisms that "Midchannel" received when Ethel Barrymore starred in the play is convincing proof to those who have never read the play that the plot forms the most intimate that could ever be chosen for a motion-picture.

A feature of "Midchannel" that it is believed will score heavily is the costly wardrobe that Clara Kimball Young wears. Much is being said about the beautiful gowns worn by one actress and another, but the luxurious display of dress in "Midchannel55 is claimed to be beyond anything ever done in pictures. The wealth and finery of frocks and frills worn by Miss Young in "Forbidden Woman" set many tongues wagging and put many a costumer's efforts to shame in comparison. "Midchannel" announces Equity, however, surpases "The Forbidden Woman" in its display of fashionable gowns. The play as a whole calls for this finery, as the personages are all of well-to-do society.

Another feature is the catchy titling of the picture. Many are the maxims on married life in "Midchannel" that bring smiles by the strength of their message. The sharp touches of humor that flow in the repartee between husband and wife have been preserved from the original play in the titles.

The work of the supporting cast, consisting of J. Frank Glendon, Edward M. Kimball, Bertram Grassby, Eileen Robinson, Helen Sullivan, Katherine Griffith and others, is as praiseworthy as that of Miss Young.

"The Parish Priest" Is Filmed in West

Herman J. Garfield of the Plymouth Picture Productions, Cleveland, O., has purchased the rights to the well-known stage success, "The Parish Priest," which was written by Daniel L. Hart, now mayor of Wilkesbarre, Pa. The play had achieved repeated successes throughout a period of twenty years both in America and in Australia. Daniel Sully, who played the title role, made his greatest hit in this play. The screen production has been made at the Jesse Hampton studios, Los Angeles, under the direction of Robert Thornby. Mr. Garfield says several offers have already been made for the premier showing of the picture, but as yet he has come to no definite decision.

Latest DeMille Offering to Be Different

Following his recent negotiations with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation whereby he signed a new five-year contract with that organization, Cecil B. DeMille announced a program of "wide variety in theme and staging" in the annual trio of productions which bear his name. "Something To Think About," fulfils his promise, for it marks a departure from any of its immediate predecessors, according to critics who saw it in the making at the Lasky studio and who have viewed the initial print at the New York office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The scenic triumphs in the picture represent the initial screen work of Paul Chalfin, New York and Boston architect, who is a member of Cecil B. DeMille's production staff.

"If I Were King" Gets Fine Send-Off

William Farnum, who appears in the William Fox special production, "If I Were King," from the famous novel and stage play by Justin Huntley McCarthy, opened a limited engagement of two weeks at the Lyric Theatre, New York, August 9th.

A large and enthusiastic audience greeted the opening performance at the conclusion of which expressions of opinion were heard on every hand that "If I were King" was the biggest and best production ever handled by this star. The star is supported by a cast of unusual strength. Fritz Lieber, well known upon the stage for his work in Shakespearean roles, gives an especially strong impersonation of the weak and villainous King Louis XI. Betty Ross Clarke plays Catherine with fine feeling; and Walter Law, Claude Payton and Renita Johnston lend admirable support.

Goldwyn Opens in Detroit

"The Penalty" at the Adams; and "North Wind's Malice" at Madison

THE first public showing of two Goldwyn pictures took place in Detroit on Sunday, August 8 when Rex Beach's "North Wind's Malice" opened at the Madison theatre and Gouverneur Morris' "Penalty" at the Adams. Both are scheduled for their New York showings at the Capitol theatre later in the season.

Quarter-page ads were taken for both pictures in the Detroit papers, and that with the exploitation campaigns brought out capacity audiences for the openings. The business kept up to Sunday's high water mark throughout the week.

Lon Chaney was featured as "Blizzard," the man with a twisted soul and a crippled body in "The Penalty" in both advertising and publicity, and the critics and public agreed that he gave a powerful gripping performance that surpassed in tenseness and skill his remarkable acting of the "Frog" in "The Miracle Man."

Tom Santschi was featured in the campaign for "The North Wind's Malice," Rex Beach's pulsating story of the great North Country, and his performance was enthusiastically received. Fans remembered him from an earlier Rex Beach film, "The Spoilers," and turned out in force.

"The Penalty," previous to its Detroit showing, enjoyed the distinction of being the first picture to be thrown on the screen of the new Capitol theatre, Redondo, Cal. The screening took place on Friday, July 30 before an invited audience of 500 persons, composed of members of the board of trade, the chamber of commerce and representative citizens of Redondo and other beach cities.

Empey Picture Adds to Orphanage Fund

Two hundred thousand dollars has been added to the fund being raised in Ruston, La., for the support of a state orphanage in that city, as the result of a motion picture, "Just Orphans," made by Arthur Guy Empey especially to increase interest in the fund and subscriptions to it.

Arrangements were made for the filming of a number of thrilling scenes with Mr. Empey in the role of both director and actor, admissions were sold to the field on which the scenes were taken, and fees collected from prominent citizens for the privilege of appearing in the picture.

Record Business Done by Chicago House

A record made by the Casino, one of Chicago's Madison Street movie houses, last week, is worthy of note, as showing what a business a small theatre can do with a big picture which is properly exploited, given adequate lobby display and well advertised. Mrs. Emma Cohn, who, by the way, is the only woman manager in Chicago's loop, reports that the Casino, which is a 284 seat house, last week did $4,030.01 worth of business during the showing of Universal's "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals."

"The Branding Iron" Is Expected to Score

Goldwyn officials anticipate that the directorial ability of Reginald Barker, united with capacity of J. G. Hawks, head of Goldwyn's scenario department, to turn out a perfect continuity will do much to instill into Reginald Barker's screen version of "The Branding Iron" those qualities that will make for a production of greatest box-office value. For sheer dramatic strength, emotional appeal and picturesqueness of setting Goldwyn's film version of "The Branding Iron" will rank, in the opinion of Goldwyn officials, with the greatest productions of the season.

Ideal Part for Star in Pinero's "Iris"

Pauline Frederick, starring in the screen adaptation of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's play, "Iris," now being produced for Robertson-Cole release, is said to be very enthusiastic over her part in the famous play. Director Henry Otto is equally delighted with the play and states that had Miss Frederick been in the playwright's mind, he could not have written a role better suited to her abilities.

A. S. Kirkpatrick Views Work at Los Angeles

A. S. Kirkpatrick, general manager of Robertson-Cole, arrived in Los Angeles August 9th for a stay of two weeks, to give his personal attention to production plans of this company and the completion of the big Robertson-Cole studios on Melrose avenue at Gower street, Hollywood.

Straw Vote Starts Sept. 19

Four Million to Vote in First National's Coming Test

THE week of September 19th is announced as the date set for the voting in the presidential straw ballot to be conducted by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., the details of whose arrangement for the distribution of ballot forms in motion picture theatres throughout the United States are now complete. Ballot forms to the number of 4,000,000 gauged by requisitions reaching 'Straw Vote Week' headquarters at 6 West 48th street, New York, are being printed, and the number will be increased as required to meet further requisitions in the period of ten days still remaining prior to the date of closing out requests.

With the addresses of the presidential and vice-presidential candidates now delivered, ample time before voting will have been allowed the public to assimilate and judge between the platforms and policies of the candidates in the interval to the date now announced for the ballot. The ballot form, in addition to the space set apart for votes for the respective candidates, provides also for a 'for' or 'against' vote on the leading referendum questions of the day (1) The League of Nations, (2) Modified Prohibition with light wines and beer, (3) Woman's suffrage. It is expected that the ballot will thus reveal the sentiment of some 4,000,000 to 5,000,000 motion picture theatre patrons in respect to these questions of public moment.

The magnitude of the project, of a scope unprecedented in motion picture annals, the anticipated natural eagerness of the public to obtain a comprehensive advance criterion of the sentiment of the country towards the candidates and the referendum questions mentioned, together with the volume of publicity which must necessarily accrue to their theatres from the interest the newspapers and public may well be expected to manifest in the results, combine to make the Straw Ballot week of value to the exhibitor, proof of which is forthcoming, it is pointed out, in the flood of requisitions reaching ballot headquarters. The first batch of requests alone is said to call for approximately 2,500,000 ballots.

The arrangement of the ballot form whereby the voters are classed under the heads of male and female is expected to provide an illuminative forecast of the way the female vote will go at the actual election and further to afford a means of determining, after the official returns are known next November, to what extent pre-election feminine opinion may have influenced the masculine vote.

This undertaking, it is pointed out, is non-partisan in its source and conduct, and carries the rigid provision, as specifically stated on the ballot form, that the names of voters (whose signatures are purely for the purposes of authenticity) will under no circumstances be used.

The exchanges of Associated First National report enthusiasm on the part of exhibitors appreciative of the importance of the undertaking, demonstrating, as it must, to the country, to the presidential candidates, to federal, state and municipal political bodies, as well as to the newspapers the influence and importance of motion picture theatres acting as a unit in a question of national moment, added to which is a realization of the extent to which his individual theatre will benefit by its participation in the undertaking. Shipments of slides, bulletins and ballot forms will be made in the order of receipts of application, starting this week with the first delivery of the printed forms from the press.

Culver City Showing Action

GRAHAM MOFFATT'S Scottish comedy, "Bunty Pulls the Strings," went into motion picture production at the Goldwyn West Coast studios here this week. Leatrice Joy has been selected to interpret the leading role of Bunty, the canny, bonnie Scotch lassie who quietly takes command and puts everything to rights. The comedy will be the next Reginald Barker Production and the director has assembled one of the most distinctive casts ever assembled for a picture.

Miss Joy was selected to play the title part because of her great success in "The Miracle Man" and the excellent account of herself which she has given in all of her other screen parts. Russell Simpson, who acted the father in Reginald Barker's production of "The Branding Iron" by Katherine Newlin Burr and has just finished acting the principal role in Mr. Barker's production of a Ben Ames Williams' sea story, as yet unnamed, has been cast for the role of Bunty's father. Raymond Hatton, a famous character comedian, will play Weelum; Cullen Landis who scored heavily in Rex Beach's "The Girl from Outside," and in Mary Roberts Rinehart's forthcoming release, "It's a Great Life," is cast for Rab; Casson Ferguson, who played the son in support of Pauline Frederick in Goldwyn's picturization of "Madame X," will act Jeemy. Edythe Chapman, of the Goldwyn stock company, is cast as Ellen and Josephine Crowell, well-known character woman, as Susie. Roland Russlon will be the pastor.

An elaborate setting will be given to the picture, a distinctive feature being an entire street in a Scotch village which is now in process of construction.

The cast was completed this week for Will Rogers' new picture, "The Guile of Woman," based upon Peter Clarke MacFarlane's story and which went into production on Monday at San Francisco under the direction of Clarence G. Badger. Mary Warren will play opposite the star while others in the cast are Robert Sprotte. Lionel Belmonte, Charles A. Smily, Nick Cogley, Doris Pawn, John Lince and Jane Starr.

Mason Litson this week started production on the seventh of Booth Tarkington's "Edgar" stories, featuring Johnny Jones. It will be known as "An African Interlude."

Mr. Litson has been succeeded as continuity editor by Paul Bern who has just arrived from New York where he assisted in directing Rex Beach's picture, "The North Wind's Malice." E. Mason Hopper is completing plans for Tom Moore's new stellar vehicle, "Canavan."

The Goldwyn scenario writers are particularly busy preparing continuity on new photoplays which will soon be put into production. Edfrid A. Bingham is writing continuity on an original scenario by Gouverneur Morris which has been given the tentative title "The Water Lily."

New Tom Mix Picture Scheduled for Sept.

Tom Mix, the daredevil Fox star, working for the first time under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn, has completed "The Untamed," adapted to the screen from Max Brand's novel of that name. The production is scheduled for release early in September.

When the novel, "The Untamed," published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, appeared it created a sensation among readers of popular literature because of its unusual theme and characters. It is said that nothing of the original appeal has been lost in its adaptation to the screen by H. P. Keeler.

"The Tiger's Coat" Set as Nov. Release

The Dial Film Company's picture "The Tiger's Coat," which is to be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in November is just finished, and it is claimed by Hodkinson to be in every respect an extraordinary production.

It is marked throughout by a number of remarkable scenic effects, and the interpretation of the story is in the hands of a capable cast of artists of which Tina Modotti, the Italian artiste, is the featured player. The direction was by Roy Clements.

Universal Names Its Personnel

To Carry Out Work of the Industrial Department

IN a statement just issued by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, announcement is made of the personnel which will have charge of the work to be done in the future by the Industrial Department of Universal Film. It is also stated that new and original plans for distribution of its subjects, production and other details are in order, and will be announced by executives of the department as they are completed.

Mr. Carl Laemmle has announced the appointment of L. H. Hartman of Chicago, as director-in-charge of the work of the department. Mr. Hartman has for years been a national figure as an analysist of merchandising and exploitation problems. He has been employed by the largest and most influential concerns in this capacity. For the duration of the war and for six months immediately after, Mr. Hartman was in charge of the Surplus Property Bureau at Washington. During this time he supervised the distribution and disposition of more than three billion dollars in surplus supplies, it is said.

Associated with Mr. Hartman in the direction of the Universal Industrial affairs will be Mr. George D. Uffner, formerly manager of the big "U" film exchange of New York City. Mr. Uffner's years of experience in the film field, coupled with the merchandising ability of Mr. Hartman, will mean that the Universal Industrial Department will hold its position as a leader in industrial and educational film production.

Walter V. Coyle and Lem F. Kennedy are in charge of all directorial activities.

Harry Forbes, for years one of the leading Universal cinematographers, has been placed in charge of production. Associated with Mr. Forbes in the management of this department are Hoey Lawler, animated cartoonist and technigraphist; Roswell Johnson, cameraman, who but recently completed a six months' tour of Sumatra, Java, and Borneo, and Al Mariner, cameraman.

Under the new regime, Donald H. Walk resumes the position that he formerly occupied as director of publicity for Universal's industrial department.

"Universal-Industrial pictures will reach the public only after they have received the same careful and painstaking production treatment given regular Universal productions," says Universal in a statement just issued. "Matters of timely interest, and stories of educational value will continue to be features of this department's production. These will be released to exhibitors under special arrangements to be announced later.

"Universal Industrial executives are now formulating a regular release schedule, by means of which a certain number of industrial and educational reels will be released each week. To exhibitors receiving these will be furnished posters, slides, literature, and other neccessities for the proper exploitation of the pictures when shown.

"Under its new management, the Universal Industrial Department will continue its relations with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, by which exhibitors of present Universal Industrial pictures will be paid direct for the service of their screen. Mr. Hartman said this week that he would have an important plan to present to exhibitors in this connection in the near future.

"The Industrial Department, according to Mr. Hartman will be expanded along several lines, taking up new and original film activities, service in which is not at present offered by any other company."

Serials Growing in Favor

Pathe's "Ruth of the Rockies" to Be Shown at High Price Theatres

"CHIEF among the outstanding features of the present conditions in the territory of the Indianapolis Branch, is the striking manner in which the serial pictures are being booked as attractions in the higher priced houses," said P. B. Elliott, Pathe's Indianapolis branch manager while in New York on a visit to the home office. "At our branch we are receiving contracts for "Ruth of the Rockies", the new Ruth Roland vehicle, from as high a percentage of the 25, 35 and 50 cent admission houses as we are from the theatres maintaining a lower price scale.

"The most logical thing to which to attribute this spread of the serial plays into theatres of the bigger class is the improved quality of the pictures themselves. Ruth Roland has always been a favorite and her fame has increased to such an extent that her popularity is not restricted to the confirmed serial enthusiasts alone, but she has become a star attraction for all theatres in all communities.

"As an indication this feature of the latest development in Pathe serials I might point out the Grand theatre, Washington, Ind. This theatre has long since established a reputation for the high quality of its program and its manner of presentation. It is a first run feature house and has presented the biggest features for years. The Grand has now contracted for "Ruth of the Rockies"

Edward Bowes Directs Theatre Division

Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol theatre, has been appointed director of theatres for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. He will be in entire charge of the theatre division and all matters pertaining thereto. He will have his office at Goldwyn headquarters, 469 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Carpentier Is Still Popular

Press Critics Admit Pugilist's Acting in Picture Is Surprise

PROOFS of the success being scored by "The Wonder Man," the Robertson-Cole super-special starring George Carpentier, the French war hero and heavyweight champion of Europe, continue to pour into the home office, according to the producers. Exhibitor reports and press comment are said to be unanimous in hailing the picture as an enjoyable novelty. Praise has been lavished on the producers for their foresight in playing up the celebrated boxer as a society hero instead of as a pugilist. This important question of policy alone has been responsible for the success of the film to an extraordinary extent.

Several newspaper reviewers admit their surprise at Carpentier's ability as an actor and they agree that should he give up the prize-ring he would have no difficulty in interpreting stellar roles for the screen.

last three weeks. Mr. Gibson attributes this to a new bonus system inaugurafed recently, whereby those who kept their mistakes within a certain footage were to receive a substantial bonus in the pay envelope on Saturday. The new system has resulted in a marked improvement in the work of all the printing machine operators and several of them have been winning the bonus regularly every week, and the one girl has not needed the margin allowed for mistakes—she hasn't misprinted a foot in three weeks.

H. J. Aldous, treasurer of the Rothacker Company, has returned to Chicago after several weeks in New York industrial office and C. P. Tobin, is also back at the plant after two months work on an industrial picture.

Universal Films Completed

Harry Carey in "Sundown Slim"; Lyons-Moran in "Once a Plumber"

TWO important features were completed at Universal City this week, and a third production is in its final scene. Harry Carey, after spending three weeks in the July heat of the Mojave Desert, where some remarkable scenes were secured for "Sundown Slim," returned to Universal City last week, where five or six days were spent in making interiors. Before leaving for the desert the company spent two weeks on ranch and railroad locations and gave "Sundown Slim" all the atmosphere provided by the author, H. Herbert Knibbs. Mr. Knibbs, by the way, accompanied the players on the various locations, and proved of great assistance to Val Paul, the director, in grasping the spirit as well as the plot of the story.

Carey was supported in "Sundown Slim" by Mignonne, Francis Conrad, Genevieve Blinn, Joseph Harris, Duke Lee, Charles LeMoyne, Otto Meyers, Ed Jones, J. M. Foster, Ted Brooks and Edward Price.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran added the finishing touch to the third of their five-reel comedy features, "Once a Plumber ——" and these lords of laughter are willing to stake their professional reputation on the promise that it will prove even more amusing than their current "La La Lucille."

Within a few days Reeves Eason will put the final period to his production of "Pink Tights," the story of the big tops by J. U. Giesy, prepared for the screen by Philip Hurn. Some fine circus scenes and balloon flights were secured for this picture, and the small New England town atmosphere was obtained by a number of specially built sets including an entire Massachusetts village.

European Star in Picture

Bruce Gordon Introduced to U. S. in "House of the Tolling Bell"

BRUCE GORDON, who, in September 5th, will be introduced to America as one of the stars in J. Stuart Blackton's "House of the Tolling Bell," released by Pathe, is one of Europe's younger motion picture stars.

Gordon, who is now only twenty-six, left his native heath in Johannesburg, South Africa, seven years ago, to study medicine and surgery in London. He won a reputation as a big game hunter in the Transvaal, and wanted to be an actor. Three years in London he devoted to the study of medicine and surgery, and with only another year before he would obtain his degree, but he quit to enter a motion picture studio. He appeared in "A Little Child Shall Lead Them," from the story by Bayard Rothe; "All Men Are Liars," by Joseph Hocking; "First Man in the Moon," one of H. G. Wells' greatest stories; and "Sowing and Reaping."

From London, Gordon went to Holland, where, for a time, he was starred in a series of pictures produced by the Hollandia Film Co. Then, last February, he came to America. Mr. Blackton engaged the young man, whose ability he had known by reputation, and immediately co-starred him with May McAvoy in "The House of the Tolling Bell."

This production is an adaptation of one of Edith Sessions Tupper's series of Louisiana stories.

Storm to Direct First Frohman-Gish Picture

Jerome Storm, who for two years has directed every picture in which Charles Ray has been starred, is to have the distinction of being the first director to produce a feature with Lillian Gish, other than David Wark Griffith.

Through arrangements with William H. Kemble, representing Storm Pictures, Inc., the noted director's own organization, Mr. Storm has been loaned to The Frohman Amusement Corporation, which recently placed Miss Gish under contract. Productions of the first Lillian Gish story, written by Anthony Kelly, will go into immediate rehearsals and active studio work will commence within two weeks. Arthur Jacobs negotiated the deal.

Two typical scenes from Mary Miles Minter's late Realart feature, "Sweet Lavender"

De Recat Finishes the First of Series

"The Holy Terror," the first of the two-reel comedies produced at Essanay Studio by Emil De Recat, was completed last Saturday, and it is understood two others will be made before any are released. It is intended to begin releasing in October. The star in this series of comedies now being produced is Mary Gates Blair, a young lady of nineteen, who has appeared in several of De Recat's stage productions.

Editor Condemns Publicity Methods

DRASTIC changes in the present methods practiced in the publicity departments of motion picture and other concerns that flood newspapers of the world with "copy" are prophesied in a recent statement by Edwin R. Collins, managing editor of the Los Angeles Evening Herald.

Mr. Collins has studied the film publicity game and has drawn two definite conclusions; first, that the present deluge of drivel is valueless to the concerns that send it out and tends to cheapen the standing of the motion picture industry; and, second, that the alleged news that is sent to the papers is not news at all, but words that are camouflaged and designed to tickle the vanity of film stars and executives.

Regarding the present flood of publicity from the standpoint of the editor, Collins declared that unless sweeping changes are effected in the realm of publicity and "intelligent stories are handled by highly trained men," sent out from the publicity offices, the newspapers of the nation "will soon pull up the bars against the press agent and get news of value through their own staff men. Ninety per cent of the supposed news stories," declared Mr. Collins, "are of the lightest sort of frivol, such as some star saving bird nests, or buying an automobile equipped with shower baths."

An article written by Benjamin B. Prager, president of the Mayflower Pictures Corporation, appeared in the Evening Record, following an introduction by Mr. Collins, in which Mr. Prager said that there was sufficient good news stories in filmdom to satisfy the demand without resorting to the press agent brand of publicity.

"Too many corporation heads," stated the Mayflower president, "require their publicity men to send out matter which features the corporation or some member of it to a degree which makes it impossible for this matter to be handled by the newspapers at all. The corporation who insists that the name of his concern must be made the most important detail of any publicity story is dooming the stuff that he sends out to find its way into the waste basket."

Twelve Reviews in this week's Plan Book

Metro Release Wins Favor

Critics Speak Well of London's "The Mutiny of the Elsinore"

IN a statement recently issued, Metro includes some of the laudatory comments uttered by the staff reviewers of several New York dailies in connection with its release, "The Mutiny of the Elsinore." The production, which is based on the well-known Jack London story, was presented at the Capitol Theatre, New York, during the week of August 1st. The following excerpts have been taken from the Metro statement referred to:

The Evening Post said this in so many words:

"Regrets are in order that Jack London did not live to furnish the screen with original plays of adventure. His was the visual imagination that the film must have, and his was the power to make his fiction not only dramatic but authentic, as though his better sight lay in the mind's eye."

The Morning Telegraph emphasizes the realism of the storm scenes and says:

"The depiction of old ocean in one of its angry moods battling with the elements is very effective."

The New York Tribune devoted some space to a consideration of the mode of presentation adopted by S. L. Rothapfel:

"As the final scene draws to a close, when the faithful partner of the owner of the Elsinore and first mate, John Pike, played by Mitchel Lewis, is dying, from somewhere behind the great curtains a mellow baritone voice sings the last few lines of 'Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep.' The storm at sea, during which the mutiny is in progress, which is made more realistic by the stage apparatus, is something unusual in theatricals."

The report in the Evening Telegram confined itself more strictly to the picture proper.

"As the rough and tumble fight in the crowded fo-castle was the big scene in 'The Sea Wolf,' so the melee on deck of the square-rigger during a howling storm is the 'knockout' in the latest production.

"This is the last word in realism."

Locklear Release at Once

Families of Dead Aviators Will Share in Profits of "Skywayman"

WHEN news of the accident to Lieut. Ormer Locklear and his pilot, Lieut. Milton Elliott, was received in New York, the board of directors of Fox Film Corporation held a special meeting and decided to give ten per cent of the profits of the exhibition of "The Skywayman" throughout America to the families of the aviators—to whom were sent a letter expressing the sympathy of Fox Film Corporation, and also notifying them of the company's intention.

In order that this money may be handed to the families as soon as possible, "The Skywayman," which was to have been released late in October, will be put before the public at once. A print of the picture has been rushed East. Preparations have been made to issue an elaborate plan book for exhibitors. Poster designs have been put in the artist's hands. The picture will be in the theatres before the end of August.

At the funeral at Hollywood, Cal., on Thursday, aviators flying in military formation dropped flowers along the route. The heroes were given military honors, two posts of the American Legion, with a malitary band, attending the ceremony. Actors, directors and other motion picture people were pallbearers. They included Tom Mix, William Russell, Sol Wurtzel, J. P. Hogan, Scott Dunlap and L. Seydel.

Old-Time Melodies as for Ray Production

As an aid in the exploitation of the forthcoming Charles Ray release, "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," Maurice Richmond, Inc., of 145 West 45th street, New York, one of the best known music publishers in the country, has begun work on a special Charles Ray edition of those two tuneful melodies, "So Long Mary," and "Mary's a Grand Old Name," as they were sung by Fay Templeton in the original stage production.

Mr. Richmond spoke as follows concerning the new edition of the old-time airs:

"This special edition will be circulated everywhere that the picture is shown, which, I understand, will be in virtually every city, town and hamlet. My representatives throughout the country, cooperating with the First National's exchange managers, will make every effort to meet the demand which I am certain will be widespread."

Educators Hail Universal "Cannibal" Film

Educators in Toronto, Canada, were greatly impressed by the picture "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," the Universal South Sea feature, when it was presented at a private showing by Clair Hague in the Allen theatre, last week.

Hon. R. H. Grant, minister of education in the Ontario Legislature, was keenly interested from start to finish. "It is a most interesting picture," he said.

Dr. John Noble, chairman of the Toronto Board of Education, was equally impressed. "I think the picture is an object lesson which any person, educational or otherwise, would appreciate. It has strong educational value and its scenes are very beautiful."

According to Metro, Ina Claire will give a demonstration of the secret dance of India, called the "nautch," in her forthcoming appearance in "Polly with a Past." The distributing corporation further states that it is due to instruction of Dr. H. R. M. Maddock, a retired British officer of the Indian army, and one of the few whites who have ever seen this dance executed, that Miss Claire will be able to give a genuine demonstration of the secret dance.

Takes Final Scene of "Virgin of Paris"

Harry Raver is putting the finishing touches to "The Virgin of Paris," an adaptation of Anthony Hope's novel. Following the book closely, the spirit of the author's story has been retained. While many of the principal scenes are laid in an imaginary country, called Kravonia, close attention has been given to designing the costumes and settings according to Anthony Hope's description, as well as the selection of the two thousand or more types used in the production.

Restaurateur Becomes 'Frisco Exhibitor

Charles Newman, restauranteur, of San Francisco, has entered the motion picture exhibition field. Mr. Newman, who conducted the College Inn, has taken over the Sun Theatre, and has named it after his food emporium. Pathe features are to be shown exclusively in the Newman house, according to that company, and the theatre will be redecorated to resemble a regular college inn, having a unique interior.

"Rio Grande" will be shown the opening week at the new theatre.

Harry Berman on Tour of Exchanges

Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal, is at present on an inspection trip in which he plans to see that the Universal branches are in apple-pie order for the coming fall season.

"Service Corps" Established

Hemmer's Plan Seeks to Ascertain What "Fans" Want

WHAT is said to be a determined effort to ascertain as accurately as possible what "movie fans" desire in the way of motion picture plays has been planned by Edward Hemmer, president, Hemmer Superior Productions, Inc. He has announced the establishment of a department to be known as the "Service Corps," the purpose of which will be to carry out the project. Members of the organization together with volunteers who are experts in the motion picture field will cooperate.

No particular type of story or star is to be featured in Hemmer Productions, according to the director, and every effort is to be made to establish a contact system through the new arm that will enable him to keep his finger on the public pulse, thereby assuring accurate interpretation of the attitude of motion picture devotees as to the sort of plays desired.

He pointed out that experience had taught him the first essential was to give the people what they want, and in that manner response will be made to popular demand.

The formation of the "Service Corps" marks the embarkation of the organization upon the novel enterprise, and has already been adopted and partially put into operation. The members of the corps are men of wide experience in the silent drama and in dealing with the public it will be their duty to sense the trend of public thought with regard to motion pictures in every section of Greater New York. The system will not be put into full operation for several months, it was said, but a concentrated drive upon Broadway houses has been inaugurated and if results justify further extension of the scheme, it will be generally adopted in leading houses throughout the Greater City.

A regular program will be mapped out each day, certain houses being assigned to one or more individuals. Their duty will be to listen for comment upon the picture being displayed and to get as many opinions and convictions emanating from the public as possible.

It is Mr. Hemmer's attitude that the successful operation of the project will enable him to learn the class of screen story desired. He said he intends guiding his work according to reports made by the investigating body and if the information desired is forthcoming, the system will be more intensively and extensively applied.

"I am endeavoring to live up to the pledge given the public to produce pictures that meet with public approval," he said when discussing the plan. "The old method of signing up a star and then manufacturing a story to fit his screen capabilities has been cast into the discard by the progressive producer of today. Under practices of an older day in motion picture production the public was obliged to put up with this sort of abuse. They had absolutely nothing to say, although they paid the bills.

"This condition naturally grew out of the enormous demand for this variety of entertainment. The demand for pictures was so great and pressing there was a wild scramble on the part of exhibitor and producer to supply pictures whether they had merit or not. The public wanted pictures and they had to have them.

"A change has come about, however, and although the demand is as great as ever, the public has become more exacting. Accordingly the demand now is for good pictures. Many a house located in the heart of motion picture communities has failed because of the tendency of the exhibitor to force upon his patronage a poor class of show.

"I am firmly convinced that my system will overcome this situation and result in better business for motion picture establishments wherever Hemmer Superior Productions are being shown."

British Manager on the Coast

Major Chas. Bell Sees Lasky Studios at Hollywood

MAJOR CHARLES H. BELL, who is scheduled to take the place of Milton E. Hoffman, as general-manager of the London studio of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., is now in Hollywood, pursuing his mission of inspection of American production centers and their methods before returning to Europe.

"On my trip West," said Major Bell, I stopped off in St. Louis, Denver and other cities to visit the theatres and talk with exchange men. I had one object—to learn the American public's point of view regarding British production. I was overwhelmed with the hospitable treatment accorded me and encouraged by the replies given me.

"The pictures we make will show Americans what Europe is actually like. It is the hope of every Englishman—every sphere of life in England is striving to help—to create a liaison with the United States that can not be broken. In no way can this be more intelligently and more permanently done than by motion-pictures. When pictures made at our London studios are shown in this country, Americans will know the truth about England, just as Englishmen now know the truth about America through seeing American motion pictures.

"Our films will show English homes, people and settings. And when we screen historical places we must go into detail in titles and prologues to let Americans know what those places actually are and what they stand for.

"There is nothing to stop us from making the same class of pictures as are made at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. That is our aim and to accomplish it we are striving to learn American production methods as quickly as possible. Our plant is really like a bit of Hollywood. Our studio, by the way, is in the suburb of Islington, but is only five minutes ride from the center of London.

"In our carpenter shop we have much the same equipment as here at the Lasky studio. Our electrical equipment is really remarkable. It develops 6000 amperes, 125 volts, direct current. We have four big generators weighing six tons each.

"London fogs are not what they once were, but we have taken them into consideration too. For some reason, they are not so frequent nor do they last so long as they did ten years ago. But our fog-condensing machine will do away with all fog in our studio in five minutes. It is worked by high and low pressure steam with exhaust pans working in conjunction.

"A pet theme with me is artistry in pictures. Cecil B. DeMille is known for the perfection of his artistry and we in England follow his films closely. Artistically perfect pictures—that is the ideal towards which we shall strive.

"To gain good lighting effects, we have purchased a huge tank engine, which, with its accompanying equipment, will subsidize the London daylight and make it into sunlight. For our art direction we have two capable men, both of whom are contributors to the Royal Academy.

"But we have many things to learn, particularly in laboratory work. In developing, printing, art titles and the like, we are comparatively weak. Yet we can learn and are learning.

"We have done something that will be welcome, I am sure. Our pictures will be creators of fashions! And that is a big thing, for people nowadays are living in a whirl of fashion with everyone striving to be in style.

"We have opened an establishment in Paris, where will be designed costumes which the world will not wear for eighteen months or two years. Prints showing these designs are to be sent us in London by aeroplane-post, and the next day we will go through them and decide which are suitable for use in our motion pictures. Measurements of our artists are taken and in a week we can have the creations in our studio.

Rushing Work on Big Plant

Arthur Smith Aims at Rapid Completion of Long Island Studios

ARTHUR VICTOR SMITH, general-manager of the Eastern studios for Famous Players-Lasky, is concentrating all forces on the rapid completion of the new Long Island studios. This plan is being followed in order to relieve the heavy demand that has been made upon the facilities of the other New York studios. "October First or 'Bust'" has been made the slogan in the drive for the hasty culmination of the work on the new plant. Following is a statement just issued by Famous Players-Lasky which sets forth the progress already made on the new building:

"Over half the Cooper-Hewitt banks, which will operate from monorails, overhead are in place. The huge spotlights, Cooper-Hewitt banks and Kleigs are standing by ready for use.

"In the carpenter shop the heavy machinery is assembled and the property rooms are already being stocked. An enormous scene dock at the rear of the main stage is in readiness. The still department will be complete inside of two weeks and it will have an output of times and stills a day. The wardrobe department is in readiness to occupy the new quarters at a moment's notice. The general offices of the auditing, accounting, cashier, casting and purchasing departments are completed except for the installation of the fixtures and furniture.

"Complete plans for the decoration and furnishing of the suites which have been provided for the stars, to make them decorative, comfortable and at the same time contain every possible convenience, are now under way. These suites will consist of a secretary's room, reception, dressing room, bath room and huge closets.

"It is Mr. Smith's plan to change the staff from the New York studio to the Long Island City studio, overnight. The various departments such as the still department and carpenter ship will have to work in gradually until everything is in good working order."

Hutchinson Goes to Europe

President of American Film to Make Trip on "Flying A" Business

S. S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Company, left Chicago, Friday on the Century and is scheduled to sail from New York on the Adriatic for Southampton. Mr. Hutchinson expects to remain abroad for the next month looking after the interests of "Flying A" foreign business, as his company now is devoting production activities to super specials, which, he reports, are interesting foreign buyers, thereby necessitating his taking up these matters at close range, especially since he has not visited his London offices since December, 1918.

Through contracts with Cinematographes most of the Continent is cared for, including Belgium, Spain, Portugal, the Central Powers, Italy, Switzerland, Greece, and also Egypt and India. The Scandinavian countries are represented by John Olson and Company. India, according to the American Film, is waking up to moving picture attractions, although only second hand prints were used there recently. A very good Indian contract has been closed lately.

The American has maintained for many years a London sales office and show rooms where prints are taken care of, and also a laboratory at Croydon, England. An outstanding item of interest regarding in the "Flying A" offices abroad is that there, as in this country, they are noted for their fine printing.

Kelly's Plan A Big Success

"Free Demonstration" Proposal Interest Hundreds of Exhibitors

JAMES B. KELLY, known to the trade as "Smiling Jimmy," is, according to latest reports, in a high state of enthusiasm over the manner in which his recently announced "five weeks free demonstration" of his company's product to exhibitors was greeted. In addition to receiving congratulatory letters from many independent exchanges, he has received hundreds of telegrams from exhibitors. On account of the fact that most of the inquiries have come from New York and vicinity the directors of the company have decided to extend the time for exhibitors to file their application for the five weeks free demonstration until September 1.

Mr. Kelly announces that what pleases him especially is the fact that many of the larger circuits throughout the country are coming in with their entire circuits. He further states that his company is one of the strongest financially in the industry and will positively not be obliged to rely on exhibitors' money in the shape of deposits, to finance themselves. He also added that he believed he would be in a position to make further announcement by next week regarding definite decisions relative to his product and the manner in which it would be distributed, but just to show how close they were going to stick to the actual needs of the exhibitors, he insinuated that part of this product would contain a Novelty News Pictorial with distributing features that would place this subject in the hands of every exhibitor in the same manner that he receives his morning newspaper.

The work on the studios and laboratory is rapidly advancing, it is said, and Mr. Kelly states that they will be releasing by the first week in October, although he does not expect any of the "real big stuff" until November.

Hodkinson Release Pleases

"The Silent Barrier" Lauded as Antidote to Hot-Weather Spell

MANY interesting reports are said to have been received at the Home Offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, in regard to "The Silent Barrier," the Arthur F. Beck-Charles C. Burr production which they have recently released. It seems that the locale of this story is in the Swiss Alps, and the scenes were "shot" at Saranac Lake and embody some of the most beautiful scenic effects ever screened. These locations, bringing as they do the breath of the great Northland, have been peculiarly pleasing to audiences throughout the United States during the existing torrid spell and many expressions of pleasure have been conveyed to exhibitors who have shown this great picture.

It would appear then that "The Silent Barrier," possesses just the qualifications for summer screen entertainments. There was a time when it was thought that only light, frothy comedies would fill the bill, but intelligent audiences tire of such things even when the mercury is hovering around the top of the glass. "The Silent Barrier" is a great step in the right direction, says W. W. Hodkinson. The story is strong and the scenes bring to the heated mind a sense of blessed relief with their snow-clad mountains and icy rivers.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation believes it has a strong selling point in this picture, and the exhibitor in turn can appeal strongly to his audiences with it.

Film Is Said to Excel Play

Conway Tearle in "Whispering Devils" is Well Liked Abroad

EQUITY PICTURES, producers of "Whispering Devils," Conway Tearle's latest release, and the Inter-Ocean Film Co., buyers of all the foreign rights to the picture, are being highly complimented on this production.

The buyers of the English rights to "Whispering Devils" have had the first say as to the merits of the picture. The picture is an adaptation of the English play "Michael and His Lost Angel," by the British dramatist, Henry Arthur Jones. The play had a long run on the English stage several years ago. While the plot is almost strictly adhered to in the picture, the consensus of opinion is that the screen adaptation affords scenic effects, stage setting and realistic background that the stage could not approach. The vast moor of the Highlands, the stretches of meadow and forest, and the moonlight scenes of the Isle of Man, where most of the action takes place, have been declared by all buyers alike to be the finest photography and setting that they had ever seen.

Other foreign buyers—experts representing practically every foreign country in Europe, and the South American states—Holland, France, Belgium Switzerland, etc., and Argentine, Urugay, Paraguay, Peru, Chile and Ecuador in South America, are said to have hailed "Whispering Devils" as a triumph in motion-picture art, and as as achievement in expert adaptation.

National Film Prepares for Seiter Feature

In preparation for the forthcoming feature production to be directed by William A. Seiter, the National Film Corporation of America is putting its West Coast plant in working order. The entire physical units to be occupied by the Seiter production is being renovated, improved and generally cleaned up.

Director Seiter will commence on his first production under his new National agreement about September first. Details as to the name of the story to be filmed are lacking, but it is understood that it will be a screen adaptation of a story to be published soon in one of the weeklies.

Rex Taylor has been engaged to write the continuity for the feature. Mr. Taylor adapted "Twin Beds" for the screen. He was formerly on the Goldwyn staff.

A. Levine Made Gen'l Mgr.

Promotion by Sterling Film Corp. Comes as Reward for Good Service

PHIL GOLDSTONE of the Sterling Film Corporation, which has ranked for the last six years as one of the most successful independent exchanges, in the Middle West, announces in a letter just received that A. Levine has been elected vice-president and general manager of the Sterling Corporation "in recognition of capability and conscientious service."

Mr. Goldstone asserts that Levine's success since his entry into the picture field is due primarily to the fact that the newly elected vice-president has diligently applied strictly "business principles to the film business." He writes:

"Mr. Levine's entry into the film business took place about a year ago and his success has been due to his applying business principles to the film business. He believes and has followed out in practice, the theory that every customer of an exchange is entitled to one hundred per cent value for his money and that it is much better policy to give the exhibitor a little more rather than a little less.

"Mr. Levine is a conscientious reader of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and he claims that part of his success is due to the fact that he carefully notices the ideas and working plans of other exchange men and he especially notes the advertising notes used by the exhibitors and tries to apply these same advertising ideas for the benefit of the customers of the Sterling Film Corporation."

Mr. Goldstone further declares that the field for the independent exchange becomes daily more encouraging, due to trade-paper cooperation, better releases available on the state-rights market and the exhibitors' support of the independent distributors and producers in the industry.

New Star is Busy on Coast

Fritzie Ridgeway Making Fourth Two-Reel Drama for Capital Film

FRITZIE RIDGEWAY, who has appeared in support of Wm. S. Hart in many of his most sucessful screen plays, is to become a star in her own right, according to an announcement made by the Capital Film Company of Chicago. Miss Ridgeway now is at work on the Coast, at her own studio, preparing the fourth of a series of twelve two-reel dramas, for release during the coming year.

Capital Film signed the young star, who has scarcely turned twenty, to a long term contract many months ago, but no announcement was made at the time of her new connection as the Capital executives wanted to lay a firm foundation for Miss Ridgeway before they disclosed the fact that she was to appear as a star.

In pictures already made with Miss Ridgeway as a star, Capital directors discovered that she was very versatile and while she was originally accepted as a "Western type," in her new series she has been taken away from the western atmosphere in a number of cases.

Miss Ridgeway's dramas are of the robust, out-door type. There is a rollicking swing to all of them. From the general make-up of the films already finished in which Miss Ridgeway appears, the people backing her are confident of a long and successful stellar career for "The Girl With a Thousand Personalities."

Joan Serial Is Said to Have Strong Plot

The plot of "The Invisible Ray," the Joan Film serial, has constituted one of the main subjects of discussion among states-rights buyers recently, it is said. One man stated the plot of this serial could be taken out and used for a feature production for any star with good results. As it is, "The Invisible Ray" is said to have the wizardry of serial-stunts and startles galore, with the additional feature of a theme that can hold its own agains a story of love and suspense.

Shipman Widens Activities

In One Year He Extends Control from One to Fourteen Features

FROM the management of one production, to that of fourteen is Ernest Shipman's achievement during the current year. The fall of 1919 found him located at 6 West 48th Street with but one feature, namely "Back to God's Country" to care for. This feature was built upon the producing principles Ernest Shipman had been preaching through the trade papers for the last few years, and a continuance of the same principles will be applied to other productions with which he is identified.

The fourteen attractions which he will exploit for the coming season will include six from the Catherine Curtiss Corporation, regarding which this company will make its own detailed announcements in due season.

James Oliver Curwood is following his "Back to God's Country" with "Nomads of the North" and to perpetuate features of this calibre has incorporated his own producing company known as James Oliver Curwood Productions, Inc.

The business men of Calgary, Canada, were so pleased over the dividends from "Back to God's Country" that they formed a new producing corporation known as Northern Pictures Corporation, Ltd., with contracts in hand for the making of two of the Ralph Connor stories, namely "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" and "The Patrol of the Sun Dance Trail." D. C. Campbell resigned as secretary of the Calgary Board of Trade to organize this company and is its president.

At Winnipeg, Canada, a group of millionaires have organized The Winnipeg Productions, Ltd., for the purpose of making "The Foreigner," by Ralph Connor, a story of the Red River Country, which is now in course of production. This company is under the direction of Henry MacRae, who holds the responsible position of supervising director for these Canadian producing units.

Jans Has Big Press Book

Elaborate Book to Aid Exhibitor Exploit "Wings of Pride"

AN elaborate campaign book is to be made available for exhibitors by Jans Pictures, Inc., on the Olive Tell feature "Wings of Pride". It is said to be full of material that will be of great help in putting the picture over in a big way. There are a number of unusual newspaper stories contained in this press book, said to be of the sort that editors of motion picture columns and pages in the dailies will be glad to use.

Advertising layouts, for which cuts are supplied, have been done by an artist who knows his business thoroughly and a copy writer who has had wide experience in planning the sort of advertisements that bring in the business. The art work and copy of these advertisements have been made to blend perfectly and are of the kind that will show up well in the papers.

The exploitation suggestions outlined in the Jans press book for "Wings of Pride" are up to date, and all can be put over without any great expense. There are ideas suitable for the lobby, for street stunts, for merchant tie-ups and a hundred and one ways in which the exhibitor can strive to get extra business on this feature.

The campaign book on "Wings of Pride" is said to be well printed throughout and should prove of benefit to every theatre manager who books this picture.

Insert for Lobby Display

Four-Page Ad. Prepared for Lobby Use to Advertise Kremer Release

A COMMUNICATION from the office of Victor Kremer announces that the forthcoming four-page ad of his big state-right production, "Voices", sample prints of which have been shown to quite a few buyers recently, will be added as a special attraction to the regular lobby display. The following statement has been issued from the Kremer headquarters in connection with this display:

"The insert is in colored effects, symbolic of the story of the picture. In describing this work of art, we quote Doctor Lamberger, under whose direction the same has been prepared.

"The idea is taken from the composite of Nature's forces, such forces as often exercise their play on the Indian Ocean. A thundercloud, full of incessant sound and fire, lightening and darkening so rapidly that it seems to have life, and delight in its life. At the same hour, the sky clears to the west, and all along the sea-line springing and sinking as to music, a restless dance or chase of summer lightenings across the lower sky. A race and riot of lights, beautiful and rapid as a course of shining Oceanides along the tremulous floor of the sea. Eastward, at the same moment the space of clear sky is higher and wider, a splendid semi-circle of too intense purity to be called blue; it is of no color nameable by man. And midway in it, between storm and the sea hangs the motionless full moon; like Artemis watching with serene splendor of scorn, the battle of Titans and the revel of the nymphs. Underneath and about us, the sea is paved with flame, the whole water trembles and hisses with phosphoric fire.

"In the same heaven and at the same hour, there shines at once the three contrasted glories, golden and fiery and white, of moonlight and of double lightenings forked and sheet; and under all this miraculous heaven, lies the flaming floor of water.

"Such in symbol is Chester De Vonde's great production, 'Voices', released by Victor Kremer."

Arrow Emphasizes Title

Believes "Bachelor Apartments" Can Be Exploited in This Way

THAT much of the success of a picture is due to its title, and that the title is the biggest box office asset are two phrases contained in a statement issued by Arrow this week in referring to one of their fall releases, namely "Bachelor Apartments."

This distributing company points out that the title selected for the five reel comedy by that name contains advertising and exploitation possibilities never before used. It so happens that at the present time the housing situation is most prominent in the minds of citizens of practically every large city of the United States. Practically every large city, newspaper reports say, has an insufficient number of apartments available to citizens. It is therefore, self evident that the title of this five reel comedy is most timely. It will strike a responsive chord in a large percentage of the population of every city.

Many exploitation ideas have been incorporated in Arrow's press book on "Bachelor Apartments."

The picture was directed by Johnny Walker and written by Walter Richard Hall. It stars Georgia Hopkins, and included in the splendid supporting cast are Frederick Howard, a well known young leading man, George Dupree, George Reynolds, Joseph Donahue and Edward Favor.

A New Comedy Series Coming

Independent Films to Distribute "Pinnacle Comedies"

ONE new item which will go far toward adding to the ever-growing strength and variety of the independent field of film productions is announced by Eddy Eckels, general manager of the Independent Films Association of Chicago.

This will be a series of twenty-four two-reel comedies now being produced by Calumet Productions, Inc. The name, "Pinnacle Comedies," has been selected for the reason that the Calumet company has leased space at the studio of the Pinnacle Productions, Inc., at Glendale, Calif., where the Neal Hart Specials are being made.

O. W. Moore, general manager of the Calumet Company, was in Chicago this week completing arrangements for the distribution of the comedies. He stated that he believed the Independent Films Association was the one logical concern to handle his output.

"These comedies will get far from the stereotyped idea of two-reel comedy material," said Mr. Moore. "We are working with an absolutely new inspiration. Pinnacle Comedies will be the most distinctive output of the sort ever attempted. My directors have been impressed with the clever, distinctive manner in which the Independent Films Association has been handling its distribution, together with the mammoth and original exploitation methods it has worked out. We feel that the association will do full justice to its opportunities with our productions."

A clue to the idea back of Pinnacle Comedies is afforded by Eddy Eckels. "Exhibitors," said Mr. Eckels, "have seen and played every possible variety in the comedy line—except just one! That one is Pinnacle.

"The most popular comedies are those featuring pretty girls, striking costumes and clever stories. The Calumet people have taken those three well known ingredients and added a something which I cannot put into words, but it will delight you when you see it. All I can shout now is that the pretty girls are more than pretty, the striking costumes are ultra-striking and the stories are woven into a central theme that will be carried forward from one release to another in a way that is going to take the public by storm.

"My prediction is that these comedies will leap overnight into the grandest popularity ever achieved by short-reel stuff. They will build to a positive box-office demand. They will sparkle with class and life and quality and cleverness and beauty of a sort to yield a kick to the tired-est business man that ever glared at a screen. We are mighty glad to have the handling of Pinnacle Comedies, because they represent, at last, something new under the sun."

Pinnacle Comedies will be released at the rate of one every two weeks beginning in about sixty days.

Lefcourt Explains Success

Co-operation Cause of Pioneer's Growth Says President

ATTRIBUTING the growth of the Pioneer Film Corporation to its policy of co-operating with the exhibitor to the fullest extand taking cognizance of the part the exhibitor plays in the development of the motion picture industry, A. E. Lefcourt, president of Pioneer, recently outlined his views on conditions and told of the plans of Pioneer for the new season.

In Mr. Lefcourt's opinion the coming season will be from all indications the biggest in the history of the industry. "This is but a natural condition," said Mr. Lefcourt. "The exhibitors are realizing more every day that only the legitimate operations of those that are part of the industry can spell success for them as well as for others. The day is near at hand when the exhibitor will awaken to a full realization of his rights as a business man".

Mr. Lefcourt says that the growth of Pioneer and the development of its twenty-three exchanges throughout the United States and Canada has come about through three outstanding features: The first of these is by the distribution and handling of pictures of quality; pictures of sterling worth; pictures with appeal to the majority. Secondly—as a result of the service given by Pioneer to its clientele which is made up of exhibitors, large and small, and which service represents the conscientious efforts of experts of their particular line; and thirdly, the fact that Pioneer and its general staff of specialists must give approval to a picture before Pioneer makes any move to offer it and distribute it to the exhibitors throughout the country, assures the exhibitor of the maximum in value and eliminates all risk in connection with the booking of a Pioneer picture.

"You see," continued Mr. Lefcourt, "the Pioneer operates along different lines than those of other concerns. We believe that there is room for improvement in the motion picture industry, but this improvement can only come about if all forces grasp the necessity of doing business along businesslike lines. We have made some big plans for the next season. Our exchanges now cover practically every part of the United States and Canada. Our pictures are bigger than ever before. They represent the work of the most successful directors in the field. The artists are known wherever the cinema is known, and the plays are big things, and consequently we feel confident that Pioneer is on the eve of the most successful period since its inception".

Arthur S. Kane — Bessie Love — Andrew J. Callaghan

Federated Closes Big Deal

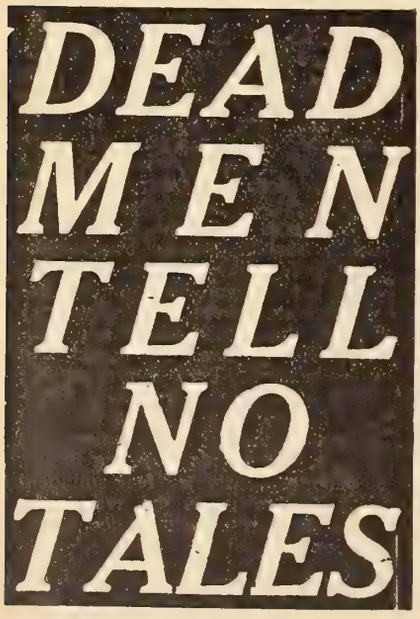
New Organization to Handle Callaghan Productions

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, general manager of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., has issued an announcement stating that contracts have been closed between the Federated and the Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., whereby the Federated secures the Bessie Love Productions for the United States and Canada.

Ever since the Andrew J. Callaghan Productions announced that they were going to make a series of pictures starring Bessie Love, speculation has been rife as to the distributing medium they would adopt. The closing of the contract today between Dr. Shallenberger representing the Federated and Arthur S. Kane, representing Andrew J. Callaghan, marks a distinct step forward in the independent field for it means that America will handle the distribution of the pictures of one of America's most popular stars and thus make it possible for the independent exhibitor to secure these pictures on the open market.

Arthur S. Kane is one of the best known figures in the motion picture industry and has had as wide and varied experience in the distributing end of the business as any man in motion pictures today. Mr. Kane will be remembered as the man who organized and launched Realart prior to making his present affiliations, and the fact that he has chosen the Federated as the releasing medium of the Bessie Lov Productions is said to prove that the day of the independent has arrived.

Just how this arrangement is looked upon by the principals in the transaction is shown by the following extract from the letter of Mr. Callaghan to Dr. Shallenberger regarding the closing of this contract:



"I desire to take this occasion to express to you my gratification that the Bessie Love Productions are to be released through your organization.

"Let me say that before authorizing Mr. Kane to conclude contracts whereby the Federated is to handle these productions in the United States and Canada, I made it a point to meet the majority of the exchangemen composing your organization. I am very pleased to state that it was the result of this investigation on my part which convinced me that your organization was beyond the shadow of a doubt the best fitted releasing medium for any producer who desired to have his products handled by the highest type of men in the business and who wants to feel assured that his product will receive the widest possible distribution unhampered by affiliations with any other producer's products."

Miss Love, upon learning of the signing of the contract whereby Federated will release her productions wired them as follows: "Have just been advised of your closing contract with Andrew J. Callaghan Attractions, Incorporated, whereby Federated is to release my pictures. I desire to express my sincere pleasure over this arrangement for I know from letters received from exhibitors from all parts of the United States that it will prove a highly satisfactory arrangement to them."

It is the object of the Andrew J. Callaghan Productions to supply Miss Love with vehicles selected from the works of well known authors which have been popularized by wide distribution as novels. Miss Love's first production "Bonnie May" is from the widely read novel of the same name by Louis Dodge, which was published by Chas. Scribners Sons and her second production, "The Midlanders" is from the novel of Charles Tenney Jackson, which was published by Bobs Merrill. The Federated contract calls for a series of four features a year.

The Federated state that they intend to give the Bessie Love Productions the benefit of the widest advertising and exploitation campaign ever used for an independent release. A complete line of advertising accessories including many novelties are now being prepared by the Federated in association with the Andrew J. Callaghan Company.

Fine Arts' Release Announced

"The Woman He Chose" Wins Favor With Reviewers

"THE Woman He Chose", described by Fine Arts to be "a tense, emotional drama based on one of the most unique stories of modern fiction", will be distributed by Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., through state right exchanges, according to an announcement by Murray W. Garsson, president of Fine Arts. The picture is an adaptation from the story, "The Girl from the Marshcroft", written by Selma Lagerlof, the only woman ever awarded the Nobel prize for literature.

The National Board of Motion Picture Review selected this picture as representative of the highest advancement in motion-pictures of the present day, states Fine Arts. During a pre-release showing in the Loop theatre of Chicago, the picture drew what is declared to be the biggest crowds in the history of the theatre.

Speaking of the production, Mr. Garsson said:

"In distributing this production we believe that we are keeping our promise to the state right buyers and exhibitors to provide them with pictures of the highest calibre. Our opinion is backed by the opinions of the best known critics in America, everyone of them who have seen the picture declaring it of the highest standard in every way.

"The picture is based on a masterpiece of fiction, a story recognized by authors and critics as one of the highest standard of excellence. Its unusual theme offers innumerable exploitation angles, and this, coupled with its artistic photography and superb direction, should make the picture away the average from a box office standpoint.

"What the critics think of the picture is evident from the free use of superlatives by Chicago's most hypercritical dramatic editors. Mae Tines, of the Chicago Tribune, says: 'It is a great picture. Scenery and settings are a delight and the photography is fine'.

"Virginia Dale, of the Chicago Daily Journal, says, 'Never has a photoplay been presented of more splendid quality'.

"Genevieve Harris, of the Chicago Evening Post, says: 'It is a credit to its producers. Very few pictures can measure up to its dramatic and artistic settings. Its director had a great story to work with and he has presented it with a simplicity and sincerity which is most effective. The players seem to live their parts'.

"'Observer' of the Chicago Herald and Examiner says: 'Only Griffith has surpassed its director in laying hold of your imagination and intellect. While it features Sex, it does so without salaciousness or insinuation, being frank, moral and bitterly truthful. Once before I climbed on the housetops and ballyhooed that this was one of the finest film plays of all time. Seeing it again, I roost on the same flagpole'.

"W. K. Hollander, of the Chicago Daily News, says: 'The picture is deserving of generous patronage by reason of its unpretentiousness, its simplicity of construction and the intensely realistic conduct of its players'.

"Bob Reel, of the Chicago American, says: 'It goes across so well that you feel yourself a part of it'.

"No picture on record has received more unanimous praise from the daily press and the same stands good among the trade magazines.

"After attending a press showing in New York the critic from the Motion Picture News said. 'It carries heart interest and is portrayed by a company of actors whose naturalness of characterization equals any of the best'.

"The Moving Picture World says: 'An excellently-made picture, well produced, wonderful types having been selected. The story is of universal appeal'.

"The critic of Wid's says: 'Presents a Griffith atmosphere and leaves nothing to be desired in the way of good production. If you are looking for something different, combined with the artistic and beautiful, get this'.

"The critic from Variety said, 'The Woman He Chose", should prove a box office attraction of unusual value'.

"'The Woman He Chose' is an achievement to which any producer might point with pride', is the opinion of the Exhibitor's Trade Review."

Urban Introduces Spirograph

Sees in It a Valuable Aid to Education and Industry

AFTER more than ten years of continuous efforts, repeated disappointments and frequent financial losses, Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America and author of Urban's "Movie Chats," is now introducing to the motion-picture industry a new type of film-record and projection apparatus which is expected to augment to an almost unlimited extent the educational and industrial possibilities of the motion-picture. The name "Spirograph" has been adopted to indicate the innovations recently perfected by Henry W. Joy, chief consulting engineer for Mr. Urban.

The Spirograph film-record is disc-shaped and transparent like the ordinary film strip. The individual frames of the picture are arranged in consecutive order just as on the regulation strip. However, these consecutive frames run in circular fashion, the frames for the first part of the picture being found on the outter edge of the Spirograph disc and then running in concentric circles—like the loops in the mainspring of a clock—until the center is approached. The images in these frames are greatly reduced in size, thus permitting a greater number of frames to be included in the area of the film-disc. The projection apparatus on which this film-disc is revolved for screening can be stopped without danger of fire. Hence, only two frames are needed at most for a sub-title. On this basis, it is estimated that on the standard disc of 10½ inches in diameter as many frames can be included as would take up 100 feet of the ordinary ribbon film. Mr. Urban says a disc can be removed from the projector and a new one replaced in four seconds, as there are no complicated adjustments to be made.

The Spirograph Projector weighs only eleven pounds and thus lends itself to easy and ready transportation. It differs from the ordinary projector in operation in this respect: There are no upper and lower reels to feed and receive the film. Instead, the Spirograph film disc is fastened on a circular plate, which revolves and thus brings each consecutive frame in front of the lighting aperture. This circular plate while revolving is also given a lateral motion. These two motions—the revolutionary movement and the sidewise motion of the plate on which the film-record is fastened—are so timed automatically as to bring each frame of the concentric circles in front of the lighting aperture in their proper consecutive order. The intermittent motion of the Spirograph film is taken care of by a small revolving pan which engages in the sprocket holes punched on the outer edge of the film disc. The simplicity of the operation and portable character of the projector makes it admirably adaptable for work in the shop, lecture-hall or classroom and for amusement purposes in the home.

It is in the educational and commercial fields that Mr. Urban sees the greatest use of his Spirograph, and here the possibilities for its services are well-nigh without limitation. Salesmen, anxious to demonstrate methods of manufacture or to point out details in their wares; teachers, desirous of studying objects or forms of life in motion—the projection can be retarded without danger to permit of closer scrutiny of details; exchangemen exhibiting films to prospective buyers in their offices—are only a few of the countless workers that would find the Spirograph of immediate use in their chosen fields. And to cite an additional advantage; the Spirograph can be "hooked" up, for its source of light, to an ordinary house electric-light fixture.

"Torchy in High" Title of Third of Series

"Torchy in High" has been selected as the permanent title of the third of the Torchy Comedies, made from the stories by Sewell Ford, with Johnny Hines as the redheaded office boy, instead of "Torchy Steps on the Gas," the working name. The picture has been completed by Master Films, Inc., and prints are being sent to all Educational exchanges.

It is said that for the first time in the history of motion pictures the Metropolitan Museum of Art has been used for the setting of a picture, and here a considerable portion of the action takes place.

Alaskan Picture to be Arrow Release

The "Golden Trail," one of Arrow's feature releases, is a drama of the far North. Jane Novak is said to have never appeared to better advantage than in this picture in which she first plays the role of the most popular girl in a college town, and later as the faro dealer of a gambling den in a notorious dance hall in Alaska.

The picture was produced by the American Lifeograph Company of Portland, Oregon, and the story was written by Louis Moomaw, with a screen adaptation by Elizabeth Mahoney. It was directed by Mr. Moomaw in conjunction with Jean Hersholt.

Fine Arts Buys Rights of Morris Novel

Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., through the president, M. W. Garsson, has purchased the picture rights for the new novel, "The Ways of Men," by Henry Morris.

Plans for its production are now under way. The story, according to an announcement from Fine Arts, is unique in theme and deals with a twentieth century problem, which has never been touched upon in the history of motion pictures.

Old-Timer Heads Pioneer

M. H. Hoffman Has Trained Many Executives; Talks on His Policy

UNDER the supervision of M. H. Hoffman, who holds the managerial reins, the Pioneer Film Corporation has made rapid strides. Mr. Hoffman is one of the old timers in the motion picture industry. It has been said of him that he has trained and developed more executives in the motion picture field than possibly any other man and this, despite the fact that he has still a long way to go before he reaches the "three score and ten" mark.

"There is only one big thought that guides me in the distribution of pictures," said Mr. Hoffman, "it is this: will the picture bring the required results to the exhibitor? Will it 'pull,' and if the box-office tells the right kind of story then the picture is all that we expect. After all is said and done, it's the box-office that counts and all the talk that goes with the picture means nothing. A picture may be offered the exhibitor through the medium of a costly press book, handsomely engraved and written with all the roseate verbiage at the command of the long-haired individual whose duty it is to prepare such a book, but all this is of no avail unless the picture brings the exhibitor the necessary measure of success. We, at Pioneer, pass on a picture by placing ourselves in the role of the exhibitor."

State Right Feature Ready

"The Good-Bad Wife" Offered to Buyers by Film Booking Offices

"THE GOOD-BAD WIFE," one of the earliest of the special feature picture productions of the year, is to be distributed on a state-right basis by the Film Booking Offices Inc., at 729 Seventh avenue, and is now ready for release.

The story of "The Good-Bad Wife" is an adaptation of the Munsey Magazine story, "The Wild Fawn," from the pen of Mary Imlay Taylor. The production has been made by a new comer, Miss Vera McCord, who previous to her entry into the producing field was a well-known leading woman on the legitimate stage. Miss McCord, before attempting to produce "The Good-Bad Wife" spent three years in study of the cinematograph art in all its phases, including a course on interior decorating, in Paris, under able artists.

The cast includes Dorothy Green and Sydney Mason, in the leading roles. They are ably supported by Leslie Stowe, Mathilde Brundage, Albert Hackett, Beatrice Jordan, J. T. Baston, Erville Alderson, Bessie Stinson.

National Advertising for Cohn Subject

In this story Vola Vale is playing opposite Russell, Arthur Morrison appears as the heavy, George Nichols has principal character role and Wadsworth Harris is another important principal.

Because of the several big productions being made at the Fox studio and all available stage space being used by the several companies that have plays in production at the present time, it has been found necessary to delay the making of the second Hampton Del Ruth special comedy feature for a period of several weeks.

CHRISTIE

SCREEN rights for the Al H. Woods play "See My Lawyer" in which T. Roy Barns was starred in New York has been purchased in the Christie Film Company and is to be put in production immediately under the direction of Al E. Christie. METRO

FIVE companies continue on present series of productions at the Metro studio. Director Rex Ingram has finished exterior scenes for the South American episode of the "Four Horsemen" and is now working on interior scenes at the studio which require almost all members of the cast.

A most complete modern kitchen with every known labor saving device installed as a cure all for the servant problem of today is being used by director Dallis Fitzgerald for "Cinderella's Twin," the original story by Luther Reed in which Viola Dana impersonates a servant girl of fairy book fame who lost her slipper.

Exteriors for "Passion Fruit" the Geraldina subject being filmed by Douglas Girard are to be made at Monterey, California, and elaborate settings reproducing a Hawaiian village are being built there.

The May Allison picture "The Marriage of William Ashe," requires a number of big English architectural settings which are now being built and during this time the company is at Brents Mountain Inn in the Ventura mountains working on exteriors. Ruth N. Baldwin wrote the screen version for this and Edward Sloman, who directed the three Jack London stories, now completed, is in charge of the filming.

The villainless story "White Ashes" has been put in production under the direction of Philip E. Rosen with an all star cast headed by Cleo Madison, William Conklin, and Garreth Hughes.

A number of Metro subjects are still in the editing rooms, the list including Nazimova's "Madam Peacock," "Body and Soul" starring Alice Lake, "Blackmail" the Viola Dana Picture, and "Are All Men Alike," which stars May Allison together with three all star productions "Someone in the House," featuring Edmund Lowe and Vola Vale, "Hearts Are Trumps" the Drury Lane melodrama, and "The Star Rover," the third of the Jack London stories.

Director Eddie Cline has begun the making of the rural comedy starring Buster Keaton. Other than Keaton, Sybil Seeley and Keaton's father cast has not been named.

The Metro studio is the first in the land to recognize the importance of giving members of the scenario department a quiet, individual and pleasant environment completely separated from other departments of the producing studio. The buildings for the scenario organization have been completed and the easy chairs, convenient writing desks and other equipment were installed this week. All offices of the department open on to a court which contains a beautiful garden separated from the outside world and studio activities by a high garden wall. It is the belief of Bayard Veillers, head of the department, Joseph Engle, general manager of the studio and other executives that this addition to the studio will result in greater efficiency and better stories. The Metro news department in charge of Ray Leak also occupies a suite of rooms in the scenario department buildings which consist of twenty-five offices.

MARSHALL NEILAN made the final scenes for "Dinty" at Catalina Island where with all members of the cast a number of aeroplane stunts were staged. The principal supports for Wesley Barry who plays the title role are Pat O'Malley, Colleen Moore, Marjorie Daw, J. Barney Sherry, Newton Hall, Walter Chung and Aaron Mitchell.

To the Marshall Neilan organization has been added Charles Rosher who has been cameraman for Mary Pickford for the past year following a long engagement at the Lasky studio. Rosher is one of the oldest cameramen in point of years of service in the film industry now on the West Coast.

Producer Marshall Neilan and members of his organization entertained officers and midshipmen of the Battleship Squadron No. 3 at the Neilan studios Monday afternoon. The men of the navy were shown how motion pictures were made on several different settings. They took part in the making of a number of motion pictures and were then guests at mess served by winsome movie maids. Marion Fairfax head of the Neilan scenario department is now titling the motion pictures made during the afternoon and copies of these will be given the several boats of the squadron.

Charles Chapman left Los Angeles several days ago presumably for the East. Early in the week of August 9th he was found at Salt Lake City and interviewed by newspaper reporters. Following that Chapman left that city without stating what his destination would be. It is understood Mr. Chapman took with him negative and first print of the big special attraction which has been known as "The Kid." It is expected Mr. Chapman will reach New York at an early date as he stated recently to MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative that he expected to be in New York within two weeks.

UNIVERSAL

PLANS for future Universal productions were made known this week in the announcement of several plays which are next to be filmed. Lyons and Moral are to make "Fixed By George" which will give the two popular comedians entirely different roles from anything they have played in comedy features. The plot for this story is said to contain even more and bettter situations for comedy than their first two releases, "Everything but the Truth" and "La La Lucille" and filming will be started within a few days. Lyons and Moran have just completed the editing of their third release, "Once a Plumber—."

An original story by Jacques Jaccard laid in South America has been accepted by Universal scenario editor, Luvian Savage, and will serve as the next vehicle for Frank Mayo. This is an adventure story and has a psychological background.

"West is West," the Eugene Manlove story is to serve as the next vehicle for Harry Carey to be made under the direction of Val Paul and it is very probably the exteriors for this will be made at Jerome, Arizona, in and about the Senator Clarke United Verde Mines. Director Paul was formerly employed at these mines as engineer prior to his picture career and he is now at Jerome making arrangements for use of locations there.

A South Pacific island story titled "Out of the Sunset," written by George Ricks, has been purchased by Universal as the next vehicle for Eva Novak. Continuity for this is now being written by Philip Hurn and the subject will be directed by Stuart Paton.

A number of big settings are now being erected by Universal City. One of these represents the Plaza de Monte Carlo and will be used for "Foolish Wives." Another is an interior for "The Gilded Dream," now being directed by Rolin Sturgeon and will prove to be an exceptional extravaganza created by Harry Weston, now technical director at Universal City. Weston was formerly with J. Parker Read productions, following a long career of architect and designer in New Orleans, Buenos Ayres and Valparaiso.

Suitable exteriors for "Kate Plus Ten" from the Edgar Wallace story could not be found in the vicinity of Los Angeles and so a railroad track half a mile long with the desired background has been built on the back ranch at Universal City.

Several Universal productions are nearing completion in the editing room. The circus story originally titled "Out of the Sky" has been changed to "Pink Tights". This was made by Director Reeves Eason and features Gladys Walton and Jack Perrin. The Harry Carey story "Sundown Slim" has all been photographed and is now being edited.

Eddie Laemmle, former assistant director at Universal City and who with W. F. Adler spent a year in photographing strange beings and sights in the wilds of the orient, has returned to Universal City after viewing the opening of "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" and is now to serve as director. The story for his first production is being selected.

Jean Spencer has written a two reel western drama "The Shootin' Fool" which is announced to be a feature in tableau form. Miss Spencer served as assistant to chief film editor Frank Lawrence and was given screen credit for editing the "Devil's Passkey."

Malveen Polo, young daughter of Eddie Polo, has been selected to play a small important role in "Foolish Wives."

Eileen Sedgwick who recently recovered from injuries sustained in a fall, was again injured this week by being burned badly about the arms when playing the role of the human torch in a fall from a high tower into a tank of water for scenes in "The Queen of Diamonds."

INCE

THE race tracks at Tia Juana Mexico just across the border from San Diego served for race track scenes for the Thomas H. Ince Douglas MacLean comedy "When Johnny Comes Marching Home." Other exteriors for this film were made at Pleasanton, near San Francisco, thus scenes for this subject were taken at points approximately seven hundred miles from each other. The cast being directed by Jack Nelson includes Beatrice Burnham, Margaret Livingston, and Wade Boetler.

Announcement is made of the title "Some Chickens" being selected as the release name for the Douglas MacLean picture adapted from the story titled "Yanconna Yillies." This comedy is to be released shortly.

Evert C. Maxwell is a new member of the Thomas H. Ince scenario staff and is to prepare original stories and adaptations for Douglas MacLean productions. Maxwell has been newspaper and magazine writer for a number of years.

BRUNTON

IN anticipation of greater producing activities during the fall Robert Brunton is having numerous improvements made at the big commercial studios. An additional building to be used exclusively for projecting rooms is being erected and nearby is another new building which will be used for five cutting rooms. Fire proof vault for the storage of explosives is nearing completion and a great quantity of new machinery has been added to the big lumber mill and wood working factories.

The Robert Brunton all star production "The Devil to Pay," a political mystery drama adapted from the Francis Nimo Green novel is now in its final editing stages and is to be shipped East at an early date.

Benjamin B. Hampton, head of the Federal Photoplays, Inc., who recently completed the filming of the "Spenders" from the Harry Leon Wilson book has gone to Yosemite Valley for a stay of several weeks where he is working on the next attraction of his organization.

Director Ernest C. Warde is at Catalina Island in consultation with Dustin Farnum in the preparation of plans for the filming of the Ridgewell Cullen book "The Trail of the Axe," which is to be put in production shortly by Robert Brunton.

Lindsey McKenna, exploitation manager of the Betty Compson company, left this week for the East to spend two months with newspaper men throughout the country exploiting the coming Compson productions.

F. P. LASKY

THE several producing units of Famous Players-Lasky continue on productions heretofore announced in this department and the only change noted by the Lasky publicity department this week is the transferring of Ann Forest from the cast of the next C. B. de Mille production to play the role of Rhoda Williams in the George Melford production "The Faith Healer," adapted from the well known play. The reason for the change was given that Miss Forest is ideal for the part of Rhoda and the company could not find another suitable actress to play this difficult part.

GOLDWYN

ALL principals for the Reginald Barker production from the famous Scotch play "Bunty Pulls the Strings" have been selected and the cast is as follows: Leatrice Joy (Bunty), Russell Simpson (Pam), Raymond Hatton (Weelum), Cullen Landis (Rab), Katherine Ferguson (Jeemy), Edith Chapman (Eelem), Josephine Crowell (Susie), and Rollin Rushton (Rector). While in the east Mr. Willat will also complete negotiations pending for the sale of subjects made by National Film Corporation of America.

Live Notes of the Players

CLARA HORTON, Frank Norcross, George Nicholls and Lincoln Stedman are in support of Charles Ray's third independent release "Nineteen and Phyllis," under the direction of Joseph DeGrasse.

Alice Duer Miller, the novelist, is the author of "Ladies Must Live," George Loane Tucker's Mayflower production, in which Lule Warrenton will be seen in an important characterization.

Helen Raymond, English comedienne, who created the role of Signora Monti in the original London production of "Twin Beds," also portrays it in the Carter DeHaven celluloid version now being made under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham.

"One Man in a Million," took George Beban one year to complete and he contends that he worked every one of those 365 days, including daylight, which distinguishes him as fitting the title role admirably.

The following four stars will appear under the Robert Brunton banner during the ensuing year: Dustin Farnum, Fritzie Brunnette, Ruth Roland and Charlie Hutchinson.

Frank Lanning, the player of heavies, was married the other day to Merva Eaton, a non-professional.

"Blondy," the independent production which has just been made at the Biograph Studio, and in which Albert Barrett plays one of the most important roles, has been completed with a cast including Joe Smiley, Edwin August, de Sacia Mooers, Charles Craig, Frank Beaunash and Mr. Barrett. The fact that "Blondy" was filmed at the Biograph studio, and that so many of the players in it were associated with the old A. B. films, gave rise to a story that this was the first of a series of new American Biograph Productions. This, however, is not the case, since "Blondy" is an independent production.

In connection with The Fame and Fortune Contest, which is being conducted by Eugene V. Brewster, publisher of Motion Picture Classic, Motion Picture Magazine and Shadowland, and of which Hope Hampton is one of the judges, this star recently paid a visit to the Brewster home at Roslyn, Long Island, where she was photographed with a bevy of ambitious boys and girls who have entered the contest. In addition to Miss Hampton, the judges include Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Olga Petrova, Thomas H. Ince, Maurice Tourneur, J. Stewart Blackton, Jesse Lasky, Carl Laemmle, David Belasco, Blanche Bates, Samuel Lumiers and Eugene Brewster.

Charles Lane, character actor, who is playing in the first production of Cayuga Pictures, Inc., entitled "Three Women Loved Him," has returned to New York after an extended stay on location at Ithaca. One of the most interesting scenes in the production was filmed last week, when a building which represented a college fraternity house, with all the intimate details of furniture possessed by such houses, was furnished completely from cellar to garret, shown in the interiors and then burned to cinders for a scene in the production. Word passed through the country-side of the impending fire, which attracted a crowd of extras content to watch the excitement in lieu of salary.

Most of the interiors for "Fine Feathers," the forthcoming Metro special production, which is being supervised by Maxwell Karger and directed by Fred Sittenham, are finished, which is the reason for Claire Whitney, who plays the leading role in this all star production, and the balance of the cast leaving town for location on Staten Island, too far from New York to run in for luncheon. This play, it will be remembered, is an adaptation from the phenomenally successful drama written by Eugene Walter.

Interesting is the word that Marion Davies was the guest of honor of Governor E. C. Harrington, of Maryland and Governor W. P. Hobby, of Texas, while they were visiting Los Angeles, where interiors for "Buried Treasure" are being made, in which Miss Davies will be seen again as the star. Soon following upon the distinction Miss Davies was an honored guest, accompanied by her mother and sister, upon the steel yacht "Venetia" the property of John D. Spreckles. At San Diego, where additional scenes were being made, officers of the warships formally entertained Miss Davies and her family, and enjoyed her hospitality, also, at the Brunton studios, where they were permitted to witness a series of scuffles with screen "pirates," which they will later be looking for when the picture appears on the silver sheet.

"All Souls' Eve," adapted from the Anne Crawford Flexner stage play, will be an early vehicle for Mary Miles Minter.

Arthur Edmund Carew, having recovered from a severe operation, will resume his place among the screen players after an absence of some months.

Immediately after the finishing of the filming on Dorothy Gish's production, "A Cynic Effect," Tom Douglas—who played the part opposite the star in this picture—planned to return to Louisville, Kentucky, for a brief visit to his folks there. After buying his ticket home, Douglas was detained in town by an appointment with David Belasco, who had sent for him after hearing of his excellent characterization in this picture, which marked his professional debut. The conference resulted in the offer of a stage engagement for the fall in one of the Belasco stage productions, and so it is probable that the Metropolitan stage will see Douglas later this season.

William Conklin will be seen in Metro's all-star production of "White Ashes."

Those who are assisting Allan Holubar in the production of Dorothy Phillips' big special, "Man, Woman and Marriage," to be distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. The above group includes Director Holubar's entire producing staff

Realart Star to Take Long Vacation

After working steadily and strenuously for a year, during which time she has made seven productions for Realart, Mary Miles Minter started early in August on a prolonged vacation trip with her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Shelby, and her sister, Margaret Shelby.

Miss Minter entered on her Realart contract last summer when she made "Anne of Green Gables" in the East. She then went to the Coast and started work immediately on "Judy of Rogue's Harbor." Following this she made "Nurse Marjorie," "Jenny Be Good," "A Cumberland Romance," "Sweet Lavender" and has just completed "Blindness."

Thompson Jumped to a Steady Job

CAST for "Pike," American millionaire in "The Slim Princess," and expected to fulfill the requirements according to George Ade's description of the handsome tourist in Turkey, where the popular "string bean" type is looked upon in disgust and where fat ladies "eat and grow fatter," Hugh Thompson made a hurried trip to the Pacific coast some months since. There, upon the Goldwyn lot, he met the Turkish nobility, including Tully Marshall, Russ Powell, et al. According to studio etiquette, he was finally presented to "the Princess." She was and is "slim," for it was Mabel Normand.

Just what Mr. Thompson thought regarding whether or not she was as fragile as she appeared, will be a secret no plot will ever reveal. He vows that he never knew, before, although he has played with perhaps more leading women than any other male lead of the screen, how huge a slender woman could make a full sized man feel.

He with the megaphone, Victor Schertzinger, had no time for deliberations. He was late starting on the picture waiting for Thompson to arrive from New York and like most directors, was impatient to get started in his new work.

Mr. Thompson's first introduction in the screen play is via a thirty foot wall, surrounding a castle, where lives the unfortunate slim lady, the object of pity and abuse, for girls in Turkey must marry and slim girls are "out." A lady to be popular and attractive must be, not plump, but FAT. It was necessary for Thompson to scale the wall. In his many years of experience, following a success as an actor on the legitimate stage, he had never been obliged to put his athletic qualifications to so severe a test. despite the fact that he has made countless hazardous escapes from prisons, lock-ups and insane asylums, such as would put Houdini to shame.

According to director Victor Schertzinger's version of the story, "Pike" should scale the wall gracefully. It was in rehearsing the "scale" that Thompson realized how "slim" the "princess" really was. There was a flash of white flannels and a sudden landing too near her slender highness to be exactly healthy, and which almost made Thompson believe Miss Norman was not "the star" but "then" Miss Normand having a contract with Goldwyn for several pictures yet to come, took no further chances. She decided Thompson's long years in theatrical life had not yet erased the embarrassment experienced when a player is being watched rehearse. It was then she became the "revelation." She wanted to give him the scene in its entirety. She would enter after he was "in," but Schertzinger said that an American millionaire was not expected to be in form for scaling palace walls, and that the final rehearsal had just been executed.

Relying on Miss Normand's agility, Thompson again "leaped the leap," and skillfully avoiding a repetition of the recent accident, put himself down for a steady job, for he has been Mabel Normand's leading man ever since, in "What Happened to Rosa," and the photoplay now nearing completion "Head Over Heels," the third in which he has played opposite the popular Goldwyn comedienne.

Big "U" Encourages Initiative

THAT Universal is producing fewer machine-made pictures than any other film organization is the opinion of Rollin Sturgeon, one of the leading directors at Universal City, California. He explained this statement, in a recent interview, by outlining the present Universal method of director-star-producer cooperation.

"Under the present conditions at Universal City," he said, "the initiative and accomplishments of the individual stars and directors are practically untrammeled by overbearing supervision. On the contrary, I have never known a time in the picture game, when the actual makers of pictures, the directors and the players, had as much voice in their pictures as is the situation in the Universal studios today.

"This has resulted in several important benefits. The most important and at the same time the most far-reaching result has been in the greatly improved quality of Universal pictures. Universal can make as good or better productions than most film companies.

"Some of the factors that have a bearing on this condition, and which are results of the betterment in working conditions at Universal City, are complete confidence in the management of the studios, an honest ambition on the part of all to advance the quality of Universal pictures, and the knowledge that individual ideas can always find a sympathetic and interested ear.

"There is one thing that has accomplished worlds of good at Universal City. That is the knowledge that no director will be forced to produce a story he doesn't like. A director must be absolutely "sold" on a story if he is to make any kind of a picture out of it.

"Needless to say I am highly enthusiastic over my present picture, "The Gilded Dream," by Katherine Leiser Robbins, in which Carmel Myers is starring. If I don't make a whale of a picture out of it, it will not be because Miss Myers and myself are not enthusiastic over it.

"The same is true of my succeeding picture, Priscilla Dean, in John Colton's unusual story, "The Cat That Walked Alone." Already, I have had many fruitful conferences with Miss Dean and Colton over the script. The joy of working under such cordial conditions cannot be minimized. It is that spirit and that feeling which is putting Universal products at the top of the ladder."

Sturgeon is considered one of the best and most experienced directors in the business. One of his greatest pictures was "God's Country and the Woman," one of the first big out-doors pictures ever filmed. He did it for Vitagraph six years ago. His greatest recent success is "The Breath of the Gods," a Universal-Jewel production, starring Tsuru Aoki, which is pronounced the most perfect picture of Japanese customs and character ever made.

Sturgeon has just completed "In Folly's Trail," for Universal. It is Carmel Myers' first picture since her return to the screen. It was sumptuously directed by the veteran megaphone man.

"Consistency" Recommends Robert G. Vignola

SOME time, when the present director of Cosmopolitan productions, Robert G. Vignola, becomes even more famous than he is today, most respectfully, by his fellow directors and interested investigators, he will be requested to expose the secret of his success. With his permission, we will not wait for that realization, but be first to point out the solution of Mr. Vignola's rapid gain in the world of film, by quoting the familiar old adage:

"Consistency, thou art a jewel."

"That's how I did it," said Mr. Vignola recently, referring to merited praise, and answering a question at the same time:

"I never had any aspirations to become 'great'—exactly. I naturally wanted and expected my work to rank among the best, but I have aspired more to become known as a director of consistently good pictures than I have to a sudden burst into fame."

Robert G. Vignola

An actor since the early years of his young manhood, Mr. Vignola has been credited with being a consistently good one. He earned this reputation by playing an assortment of roles and playing each well. He wasn't exactly "great," but he was that comfortable quantity of dependable talent in a company of players, on which the stage director could count. His favorite work, when a very young man was the playing of "old men" parts. He enjoyed the actual effort required to make him appear the opposite from that which he really was.

In those early days of the motion picture, when with Kalem, Mr. Vignola asserted, again, his respect for consistency, he established a habit of devoting as much care and study to the selection of his cast, as he had always given his 'script. He has never lost sight of his belief in consistency covering a multitude of otherwise weak spots, and the work he has done speaks for itself.

"First," said Mr. Vignola, in reciting a synopsis of how he proceeds to make a picture, "I read, re-read and thoroughly digest my 'script. When I am about to begin on a new production, I have little time nor inclination for anything but work, for my mind is full only of the ambition centered in turning out a worthy screen play.

"Having been associated and become familiar with the work of many screen players, I visualize the different ones in the respective parts I have to fill, and decide upon the preferred or try to be satisfied with the next best in line, insisting upon consistently good talent, throughout. After having cast the production, I make a separate study of each of my players. I try to fit their personalities into the roles to which they have been assigned. I desire, always, that each player shall know the story and the entire significance of the scenes in which they play, impressing upon them just how much depends upon each, individually, to give us, in the end, a picture of which to be proud.

"I have had considerable success in going through a scene, as I see it, or as I wish it played, for the player rehearsing it. Many times I have not been getting what I want, and have become an actor, again. I ask the player, for a moment to watch the interpretation I am endeavoring to bring forth from his or her work. Invariably I procure the very results I am looking for.

"According to my personal experience," continued the director who recently made "The World and His Wife," "I find artists of both the screen and stage inclined to cooperate. It is the unusual thing for me to find one 'hard to handle,' which we hear so much about. Perhaps that is because I was an actor once, and know that we all enjoy being treated like human beings and I am sure I get as much out of people I am directing, as is possible, at the time, and according to circumstances."

Mr. Vignola, also, believes in letting his assistant be an assistant. He attaches due importance to the necessity of one whom he selects to assist him in his work.

"If a man is qualified to assist me, I want the value of his suggestions," explained Mr. Vignola. "I don't care a rap for the glory of having reached the place where I may have one or as many assistants as I need; I want, only, the help one can give me. Their suggestions are often most opportune. I have in mind a situation in connection with the making of 'The World and His Wife.' As the story stood, the young wife, whose life is torn to shreds through suspicion, had nothing to do but seem to wait for it to develop. My assistant solved the difficulty, which, when taken up with the scenarist, was found of great help.

"'Shouldn't this girl have something to do, in common with the juvenile? I mean, it isn't logical that she would idle her time away, and be an appealing character. Would it be natural for a real woman to be content to do nothing but enjoy her newly acquired wealth?'

"Immediately," said Mr. Vignola, "I saw his point. I had, in my very absorbed and busy moments, overlooked my own contention, that a natural consistency should exist through all, and I realized a great help from my assistant's timely suggestion."

It is a subject of remark that Mr. Vignola seems to inject atmosphere into his works, yet it is not to be wondered at for he has traveled, played and lived in most every land of importance and is informed as to the temperaments of natives in different countries. Born in Italy, he came to America when only three years of age, but he has an instinct born for the understanding of foreign people. That is why when it came to a trying scene in "The World and His Wife," he achieved such a remarkable climax, for while, as he said, the actor may have appeared to over-do the scene, that it was true to the country of which he was supposedly a son. Having seen Spanish gentlemen in rages of temper, Mr. Vignola felt sure of his direction when it came to the tenseness required. In any event, it secured some very flattering notices for the player as well as favorable comments on the direction.

"It was making him 'consistent' according to the country, Spain, in which it was supposed to happen," said the director, which brought us back, again via a winding, interesting trail to "Consistency, thou art a jewel."

F. H. Blakeley, of the New York office of Famous Players-Lasky, visited the local office this week for the purpose of installing a new system of handling accessories.

Members of the Greater Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, at a meeting held at the Hotel Gibson this week, decided to give a ball in October which will be attended by a number of movie stars, according to I. W. McMahan and Jackson. A letter was received from Dr. R. S. Alexander, of Dayton, suggesting a joint conference of the Executive Committee of motion picture exhibitors' organizations in Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Virginia and West Virginia to be held to discuss the operation of theatres by producers.

An additional woman censor to pass upon the clothing worn by motion picture actresses who are to appear on the screen in this state, was urged in a resolution adopted by delegates attending the convention of the Catholic Ladies of Columbia at the Hotel Sinton. Duties of the new censor, the resolution stated, would be to represent the Catholic women in raising standards of dress in motion pictures and on the stage.

I. Frankel, owner of the Colonial theatre, West Fifth street, swore out warrants this week for the arrest of Joseph Noterman, Miss Bessie Biddle and Miss Elizabeth Smith, charging them with embezzlement. The two women and Noterman were formerly employed at the Colonial theatre, Miss Smith and Miss Biddle as cashiers, and Noterman as doorman.

CLEVELAND

"The Parish Priest," one of the classic dramas of the age, written by Daniel L. Hart, now Mayor of Wilkesbarre, Pa., is being made into a picture, the world's rights of which have been purchased by Herman Garfield of Cleveland. Mr. Garfield has organized the Plymouth Pictures Productions Company in Ohio, with a capitalization of $250,000. This company will own the negatives of the photodrama, "The Parish Priest." The Pyramid Releasing Company has also been capitalized at $25,000 for the distribution of the picture. Herman Garfield is at the head both of the Plymouth Productions Company and of the Pyramid Releasing Company.

Garfield leaves for the western coast the end of this week, to supervise the making of the final reels of "The Parish Priest."

Harry Lande of the Lande Film Distributing Company, Pittsburgh, has taken over the Hallmark exchange in Cleveland, and will release his own pictures as well as pictures bearing the Hallmark trade mark in the Ohio territory. Ralph Myerson, formerly of New York, is manager of the Lande Film Distributing Company's Cleveland office.

The Crandall Film Company of Pittsburgh, Pa., distributing "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives," "Husbands and Wives," "Confession" and other high class photoplay productions, has entered the Ohio territory both from the Cleveland and the Cincinnati end of the state. Cleveland offices are at 2163 East Ninth St., Cincinnati offices are in the Broadway Film Building. William Finkel is local manager of the Cleveland office, while M. D. Crandall is handling the exploitation end of the exchange.

Picture stars were all in evidence at the Bradley Feature Film Corporation studio, East 30th Street and Euclid Ave., recently when William Desmond, Martha Mansfield, Denton Vane, Marguerite Marsh and the other members of the company organized by Samuel R. Bradley met together before starting work on the filming of Charles T. Dazey's play, "Women Men Love."

PROVIDENCE

A new agreement has been signed in Providence with the Musicians' Union. Organists in moving picture houses will receive $50 per week, while pianists will receive $36.

Louis Carman, formerly with the Shubert Majestic box office, has become assistant manager of the Rialto theatre.

"The Virgin of Stamboul," which was shown at the Shubert Majestic here early in the summer, and which drew a small patronage at 50 cents top, was shown at the Rialto during the week of July 26, and played to capacity houses, notwithstanding a warm week. Manager Mahoney has installed about 20 fans in his house and appeals to the public through his advertising as having "The Coolest Spot in Providence."

Moving Picture Operators' Union of Providence, R. I., passed a resolution recently commending Presidential Nominee James M. Cox for his attitude on the matter of collective bargaining, and instructed the secretary to send a telegram of congratulation to Mr. Cox, notifying him of the action of the local.

It is reported that agreement has already been reached in regard to road men projecting special films, and a wage scale for one night stands. The new scale for road men calls for $75 a week of not more than 30 hours, and for one night stands the operators' pay is set at $15 a night. The road men's rate is based on the fact that managers usually charge increased admission prices when the producers' pictures are shown.

While no figures of the new scale were given out, it is understood that the rate is considerably in excess of the present scale and will apply to all theatres within the jurisdiction of the Providence local, including Providence, Pawtucket, Central Falls, Cranston, Auburn, Attleboro and adjacent towns and Block Island where Providence operators are employed in the summer.

SAN DIEGO

Frank L. Browne, who has been with the Broadway Amusement Company as publicity manager and editor of The Chain of Blue, the company's weekly house organ, has gone to Los Angeles, with Clune's Broadway theatre. Stuart Taber, for several years with the Broadway Company, prior to Br. Browne's engagement, has returned to his former duties.

The Ocean Beach theatre has again changed managers, R. C. Ericson of Los Angeles succeeding J. E. Brink. Two new machines have been installed. The house is open three evenings a week—Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

The Master Pictures, Incorporated, with a full company of players and Carlton King as director, are using the exposition buildings at Balboa Park in filming scenes in a feature now being made. The Universal Film Manufacturing Company, with a producing staff of 75, under Erich von Stroheim, is also here for scenes in a forthcoming picture, "Foolish Wives." This company is also using the buildings at Balboa Park.

This Theatre Has "Listeners"

EXTENSIVE alterations to increase the seating capacity from 968 to 2,216 will be begun early this month on the Arcade theatre at Paducah, Ky. At the present time the Arcade is the largest theatre in Paducah. The work is expected to be completed in time for the reopening of the theatre about the middle of September.

In addition to the increase in capacity the plans for the alteration provide for a remodeling throughout. The entrance will be reshaped and fitted out to follow the lines of the Capitol theatre in New York and a promenade running the full length of the auditorium, but walled off from it, will be constructed. The theatre is equipped with an organ the size of which will be doubled and the orchestra increased from four pieces to eleven. After re-opening the theatre will feature its musical programs.

Additional facilities for exploitation have also been included in the alteration plans. A large electric sign will be placed directly above the entrance and glass covered bill boards will be erected entirely around the theatre on a level with the second story. These bill boards are large enough to accommodate twenty-four sheets and will be equipped with marginal electric lights to provide extensive illumination during the evening. The lobby and promenade will be equipped with frames for the holding of display matter up to the size of three sheets. The lobby will be devoted to the current attractions while the frames in the promenade will be given over to coming attractions.

The Arcade Theatre Co., owner of the enterprise as well as of other theatres in and around Paducah, in announcing the alterations also announce that the profit-sharing plan put in force eight months ago would be continued. The plan calls for a monthly distribution of a share of the profits to employees of the theatre. Each employee is regarded as a stockholder in the company, the amount of his holdings being based upon the size of his salary. The profits paid them agrees in percentage with the dividends paid the actual holders of stocks.

Another innovation of the theatre which will be continued and enlarged is the corps of listeners. This corps at the present time consists of five people who are not connected in any way with the management of the theatre and whose sole duty is to attend the theatre on the opening night of any picture and submit a report on remarks made by people sitting near them relating to the picture, the theatre or anything else for which the management is responsible. In this way, it is declared, the theatre keeps in touch with its audience more closely than by any plan that had ever been used, and by acting upon the criticism or praise which were reported by the "listeners" a policy has resulted that has made the theatre the most popular one in the city. The corps of listeners will be enlarged to eleven when the alterations are completed, as the management wants a listener for each 200 seats in the house.

Scenic Opens at Whittier, California

THE most elaborate theatre for a city of 8,000 population was recently opened at Whittier by H. J. Siler, who has conducted the Gale theatre in that city for a number of years and who is president of Theatre Owners Assn. of Southern California. The new house has been named the Scenic, has 1,500 seats and was built at a cost of $150,000.

The general plan of the theatre is practically the same as the California theatre in Los Angeles there being a slight difference in dimensions of the auditorium because of size of lot and also in the stage, the Scenic having one 25 ft. deep x 55 ft. in width and a proscenium arch 26 ft. wide x 21 ft. high. The projecting equipment includes Westinghouse generator set, two Powers projectors of the latest type, spot lights and stereoptican. The musical equipment consists of an Estey orchestral organ of the $20,000 type.

The policy adopted for the new theatre is complete change of program four times weekly, the program consisting of news weekly, comedy and feature attraction. war tax in the evening prices are 20c, 25c, 40c and 50c, including war tax.

Screen Illumination and Elements of Condenser Design

A Paper by Dr. H. P. Gage, of the Corning Glass Works*

Observation of Optical System

The method of observing the optical system to determine whether the necessary conditions are fulfilled to secure maximum efficiency is illustrated in Fig. 3 and the photographs, Figs. 10-12. In Fig. 3 the point f, located at the edge of the aperture, is so illuminated that the light rays spreading out from it diverge by just a sufficient amount to completely fill the objective with light. These rays are again converged by the objective to form the image at the screen. As the drawing illustrates it is evident that if the light rays diverged over a wider angle some light would be lost by missing the objective, while if the light diverged a less amount, the entire area of the objective would not be functioning.

If now the eye is placed near the screen and looks back at the objective one sees a bright spot of light which may or may not fill the entire area of the objective. In order to do this with the arc or incandescent lamp burning at full brilliancy it is necessary to use either smoked glasses or to place a piece of heavily smoked glass between the light and the condenser or just in front of the condenser. The last position is preferable as it enables the observer to obtain a general view of the apparatus at the same time that the size of the light spot is observed. The result of such observations is shown in Figs. 10-12.

The apparatus used in the experiments here described is illustrated in Fig. 9. The different parts are the same as shown diagrammatically in Fig. 4 and consist of an incandescent lamp backed by a spherical reflector. The condenser serves to concentrate the light from the lamp upon a standard aperture. The objective serves to form a real image of a picture located at the plane of the aperture upon a screen in front of the apparatus. In the apparatus as illustrated a movable screen has been placed in the position occupied by the condenser image. With this set-up, which is used in testing all condensers, it becomes readily apparent that if the condenser contains an optical defect so that light from some portion of it does not pass through both the aperture and the objective the image will show a shadow at this point. Condensers which do not show all of the rings properly functioning are eliminated.

The test illustrated in Figs. 10 to 12 were made by setting a camera with a telephoto objective of 50 in. equivalent focus (X8) about 20 ft. in front of the apparatus. Two exposures were necessary, a 5-minute exposure to show the general outlines of the apparatus and an extremely short exposure to show the light spot coming through the objective. In Figs. 10 and 12 is illustrated the large objective with 27/16 in. free opening and Fig. 11 is shown the smaller objective 1⅝ in. free opening. Both are marked 5½ in. equivalent focus, and are supposed to be identical except in diameter. Figs. 10a and 11a show the appearance with the camera objective in the direct axis of the beam, that is, located in the position of the exact center of the picture. The separation between the condenser and the aperture is 6½ in. as is called for in the theoretical design for this combination illustrated in Figs. 1 and 2. Note that in the cases of both 10a and 11a the entire area of the objective is filled with light, and hence both objectives are contributing as much light to the center of the picture as they possibly can but that on account of its greater area, the larger objective is able to contribute more light than the smaller one. In Figs. 10b and 11b the same separation is used, but the camera was so placed that it was at the extreme edge of the picture, i. e., if it were even one inch farther towards the side, no light from the lamp would reach it. This shows both the large and small objectives still completely filled with light.

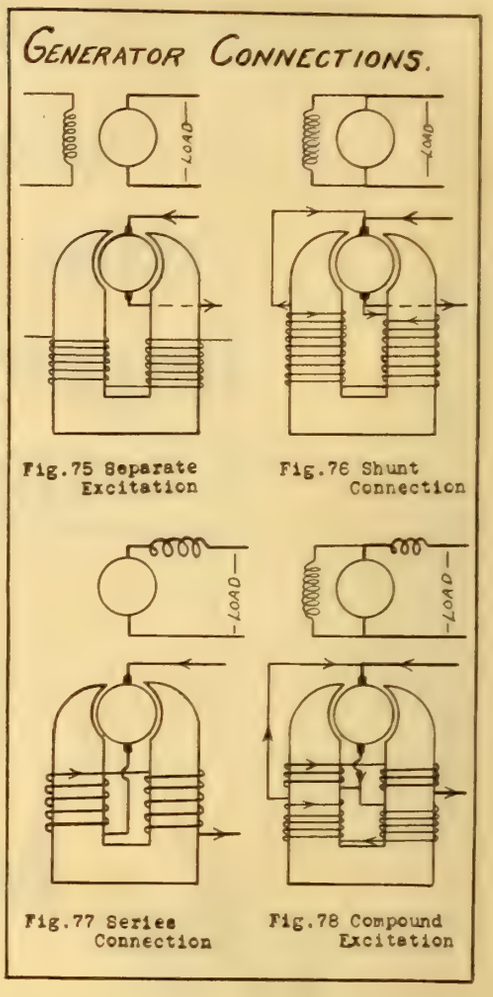
Generator Field Excitation

In the case of separate excited machines, a diagram of which is shown by Fig. 75, the field current is furnished by some other source other than the machine itself. This may be by means of a storage battery or by another small generator, and with a rheostat in the field circuit allows for a very wide variation in the terminal voltage of the main generator.

When the fields are excited by a circuit connected directly across the line, then the machine is said to be shunt connected. The connections for such a machine are illustrated by Fig. 76, the field winding being made up of a large number of turns of fine copper wire. It is not desirable to have a large current passing thru the field circuit in this case since all such current is reducing the line output of the generator, thus the required number of ampere-turns is obtained by a large number of turns of wire having a high resistance so that the current consumption is small.



The shunt generator builds up from the small amount of residual magnetism maintained by the field magnets so that when the armature is revolved a slight voltage is induced which tends to cause current to flow in the field-winding and thus increase the magnetization. This process continues until the saturation point is reached, the terminal voltage may however be regulated to a certain extent by means of a field rheostat to regulate the amount of current flowing in the field circuit.

The series wound generator which is illustrated by Fig. 77 has a field winding of a few turns of large wire connected in series with the armature and line load, so that all the current in the line flows thru the field winding. When no current is taken by the load there is no field excitation except that maintained by the residual magnetism, and as the load increases the terminal voltage increases so that for successful operation of this type of machine it is necessary that it be connected to a practically constant load.

The field of a compound wound generator as illustrated by Fig. 78, is composed of two separate parts, a shunt and a series field. This machine combines the characteristics of the shunt and the series machines. The shunt field is connected directly across the terminals so that a given voltage is maintained regardless of the load, also for an increase in load the field excitation is increased and the terminal voltage maintained practically constant. Due to the fact that the voltage of this type of machine is less effected by a change in load, machines for general use are made up with this form of winding.

THE materials in common use for the construction of the magnetic circuit of a generator are cast iron, wrought iron, and cast steel. There are several factors which govern which material is to be used for a particular machine, such as initial cost of material, total weight, available space, efficiency, etc.

The cheapest of the above materials is, of course, cast iron, however, because of its magnetic characteristics in that it is a poor conductor of magnetism it is necessary to use a larger cross section so that although the initial cost per pound may be less, the total cost is about the same since a larger casting is required to form a magnetic circuit equivalent to that obtained with other material.

Wrought iron, although it is the most costly is the best magnetic material, and is therefore used where weight and space are important factors in the design.

Cast steel has a property intermediate between the other two materials and is used to a great extent in the construction of electrical machines, and in many cases different kinds of material are used for different parts of the machine.

The total number of lines set up by the field current do not pass through the armature core and are therefore not all useful in inducing an e. m. f. in the armature winding. The ratio of the total number of lines created to those actually useful is known as the leakage co-efficient. This value can never be less than 1 and will sometimes run as high as 1.5. In order to make this value as small as possible it is customary in the design of the machine to make the magnetic circuit as short as possible and with no sharp turns.

The yoke which forms a support for the field cores also furnishes a path for the magnetic lines between the poles. Due to the necessary strength required to hold the field cores in place the core is made specially large so that cast iron is suitable for this section of the magnetic circuit. In some cases the yoke is divided in order to allow accessibility to the armature and commutator when the latter cannot be removed from the side, however, such division is liable to add considerable reluctance to the magnetic circuit even although the faces may be carefully surfaced and bolted together.

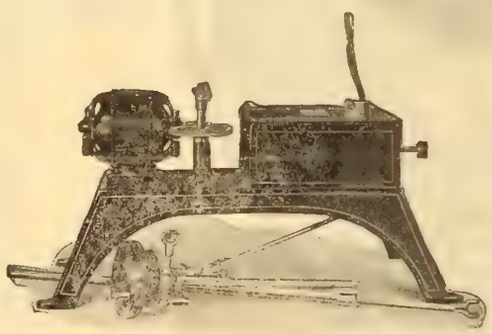
A Plea for More Active Co-operation Between Exchange, Theatre and Projectionist



What One Observing and Broad Minded Projectionist Has to Say on This Important Subject

True it is now reels cost money and I do not blame any exchange for watching out for unnecessary expense but when you stop to think of the cost of a five, six or seven-reel production and then try to compare that with the cost of empty reels, well to me it is a bum argument and merely a case of passing the buck. These same gentlemen that I mentioned as being the "brains" of this large Film Corporation admitted that they had found a way to keep track of their own sheet posters, paper reel bands, reels of film, film cases, postage stamps and a few other things, but thought it too big a job to try and keep track of empty reels.

Let us go back to the inspection bench where the new film is being mounted by the inspector and see what else happens to it. When mounting the new reel of film the inspector has a perforating machine and it is used to perforate numbers of the exchange and release numbers in the film. It is used once or twice at the start of the reel, sometimes in several places through the center part of the reel and once or twice at the tail of the reel. The Exchange puts these numbers in for identification, which is a necessity but which should be done with a machine which makes an imprint in the film instead of cutting clear through it. These imprint machines are on the market and numbers made by them are easily read. I have in front of me as I am writing this, five pieces of film that were cut from one reel of a seven-reel feature by a projectionist. Each piece has been numbered as follows:—(not these same numbers but in the same way) No. 35-435-I. I would like to ask Mr. Exchange Manager if he ever gave this a passing thought when he is dictating a letter to some theatre manager about the "operator" putting punch marks in the film. As I said before* Charity begins—etc. The exchange is the ORIGINAL PUNCH MARK ARTIST. Can you deny this, Mr. Exchange Manager?

Now for the sake of an argument we will consider that a new release has been mounted up, perforated and sent out to a first run account. Most managers of this class of houses want the film screened, so, if they have not already seen it, they can review it and at the same time have the orchestra rehearse the music for it. The title starts out on the screen and about the first thing that is seen is a row of film perforations. The projectionist is told by the manager (if he, the projectionist, has not already done it to cut out the perforation marks, remove several feet of "so and so presents," and in states like Indiana where, thank the gods, we have no censorship, remove the trade mark of some other state board of censorship and by the time he has done this, not forgetting the perforations in the center and end of each reel, he has made three to five or six patches in each reel. That is a good start, isn't it? So far so good. Your film comes back to the exchange at the end of the first run and is sent to the inspection bench to be inspected for the next exhibitor. The inspector discovers that perforation numbers are missing and reports same to the head inspector. Out comes the little perforating machine and two more sets of numbers are cut in the first part, one or two in the middle and two at the end and the reel is sent out again, and it is ten to one the next projectionist will cut these marks out. You can imagine what shape your film is in at the end of thirty days. Do you wonder that scenes are short, titles short (lots of the time no title at all) and the story cut up so that the director that made it would not recognize it if he saw it on the screen. Right here let me ask you a question. Do you have your inspectors keep PLENTY of title on the first reel of the subject or feature? What could be more disgusting to an audience than to have to look at a picture and then guess at what they were looking at? Many, many times the title of a feature carries with it the thought and sense of what follows it on the screen. You would not think of reading a book if you did not know what you were reading, would you? If your service is so poor that you are ashamed to put a name on it then do not send it out at all. The same thing applies to sub-titles and many a projectionist has gotten the blame because some patron of a house could not read the sub-titles and knowing the facts of the case give the projectionist the "credit" for the short time the title was on the screen.

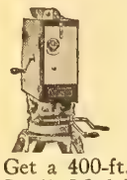
I would like to ask Mr. Exchange Manager another question. Do you have the new film waxed or treated before sending it out in service? Any manager of an exchange knows or should know that oil is a destroyer of film. Film sent out for use on first run is bound to stick on the tension shoes of the machine unless waxed or treated. Now you managers who do not wax or treat your film wonder why the film comes back with deep tension marks, oil on the film from one end to the other and looking like it had been run sixty days or more. You may not get your film back in this shape, but if you do not then do not claim any credit for yourself but give it to the projectionist that has handled your film for you. One of the largest exchanges doing business in Indianapolis has never used a waxing machine and several weeks ago I, as inspector for the local here, was called to the office and heard a long tale of woe about one of our projectionists who had used some of their film and when the film came back it was covered with oil. The exchange manager was very much up stage about the damage done to the film but when I asked him why he did not have the film waxed at the exchange the only answer he had was—"the New York office had never sent him a waxing machine." This same manager attended a convention of exchange managers of the company that he represents here, which was held in New York a week after our little argument, and when he returned he informed me that he had used my argument at the convention and that the general manager of the exchanges had ordered a waxing machine for each bench exchange of the company. THAT HELPS SOME.



The Inspection Department of a Film Exchange, as a general rule, is a thorn in the side of the exchange manager, because it gives him more trouble than all the rest of the exchange, but the inspection department of an exchange is the same to the exchange as the key stone is to the arch—take it out and the whole works come down. A great many exchange managers do not realize the importance of their inspection department and for that reason they have no end of trouble with exhibitors and projectionists. You must admit that it is really pitiable when an exchange allows ifs service to go to the exhibitor in such condition that the exchange pays the projectionist on the job a salary for inspecting service that comes direct from the exchange. I hope that there are not many exchanges that are doing this, but I do know of one in Chicago and one in Indianapolis that has done it and not very long ago either. Many a contract brought in by your salesmen or signed up in your own office has been cancelled through your inspection department; and another thing—your money comes to you from the exhibitor, but do not let this slip your mind, THE MAN IN THE BOOTH THAT HANDLES YOUR SERVICE CAN MAKE YOU OR BREAK YOU—DO NOT FORGET IT—and your inspection department will govern his actions to a large extent.

I visited an exchange in another city not so long ago and mentioned to the manager of the exchange that the film from his exchange was coming to Indianapolis in very poor condition and he was very much surprised and informed me that he had the best film inspection department in the middle west—bar none. He invited me to visit the inspection department with him and I accepted his invitation and on entering the inspection department here is what I saw:—We stepped into the room unannounced and I saw about fifteen girls at an inspection bench. There was a window at one end of the room and the girl nearest to it was cranking a rewind for dear life and looking out of the window at the same time. One of the other girls was telling the girl next to her what a swell fellow she had met the night before at a dance and both of these girls were cranking rewinds and never giving the film on the reels a thought. Three or four more girls watched us from the time we came into the room until we left and kept on cranking rewinds. I will say this for the exchange,—they have everything up to date as far as equipment goes and they have a good looking bunch of girls, but as far as I could see the only thing they know about inspection of film is found in the dictionary. The manager of the exchange is still peeved at me for telling him that he did not have a REAL INSPECTOR on the job, but that he did have a nice collection of rewind girls.

Let me mention one more thing to you Mr. Exchange Manager,—the projectionist in the booth is being paid a salary for projection and he is (I mean the real projectionist) always willing and ready to improve his projection when he can, but he feels like it is an imposition on him to have to inspect your service so that he can keep it on his machine

Selection of Proper Power Equipment for the Modern Studio*

With Explanations of the Various Systems Now in Use

By H. F. O'Brien and H. A. Campe

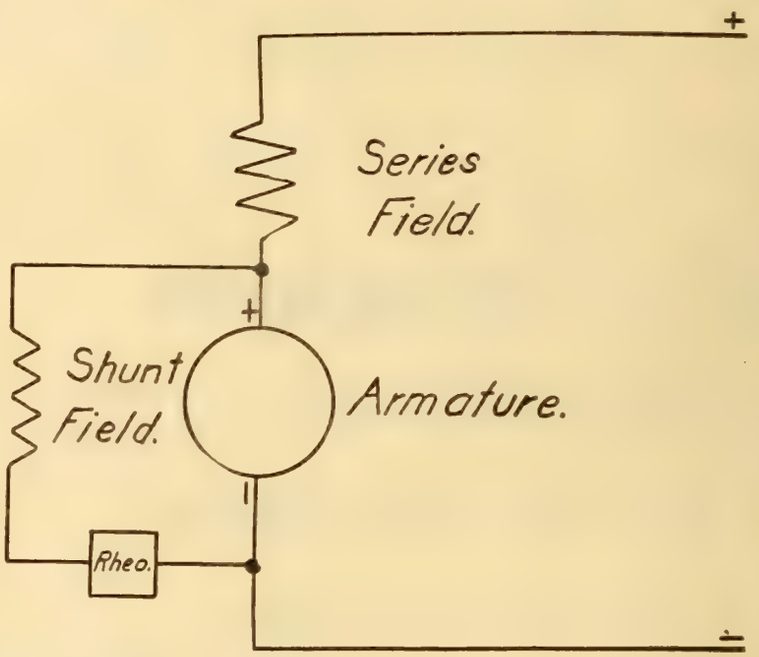
2. Motor-Generator Sets. Motor-generator sets are built in several combinations with respect to the driving motor. The only type we need to consider for studio applications are those driven with alternating-current motors. In this classification we will consider sets driven by squirrel cage induction and synchronous motors.



As induction motors have generally been used, we will consider the characteristics of this type first. The induction motor has what is commonly known as "Slip." By this we mean that the motor will slow down slightly with an increase of load. As the generator is directly connected to the motor, it will correspondingly decrease in speed, resulting in a slight drooping characteristic in the generator or direct-current voltage. The speed of an induction motor is practically constant under constant load conditions, from 80 per cent. normal voltage to slight over-voltage. This characteristic is a point in its favor where a studio is located where there is slight voltage fluctuations on the incoming power line. Induction motors only should be considered in the smaller sizes ranging up to 100 KW. capacity, except in special cases. The power factor of the squirrel cage induction motor will vary from about 74 per cent. at one-quarter load to about 92 per cent. at full load. These motors are always started with auto transformers in the starting circuit so that the starting current is not excessive. Normally, the starting current will run from 1.3 to 1.5 times full load current whch should not be objectionable to the power companies.

Modern synchronous motors have a squirrel cage or damper winding in the rotating element, so that they have practically all the good starting characteristics of an induction motor. In addition, they can be wound to operate at unity power factor at light loads. The speed of a synchronous motor depends only upon the frequency of the power circuit and is not affected by load variation. As most of the large power companies keep the frequency within a 3 per cent. variation, it can readily be seen that a synchronous motor would be very desirable inasmuch as it operates at constant speed, resulting in constant voltage at the generator terminals. Some electricians imagine that a synchronous motor is a piece of apparatus requiring expert attention and care. Possibly they may have had some unpleasant experiences with the older obselete types, but the modern synchronous motor is as simple to handle as an induction motor. It starts as an induction motor and comes up to synchronous speed readily so that it can be connected to the line without difficulty.

Let us next consider the different types of direct-current generators and their characteristics. There are two general types of generators; namely, shunt-wound and compound-wound. The shunt-wound generator gives a variable voltage characteristic under variable load conditions, whereas, the compound-wound generator, when properly adjusted, will give a constant voltage characteristic over a wide variation in load. Obviously, we will consider only the compound-wound generator for studio service.

2a. Two-Wire Generators. The simplest form of a generator is a single-unit two-wire type, in which a single voltage only is generated. The voltage produced by this type of generator can be varied within a limited range by means of the shunt field rheostat.

2b. THREE-WIRE EQUIPMENTS. There are three practical means which may be employed through the use of motor-generator sets to produce direct-current supply for three-wire systems; namely, three-wire generators, two-wire generators with balancer set, and 2 two-wire generators of equal voltage permanently connected in series. A short description of each will follow.

Educational Film to Show Possibilities of New Portable X-Ray Outfit

C. F. Bateholts of General Electric Company Directs Remarkable Film for Free Distribution

A PROOF that electricity is well nigh universal in its applications and that every phase of human activity is invaded and improved by this potent and benevolent form of energy is shown in a new one-reel educational film, "Revelations," just completed by C. F. Bateholts, of the General Electric Company. It deals with the remarkable progress made with the X-Ray and particularly visualizes the many advantages of the new light weight and portable X-Ray outfit, perfected by Dr. W. D. Coolidge, of the General Electric's research laboratory. This portable outfit can be taken to the bedside of the patient and attached to an ordinary electric light socket.

Pictures taken by the X-Ray are not new, but a motion picture film prepared by the use of this wonderful machine is something entirely new to science. It is an innovation in the movie field, a thing which had always been considered impossible.

The opening part of the film shows a few of the essential operations in the manufacture of the Coolidge X-Ray tube, the device which generates the powerful rays capable of penetrating to the inner structure of opaque objects. By animated drawings the electrical action in producing these rays is shown clearly that a child can understand the process.

The next step in the film visualizes the wonderful power of the rays in piercing such objects as wood, steel, cast iron, and even the hidden wheels of a clock. You can follow the workings of every wheel of the time-piece and see just how the second hand is moved; you can see just how a nail appears in the center of a solid block of wood; how a hole or flaw in steel may be discovered; the composition of a shotgun shell, showing the buckshot, powder and detonating cap.

The closing part is devoted to X-Rays on the human body, showing the action of the bones of the hand as the fingers are moved, the wrist as it is bent, the elbow as the arm is doubled up and straightened out, the knee and ankle in the same motion, the teeth, showing fillings, the nerves, and an abscess at the root of one, and closes with an X-Ray of the entire body, the skeleton of a living person, a picture marvelous in itself.

For years the X-Ray has been the invaluable ally of surgery but until the portable machine was perfected it has been necessary to transport the patient to the hospital. Sufferers whose condition forbade being moved were thus deprived of the X-Ray benefits with the result that medical skill has been handicapped in diagnosing conditions which otherwise might have been recognized.

The film shows how easily the portable machine may be carried about, the simplicity of its operation and setting up at the bedside of the patient.

All in all it is a wonderful film, showing the marvelous things science has been able to accomplish in lessening the sufferings of mankind. The film has been added to the lecture service of the General Electric Company and is to be loaned free for educational purposes.

Converting Equipment for Universal City

AN electrical lighting station for the generation of direct current, now under installation at Universal City at a cost of a third of a million dollars, will be the largest and most powerful equipment in use at any studio, according to electrical engineers.

Four motor-generating sets are the nucleus of the plant. Two of these are the largest type now in use in any studio—300-kilowatt units consisting of a motor and two generators. The other two are 500-kilowatt machines especially designed for Universal and under construction in the East by the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company.

The substation will carry a normal load of 16,000 amperes with a possible overload of half that amount additional. Ten miles of underground cable will connect the station with the various stages, the theatre, and remote points on Universal's 600 acre lot. A two-story switchboard 45 feet long (three times the size of the largest board now in studio use in the West) will control distribution of energy.

A system of remote control, with automatic switches above and below stages, will place light effects at the fingertips of the director.

A concrete substation building 36 feet by 56 feet, and 20 feet high, is nearing completion under the supervision of Harry Brown, electrical chief. It will house the motor generators, the monster switchboard, and the 10,500 K.V.A. transformers that take the 15,000 volt current from the high tension incoming power line and reduce it to 2,200 volts. It is distributed at this strength, individual transformers on each stage and location further "stopping it down" for use in illumination.

"Dare-devil" Young Leaves for Russia

Jack Young, known throughout the fraternity of cameramen as the "Dare-Devil of the Camera," is willing to have the world know that he places dependence in the NEWS. The illustration shows him in a moment of relaxation between two of his foolhardy stunts.

Besides innumerable airplane journies Young has spent months in the wilds of Labrador getting some of the finest films that were ever brought out of that section of the world. Of late he has been in the north woods of Maine for Edgar Jones. Very soon he expects to leave for Russia with a relief expedition going to that country. Life for this cameraman is just one darn thrill after another.

Ways of Announcing Your Music Venture

By Charles D. Isaacson

OUTSIDE of the specific ways of making known your music programs to the musical interests in your city—the critics, teachers, artists, clubs, etc., there is the general publicity to the public at large. Your channels of reaching the general public are the same as you employ in your regular work at the present moment. Namely, you have your own screen, lobbies, billboards, programs. You have the newspaper advertising and editorial columns.

This article will merely have to do with the appeal you might employ in your general publicity and advertising. Nothing I could suggest will alter your appropriation for this division. As a matter of fact I am not concerned in that phase of the matter. Merely to remind you that the wider publicity you give the musical project, the surer its returns—that's all on that point for the present.

But in making your publicity and advertising there are several facts to keep in mind.

1. There is a huge population which is drawn by the announcement that you will give them a program of fine music.

2. There is a huge population which is seeking to understand the meanings of great music.

3. There are thousands of parents with children who are studying or planning to study violin, piano, singing, etc.

4. There is the public which knows practically nothing of music and must not be scared away with the fear that the programs are above their heads.

5. There are thousands who are "feeling around" for the peg which is to be their hang-on in art.

6. There is a growing percentage of people who are wide-awake to the fact that the musical setting to a picture can make or break the picture itself.

7. For various reasons people want to get on speaking terms with the operas. They want to be able to talk knowingly of symphonies, etc.

8. Light opera and the better musical comedies have their big following—even of those who have only read about it.

9. People who buy sheet music are anxious to hear it played.

10. People who own phonographs and player pianos want something of the real stuff.

11. People who go to vaudeville—many of them, want a different sort of music. Many of them want the same kind of music.

Now my feeling is this: If you will keep in mind the existing conditions and aim your publicity to show that you are giving people just what they have been yearning for, then you will be following the right track.

It is not simply that our theatre is announcing music. Or good music.

Putting myself in your place, I will speak to you of some of the talking points which you might want to use—I will put them down in no special order. But I think you will find sentences, phrases—but more particularly, the thought which will set your press man to thinking:

We are providing a Headquarters for Music-Lovers. The kind of music the "understanding folks" can't find in ordinary places will be a daily fare at your theatre. If you don't find a concert anywhere else, you will always be sure of it here afternoons or evenings. We have engaged genuine musicians. The kind of music we are giving is not just the so-called movie music. The music could be given without a change of a note or without the change of an artist in the big concert hall or opera house. For the price of a motion picture entertainment we give also a two-dollar musical entertainment.

We give each picture in a setting of fine music, which makes it equivalent to a beautiful lady in a perfect gown in perfect surroundings. Where is the common sense of dressing a beautiful woman in a cheap or drab dress and placing her in an ordinary, uninspired atmosphere? Where is the common sense of putting a fine feature in a frame of inappropriate or cheap music? We believe that if a picture is worth presenting in our theatre, its worth placing in a setting that's rich. We arrange our musical program in such a way that each bit of film is made to sparkle with the charm of a jewel in its proper setting. You will find that the same picture seen in our theatre and then in another house will seem entirely different, just as a beautiful woman in a fine gown wouldn't look like the same person when in a tawdry gown. The picture under our process of adding appropriate music is like that same action endowed with a voice. Music is the voice of the film—not the human voice, but the speech of the action, the mood, the emotion, the spirit of the ensemble. You have probably seen a picture without any music. It sounded dead, didn't it? You have probably seen another picture in which some impossible noisy rattle-box pounded out tiresome chords—this detracted from the picture. Note the difference, however, in the way we use music to a picture. Notice how every moment in the film is properly reflected and illuminated with a subtly chosen musical theme. Get the habit of trying to figure how we do it. Follow some musical phrase through a picture. For instance, notice how we will make a certain phrase go with a heroine whenever she appears—how another goes with the villain, the old mother, etc. See how well we describe the sounds of nature, water-falls, thunder, dancing, laughing, crying, moaning, barking, hallooing, singing, hatred, love, childishness, old age etc. This in itself will astonish you. Did you ever know that there is a language in music which can describe and illustrate anything? Did you know that some compositions in music are recognized more readily than words? That is, for instance, that it is easier to make anyone see and feel the rustling of leaves with music than with words—or even with pictures.

There is an education in music at our theatre. When you come to this theatre you are not merely being entertained with our music. You are being developed into a person able to go to and thoroughly understand the visiting concert companies, orchestras, opera companies, etc. Thus after you have heard the extracts from operas as played by our orchestras and sung by our soloists, you will become acquainted with the famous music which the really cultured people love and try to discuss with you. Through the use of our musical setting during the showing of pictures, you will get to understand the Language of Music, and when you are attending a symphony concert, the reverse process will work. When you hear a symphony you will see the pictures! The notes will always come to you in pictures and stories! Those who get the spirit of our musical setting will be far ahead of the ordinary concert-goers. They merely hear the sounds, in harmony and melody, but you will get the story in the music and you will be able to feel the emotions which the phrases are describing. Because of the fact that you are coming in contact with the best spirit in music you will find your taste always betting better.

Children should be encouraged to come to our musical entertainment. Don't forget that if they get the taste for good things now, they will grow up with it. If your children only go to the places where they hear simply jazz and ragtime, it will hurt them. Encourage your children to like artistic things and you will find that idea reflected in everything they do. That's one meaning in our musical programs.

Children who are studying anything of a musical character will be kept enthusiastic and spirited in their work, if they are allowed to hear the sort of music which is being given at our theatre. By hearing the fine ensembles, the gifted soloists, they will be encouraged to keep busy. The power of example is important.

Nothing highbrow in our musical presentations. If the men and women who have never had the courage to go to the concert halls want to come into the musical life by the easy method—it is by way of our theatre. We don't simply pile down two hours of heavy music and expect you to understand. How can you? Before you run you must walk. Our music is interspersed with the interesting pictures. You don't get tired. You will always feel that you want more. You've not had just enough to suit you. Besides, we select not the heavy but the beautiful—the kind you will love. We give it to you at prices you can afford. Then the music is explained by program notes, by pictorial settings. After half a dozen evenings in our theatre you will be ready for any kind of concert. We are not like the regular concert people. Our music is for your entertainment principally. Hence, we are not so narrow-minded to feel that you don't want, in addition to the beautiful classics, also the standard popular music. You want some of both—you want the right kind of balance. You will hear the popular hits at our theatre. The fine ensembles from musical comedy. Old time songs you love, too.

You want to hear the phonograph records come to life? They do in our theatre, for you hear the music played and sung by living artists.

If there's anything especially you would like to hear, send in your requests. Always glad to play your favorite music.

(Next week I will go on, enlarging on the appeal behind the announcements you may make to inform the large public of your music project. It is a big subject and requires careful study.)

Questions Answers and Discussion

"Read your article in the News of this week. You've certainly started something that is really worthy of being read and reread many times.

"I have a library of over 7,000 numbers and am continually adding thereto.. I arrange my own settings to pictures, do not use cue sheets, as most always they are a joke. I love to play for pictures. It's a hobby of mine. I enjoy fitting music to them which seems to make the characters talk."—Joe Zivelli.

"I have been reading with a great deal of interest the excellent articles which you have been writing for the Motion Picture News. It has always been a matter of wonder to me why the trade papers did not give more prominence to the ever-increasing importance of good music with pictures, and to the methods of making good music a box office success. Motion Picture News has again demonstrated its supremacy by doing just that."—Charles H. Leach.

"I like your music columns and read them the first thing."—Chas. Mitchell, Bicknell Theatre Co., Bicknell, Ind.

"I am reading all your articles with deep interest and hope that your efforts will bring about the badly needed progress in Music for the Photoplay.

"For past five years, I have been watching the trade press and curiously enough, they gave the music a very subordinate position, allowing the exhibitor to grope in the dark finding out for himself how much of an influence, asset or liability, his music constitutes. As a consequence, since his musical end of the business was very much abused the average exhibitor regards music as a sort of a necessary evil, necessary, because the fellow across the street is featuring it, heavens knows why.

"I hope that ALL exhibitors are reading your articles, which certainly "hit the nail" by enlightening the average exhibitor on subjects mytserious to him."—N. Mirskey, Musical Director, Jefferson Theatre.

"Your articles on music in the Motion Picture News have been a source of great interest and delight to me as they are a direct confirmation of ideas that I have held for a long time on that subject. To find such an authority as yoursef on music, advancing the same opinions is a source of great gratification to me as, in my more humble way, I am a deep and interested student of the motion picture field and its musical accompaniment.

"To me all music has its own beauty, whether it emanates from the pen of a great master or from the agile fingers of the ordinary song writer, and in the 'movie field there is a chance for all. I have been exasperated in even first-class movie theatres by the utterly inadequate musical setting and indifferent directing of the orchestral director. I will give you a short sample of what I endured one day.

"The Review was the usual kind of mixture of every-day events, some soldiers marching, children at play, animals, aquatic events and the yacht races. This was entirely covered by marches except the yachts and there was a slow funeral waltz used. I may be doing the setter an injustice as it is possible that he intended the last as a Requiem for the Shamrock IV. This was followed by the feature picture, a light comedy with a distinct touch of romance and poetry, one or two light dramatic scenes and here and there touches of pathos, the whole the work of an artist who never lost sight of the ultimate result. The musical setting to this was mostly of butterfly numbers of a very poor order varied by popular waltzes from Broadway studios and the final love scene, an exquisite conception, furnished an opportunity for a brilliant one step. The scenic, a weird and entrancing study of trees and water, was accompanied by a long and tiresome waltz, the tune of which seems to have been left in Germany. The Overture to this conglomeration was Forza del Destino. Can you imagine anything worse?

"With the above I'm simply trying to show you how a real musician's feelings can be lacerated."—Frederick Arundel, 248 West Forty-fifth Street, New York City.

Musical Notes of Wide Interest

Nat Finston has resigned from the Capitol Theatre as musical conductor and will be in charge of the musical interests of the Goldwyn Picture Theatres.

Vladmir Dubinsky, formerly with Cabiria as conductor and a noted 'cellist to boot, is seeking an Eastern engagement.

In Chicago, during the strike, when music was eliminated from the theatres, thousands walked out—refusing to stand for the silent screen.

Dallas, Tex.—Better music at movie picture shows for Dallas fans is the main idea of the moving picture campaign to be launched Sunday by the Dallas Music Industries Association.

Three seventy-five-foot reels, typifying the effect of music in the home, its aid in love's cause, and the vital part it plays in religion, will be shown in nine downtown motion picture theatres and six residential shows.

Appropriate music from both modern and classic composers will accompany scenes.

The following firms are sponsoring the move to further "make Dallas musical": Starr Piano Co., D. L. Whittle Music Co., Bush & Gertz Piano Co., Baldwin Piano Co., Field-Lippman, Thomas Goggan & Bros., Sonora Music Co., Edison Shop, Will A. Watkin Co., W. A. The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Convict 13"

(Schenck-Metro-Keaton Comedy)

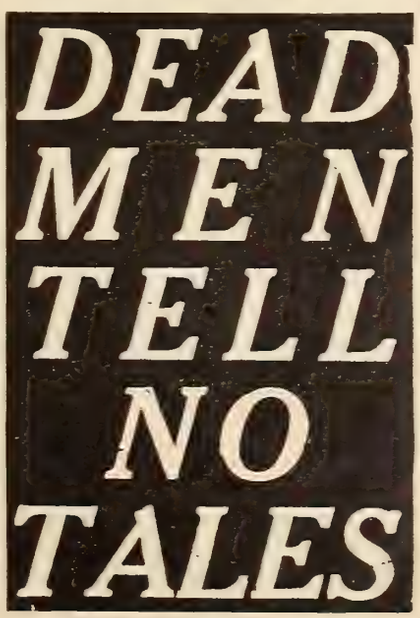
"BUSTER" KEATON continues to bat in the 400 class of the comedy league. His "One Night," shown last week for review, was pronounced a "humdinger" in these columns. His "Convict 13," shown this week, goes into the "super-humdinger" class which in baseball parlance would mean that "Buster" is batting in Babe Ruth's class with the bases always full.

"Convict 13," in reality, applies only to the last reel of this two-reeler. In the first innings, "Buster" goes to bat as an enthusiastic golfer but very amateurish in his execution. To that part of the public who understands golf and especially to those who have played it, this reel will be a riot and then some. And even to those professing total ignorance of the game, "Buster's" miscues and antics on the course will be hilarious.

The second reel finds our hero in prison stripes and while an inmate of a first-class prison whose lenient rules make Thomas Mott Osborne's look like the terrible guardianship of Simon Legree over the young son of Marie Antoinette, Queen of France, he stages some comedy bits that sure rise to the pinnacle of hilarious laughter. One scene in particular requires especial mention—the one showing the convicts lined upon the bleechers, drinking soda-pop and eating peanuts, while a cheer leader sways them back and forth in their applause for "Convict 13" when he goes to the scaffold. This scene is a riot. The entire comedy is a riot and to "Buster" and Eddie Cline, the director, we remove our headgear. Length 2 reels.—JOSEPH L. KELLEY.

"Pirate's Gold"

(10-Episode Serial—Pathe)



FROM viewing two episodes of this George B. Seitz serial we believe that it is going to be a distinct forward step in serial-making; will raise Mr. Seitz, director and actor, to a mighty height of popularity, and will do a great deal to bring the serial into favor among the class of picture-goers who formerly scoffed at its unforgivable improbabilities and cheap melodrama. For Mr. Seitz has done a daring thing—he has, besides carefully planting the story, given himself a likable, humorous characterization—a characterization worthy of Charles Ray. Moreover, he has combined the thrills of serialdom with delicate, clever touches of humor. The first two reels of the first episode might open a comedy drama of feature length. Perhaps this is that unknown something so long lacking, whose absence has been the great bane of serials.

The screen announces it as "a rollicking yarn of adventure on land and sea." And this hits it off pretty well. Frank Leon Smith has woven a story around a romantic, adventure-loving young druggist condemned to live the prosiac life of a small-town "pill-pusher." When his chance comes to buy a map of a buried treasure, he easily persuades his father—a picturesque old fellow, equally romantic and impractical— to invest $500. The map proves to be a fake but it sends him to a spot along the coast where the villians are searching for the real sunken treasure of a British vessel, sent to the bottom during the war. The chief villian is the only survivor and alone knows the location. Our young druggist finds that his "treasure" according to the map he has bought, is underneath a house inhabited by a beautiful girl. The villians, searching for the real treasure, attract their attention, and the action gets going full force. Where is the improbability? And the sliding doors? An audience won't laugh at this because it is ridiculous—they will laugh in places because it is funny—and is meant to be so.

Marguerite Courtot is entirely satisfactory opposite the star, and Frank Redman is perfect. The three villains who make their appearance in the first two episodes, William Burt, Joe Cuny and Harry Semels, are certainly not afraid to mix it up in the fist fights. The first episode is crammed with fine titles, although the art backgrounds tend to make uncomfortable reading at times.

It should not be thought that this serial is going to lack in action. The first two episodes have all the thrills and action, with something added—an interesting story, humorous situations, and remarkable acting and directing by George B. Seitz, who displays real screen personality.

One thing more to its credit—the opening shots. They present a scene that is a world-beater—a pirate burying his gold, and killing the men who aided him, only to die after a vivid fight by the hand of the hero. This sequence is a dream of "Hoey" Tuttle (the young druggist) and serves to bring out his character. Should the action be kept up in the remaining episodes it cannot fail to win.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Invisible Ray"

FROM the first four episodes of this serial, we can say that it has a well-planted love story, a great deal of mystery built up along popular lines, typical serial action and an occasional thrill. Jack Sherill and Ruth Clifford are the featured players. While the former seems to overdo his part, especially in the chase scenes, Miss Clifford is entirely satisfactory and once the scenario allows her to change from a middy blouse and skirt, and wear more attractive clothing, she furnishes enough feminine loviness for any audience.

The story goes to extremes for its plot. John Haldane is seeking "an invisible ray," which is powerful enough to destroy the universe. He finds it in a long lost "meteor mine," but the box containing it is stolen from him together with its two peculiar keys. A band of "criminal scientists," seeking the ray for their own evil ends, furnish the excitement and action in their efforts to obtain the keys. There is an unknown master criminal, known as "Jean Deaux," at the head of the crime creators, who adds to the interest. In fact all of the characters, with the exception of the hero, are probably "mysteries," and their real identity will come as a surprise in the final episode. In this respect it follows along popular lines.

The opening episode is of three reels length and establishes the characters very well, and also the love story. The heroine, an orphanage girl, known as "Mystery," falls in love with Jack Stone, elopes with him but is kidnapped before the marriage, the motive being to obtain the key to the invisible ray, which hangs about her neck. The remainder of the episode is laid in an underground passage, with the usual swinging walls and opening trapdoors. Good suspense is created at the end of every episode.

There is no good reason why "The Invisible Ray" should not be popular with serial fans for it has more than the usual amount of mystery and average action.—MATTHEW A. TAYOR.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to April 10, 1920.

"THE CHORUS GIRL'S ROMANCE"
(Metro Special)

The Best Light Comedy of the Year

"THE CHORUS GIRL'S ROMANCE" gets away at the barrier, takes the inside track and holds a lead of several lengths over the current year's light, comedy drama entrys, rounding the first quarter with the others fighting for a poor second; passing the half mile practically alone in the field and finishes with a comedy burst of speed that would make Man O' War look like a draft horse in a Grand Circuit event.

With Viola Dana and Gareth Hughes wearing the colors of the Metro entry, sired by F. Scott Fitzgerald and trained for the event by Percy Heath, this comedy drama will stand as one of the best of the year. Gareth Hughes' name should go in caps when announcing the cast because to him goes the floral horse shoe for piloting home "The Chorus Girl's Romance" to victory. Gareth Hughes, whether you will or not, can walk onto a set and give a performance before the camera that is second to none, not excepting those of the million dollar stars who have condescended after much argument and flourishing of check books, to take a "fling" at the "movies" during summer vacation. Speaking of "running the gamut of dramatic emotions"—wait until you see this young fellow run the scale. In the parlance of the street, "he's there." Someone threatened to star young Hughes, not so long ago, and missed a sure-fire bet when they failed to carry out the threat. Watch someone grab him after "The Chorus Girl's Romance" has circulated around a bit.

Prominence is given to Gareth Hughes' name, in this review because he is in reality, the star, and entitled, without reservation, to the stellar place in the cast. Miss Dana makes a fine little running mate and does her share to perfection, but—it was never meant that she should hold stellar honors in Scott Fitzgerald's Satevepost story. And right here let us hand it to Scott. He sure can put one comedy word after another. Percy Heath whom we remember press agenting Griffith's "Hearts of the World" swings a wicked pen when it comes to scenariozing. His work with Fitzgerald's story bids for a top-notch place among scenario writers. William C. Dowlan directed with all the skill of the best of 'em. The subtitles excerpts from the story are chock full of laughs. Metro can boost this six reeler to the limit and the exhibitors will cash.—Joseph L. Kelley.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Viola Dana, with Gareth Hughes as leading man and a supporting cast containing the names of some of the most popular players of the screen, is announced as star of the ———— theatre comedy-drama attraction for the week beginning ————. "The Chorus Girl's Romance" is the title of the picture, adapted by Percy Heath from J. Scott Fitzgerald's Saturday Evening Post story, "Head and Shoulders." William P. Dowlan directed. In Miss Dana's cast are Phil Ainsworth, William Quinn, Jerre Sundin, Sidney De Gray, Lawrence Grant, Tom Gallery, Edward Jobson, Martyn Best, Anna Shaefer, Dorothy Gordon and William Mong. The story centers around Horace Tarbox, son of a millionaire, and star student at Yale University, and Marcia Meadows, star of a musical comedy which comes to New Haven for a try-out before going into New York. Horace is a student pure and simple, with little if no regard for women or anything else material. His time is spent in study. Horace meets Marcia and he is won to the cause of femininity. He follows the show to New York and then—well—lots of things happen.

PROGRAM READER

Adapted from J. Scott Fitzgerald's Saturday Evening Post story, "Head and Shoulders," Viola Dana's late picture, "The Chorus Girl's Romance," is pronounced by critics to be the best comedy drama of the current year. Miss Dana's leading man is Gareth Hughes, considered one of the best juvenile leading men and stars of the silent drama. A large cast of well-known screen players work in support. A chorus girl's romance with a Yale student serves as the theme. William C. Dowlan directed.

SUGGESTIONS

You can go the limit on this one—production, story, acting and comedy element will stand all the boosting you can give it. Mention in addition to the star's name, the name of Gareth Hughes, who is well-known and has a large following. Mr. Hughes does his best work in this picture. Give the fact that the story is an adaptation of Ft. Scott Fitzgerald's Saturday Evening Post story, "Head and Shoulders." Play this picture to the limit as a comedy drama attraction. It's worth special mention as such.

CATCH LINES

Horace Tarbox was a student of the Fourth Dimension and had little use for girls—but Marcia Meadows, a musical comedy star, knows differently.

A Saturday Evening Post story with a thousand laughs.

"IN FOLLY'S TRAIL"
(Universal)

Carmel Meyers Attractive in Mild, Interesting Story

THERE is not any great amount of drama or suspense in this picture, but it tells an interesting story of a frivolous, "peppy" little actress who marries a highbrowish and snobbish artist and their consequent misunderstandings. Its other high spots are some gorgeous sets and an attractive star—Carmel Meyers. For this reason we believe it will interest and be good for mild entertainment.

Doris Schroeder wrote the scenario and has knitted the series of incidents together very well, while Director Rollin Sturgeon, besides putting over the emotional scenes with finesse, has staged the elaborate masquerade and dinner scenes excellently. In one restaurant scene several lamps are tinted in different colors and add to the effect.

Thomas Holding plays the young artist who becomes infatuated with Lita (Carmel Meyers) at a week-end party. She is engaged to a wealthy man whom she does not love, but after a brief courtship the artist and she are married. Although the two love one another, their tastes run along different lines. The wife's appreciation of art is nil and her culture about the same. So she gives her husband an opportunity for a divorce by going to dinner with her former fiance. After a scene between the two men, the artist realizes his injustice, selfishness and lack of appreciation and there is a reconciliation.

The star's role throughout is made too meek and forgiving to meet with general approval. She supplies the necessary "pep," however, and is sufficiently vivacious when occasion demands. The story is by Katherine Leiser Robbins and she has developed the antithesis of characters well but neglected to find some new business that would strengthen her story, especially at the climax. The remainder of the cast, George B. Williams, Beth Ivans and Viola Lind, are up to the mark. Director Sturgeon saw to it that all the extras in the ballroom scenes knew their business and that detail was good throughout.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"In Folly's Trail," an entertaining story of a vivacious young wife and a dignified, artistic husband, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. Carmel Meyers, well known University actress, is the star and in this picture is given ample opportunity to display her versatility. She is cast in the role of Lita O'Farrell, a musical comedy actress, who is on the verge of marrying a wealthy man whom she does not love when Fate casts a poor young artist across her path. At a masquerade Lita has been disguised as "Folly" and the young admirer as Romeo. In the midst of the revelry of song and dance, the two slip out into the moonlight. There they unmask and for the first time Lita realizes that life holds more than tinsel and pleasure, and likewise the painter finds true inspiration for his art.

Eventually they are married, but Lita's friends are not his, and his friends are not hers. He likes dignity, reserve and strict conventionality in a woman, while she adores the life of music, gayety, laughter and freedom. How they solve their problem, and come to a true appreciation of one another forms the bulk of this interesting production.

Supporting Miss Meyers are Thomas Holding, George B. Williams and Beth Ivans, all of whom are equally as appealing as the star. The picture was carefully directed by Rollin Sturgeon and contains some of the most elaborate ball room and dining room scenes ever made for the screen.

PROGRAM READER

Our patrons are to be given another opportunity to see Carmel Meyers, the dainty Universal actress, on ————, when "In Folly's Trail," her latest production will be shown at this theatre. Miss Meyers is here given the role of a flighty young actress—a butterfly sipping of life's honey. She marries an artist—a man who has his own ideas about the way a young wife should act. He believes in quiet, reserve and dignity—she wants a life of gayety and pleasure. Such is the foundation of the story. The incidents, all thoroughly interesting in themselves, pile rapidly one on top of another, and with scenes of the revels in a millionaire's home, and gay parties in New York's largest cabaret, your eyes will be dazzled by the splendor of the scenes. Director Rollin Sturgeon carefully planned all these elaborate scenes which faithfully depict the gay times of the city's gayest people. Others in the cast are Thomas Holding, George B. Williams and Beth Ivans.

SUGGESTIONS

The best point of appeal to force upon your patrons is the star. Judge her following among your own people yourself, but even if she is a stranger in your theatre, advertise her as one of the most popular stars on the screen to-day. Mention also that Rollin Sturgeon directed and Doris Schroeder wrote the scenario. Try to convey the idea that the picture contains a lesson for all young married couples. At the same time make them understand that it is not just another time-worn triangle play. Promise them elaborate scenes. They will not be disappointed. Thomas Holding should also draw some.

CATCH LINES

Lita did not appreciate art—but she appreciated her husband. But her husband, so entranced with his work, forgot to appreciate poor little Lita.

A remarkable story of love vs. misunderstanding. Guess the winner.

"STOP THIEF"
(Goldwyn)

Faithful and Intelligent Adaptation of Famous Stage Success

THIS is one of the most satisfactory adaptations of a stage play that has ever come through. Instead of throwing the original script away and making a picture out of whole cloth, "Stop Thief" as a photoplay tells the same story as did "Stop Thief" on the stage, the characters are the same, and above all as did the original it provides first class entertainment.

The famous old Cohan and Harris farce-comedy was ideal material for picture purposes and Director Harry Beaumont has made the most of it. He has gone about building his production in such a way that the high lights of comedy register, in every sequence, and has also put to good use many of the original lines as titles.

Tom Moore plays the role of "Dougan," the crook, who is pulling one last job before going straight and makes the most of a good part. However the picture registers principally because of its well told story and comedy business, and several of the roles are equal in importance with that played by the star. The supporting cast is more than capable, being carefully selected as to types and displaying fine intelligence in getting over the details of a lot of intricate business.

Among the players who deserve equal credit with Moore and Director Beaumont for the success of the picture, are Raymond Hatton as the addle pated bridegroom and John Lince as "Thompson," "the best detective in New York." Both roles could have been very easily overplayed.

As entertainment this ranks high. A Capitol theatre audience, 5400 hundred and then some, strong laughed long and heartily at its complications and twists, during the performance at which we sat in.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Popular Tom Moore and the popular stage farce and novel "Stop Thief" make a strong combination which will bid for public favor at the ———— for a ———— days engagement beginning ————.

"Stop Thief" is a cleverly constructed story of a young crook and his "straight" girl who plan to rob a house of wedding presents, the last job, so they can marry. Everything goes well for the crooks until they get mixed up with a kleptomaniac, the owner of the house they plan to rob, the bridegroom who thinks he is a kleptomaniac, the police, and more trouble than ought to happen to any body in a lifetime. Jewelry and wedding presents, money and bonds, are stolen and restolen. They turn up in innocent persons' pockets and then disappear completely. The police sergeant arrives with a warrant and that is stolen too. Of course the offering is for laughing purposes only, but as such it strikes the high water mark of good clean fun. You will like Tom Moore in his role as the "good-bad" crook who finally is married by the parson from whom he has a few moments before stolen a prayer book. Owing to the wealth of the photoplay material "Stop Thief" contained it has not been necessary as is done in adapting many stage plays, to take liberties with the plot of the original production. The picture as was the play is a continuous round of action showing what happened during the afternoon that was to have been devoted entirely to a wedding.

PROGRAM READER

Our patrons like good comedy and our next attraction, "Stop Thief" produced by Goldwyn with popular Tom Moore in the role of "Dugan" is recommended as one of the fun hits of the season.

"Stop Thief" is adapted from the famous stage play of the same name and has proven to be ideal material for pictures, since it has continued action and excellent incident, having to do with the disappearance of jewels, wedding presents, money, bonds, etc., in the home of a well to do family where a wedding is scheduled one fine fall afternoon.

The fun begins when Tom Dugan and his sweetheart, Nellie, plan to rob the house for a last job before being married and going straight. Things begin to disappear. The head of the house is a kleptomaniac and thinks he has stolen the missing articles. The bridegroom thinks he has inherited kleptomania from an uncle and accuses himself of the crimes. The police mix in the mess. Numberless articles disappear, to be found and then disappear again. Tom Moore has one of the best roles of his career as the likable crook who turns straight at the end to be married along with the original bridegroom and another pair who turned up asking for wedding bells during the mix up. Those who miss "Stop Thief" will miss one of the most entertaining pictures of the year.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill with the fame of the original play and the popularity of Tom Moore in mind. Promise fun and entertainment. Let your patrons know enough about the plot to get the kleptomania idea. Use scene stills. For stunts you have the kleptomania theme of the plot on which to work. Suppose you were to use articles in the newspapers prior to the opening, discussing kleptomania? Go over the police records for stories of local kleptomania history. If you want a ballyhoo make up a fussy old man of the mild mannered type in frock coat. Let him carry a piece of rubber hose about a foot long about, stopping on the street corners to look blankly at the hose and say "Now, what was I going to do with that hose?" Other lines for him are "Mother's lost her ear trumpet, I thought this was it." If you want to stage a prologue get the novel. It is almost a straight version of the play.

"THE SOUL OF YOUTH"
(Realart)

Lewis Sargent Duplicates Success of "Huckleberry Finn"

LEWIS SARGENT, the kid who brought to the screen the immortal character of Mark Twain's "Huckleberry Finn," has, under the direction of William D. Taylor, experienced all the emotions of which a youthful actor is capable, and in his case they are as various as would be found in many of longer experience, and finishes his work having added a success which from a straight dramatic standpoint surpasses even his work as the freckled Huck Finn. He is given comedy, straight drama and much of the emotional work of the melodramatic actor and does them all with a finesse that is due in a good measure to his natural boyish proclivities. A more improvident, little tough would be hard to find than The Boy in the early reels of "The Soul of Youth" and even later on when he is dolled up in a Buster Brown collar, he still retains that roguish smile and entertains that same fondness for exciting adventure. He gives to the screen a performance that will stand as one of its best boy characterizations.

The picture opens with all the tenseness and dramatic action of "The Man Who Came Back" and closes with all the boyish realizations of Booth Tarkington's "Clarence." The first five-hundred feet or more gives us some of the best melodrama seen on the screen for some time. Swinging from the scenes of Pete Moran and his "woman" to the orphanage; to the court of Judge Ben Lindsey and then to the home of the Hamiltons, where The Boy finds the only real home he has ever known, the cameraman has caught some excellent drama and placed the youthful Sargent in a way to give a good account of his stewardship as a screen luminary. Ernest Butterworth, his "buddy," carries a difficult kid role to good advantage. Clyde Fillmore, an excellent leading man, is not prominently casted. Lila Lee has a not-too-important part. William Collier, Jr., is seen in a satisfactory role. The rest of the cast, including Judge Ben Lindsey himself, are seen at their best. The dog should come in for special mention. The reason for introducing Mr. and Mrs. Hodge is not quite clear excepting in the subtitles. Julia Crawford Ives is the author. —length 6 reels.—Joseph L. Kelley.

THE CAST

The Boy	Lewis Sargent
Mike	Ernest Butterworth
Mr. Hamilton	Clyde Fillmore
Mrs. Hamilton	Grace Morse
Vera Hamilton	Lila Lee
Ruth Hamilton	Elizabeth Janes
Dick Armstrong	William Collier, Jr.
Pete Moran	Claude Peyton
Maggie	Betty Schade
Judge Ben Lindsey	Himself

Story by Julia Crawford Ives.
Directed by William D. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Lewis Sargent, the freckled-faced boy who visualized Mark Twain's character of Huckleberry Finn so realistically on the screen, is the leading character in "The Soul of Youth," coming to the ———— theatre the week beginning ————. Young Sargent has much the same kind of pat as that of Huckleberry Finn. He is The Boy in "The Soul of Youth"—a boy of doubtful parentage who finds his way to an orphanage asylum and there during the earlier years of his life he is the care-free trouble-maker of the institution. His only friend is a stray dog he has picked up on the streets. Life at the orphanage becomes unbearable and The Boy leaves. He meets with and shares the piano-box home of a little newsboy, who instructs him in the art of the newspaper-selling business and shoe-shining. The Boy is real at heart of the life at the orphanage had sapped him of all regard for humanity for all had ever been his enemies. He is adopted by a young politician after he has been brought before the court of Judge Ben Lindsey, who appears in the picture.

PROGRAM READER

Lewis Sargent, the star of "The Soul of Youth," will be remembered as the Huckleberry Finn in the screen version of Mark Twain's book of the same title. Young Sargent proved by his work in this role that he was entitled to stellar honors with the best of them. Realart Pictures, under the direction of William D. Taylor, has placed him at the head of the strong cast representing the interpreters of the parts in "The Soul of Youth." Included in the cast are Lila Lee, Clyde Filmore, Ernest Butterworth, William Collier, Jr., son of the popular Willie Collier; Judge Ben Lindsey and Mrs. Lindsey, known throughout America for the work they are doing in the interest of delinquent boys.

SUGGESTIONS

Lewis Sargent, the youthful star and the members of his supporting cast, including such well known names as Ben Lindsey, Clyde Filmore, Lila Lee, William Collier, Jr., and others should be mentioned prominently in connection with exploitation on this picture. Don't forget to mention the fact that the star is the one who appeared in the title role of Mark Twain's "Huckleberry Finn."

CATCH LINES

Lewis Sargent, star of "Huckleberry Finn," in "The Soul of Youth."

Ben Lindsey, judge of the famous juvenile court at Denver, appears personally in "The Soul of Youth."

Why are there so many youthful criminals? Are the unfortunate boys given a chance? See "The Soul of Youth."

"AN ARABIAN KNIGHT"
(Haworth-Robertson-Cole)

SESSUE HAYAKAWA, the Japanese star, has been given an oriental setting, a good star part, capable support and an unusual wide range in which to re-demonstrate to the motion picture public that he is a finished, versatile actor, going from comedy to the tragic and hitting all the high spots between, with a touch of sincerity and art. "An Arabian Knight," his latest effort in pantomime, is, perhaps, the best evidence that he has offered to prove that he is versatile. Here he is given opportunity to impersonate the lowest of the low and the noblest of the noble; to execute comedy touches, melodramatic impulses; adventurous escapades and romance—in all—running the scale of dramatic possibilities. All of which he does with the touch of an artist.

The production of "An Arabian Knight" has been staged with a good eye for atmosphere, Gene Wright, the author, having given Director Charles Swickard a story with which he, the director, could realize his fondest hopes for a romantic, adventurous drama of the Nile country. E. Richard Schayer, who prepared the working-script, furnished a good, actionable sequence and kept the characters and action moving at dramatic speed. It is just the kind of entertainment that an audience will expect when they see Sessue Hayakawa announced as the star attraction. None will be disappointed. All will be pleased and if there happen to be those who have not yet been converted as an admirer of Hayakawa's work on the screen, they will be, partially so, at least, after witnessing this performance.

Hayakawa's supporting cast is chosen well. Lillian Hall, in the leading, straight ingenue role, has been given one of the best parts of her career and if it were not for the fact that at times she becomes affected in her actions, this work would represent her best. Jean Acker, Marie Pavis, a vampire lady of no mean ability; Elaine Innescourt; Harvey Clarke; Fred Jones, a good villain; Roy Coulson and Tom Bates—all do well in support. .—Joseph L. Kelley.

THE CAST

Ahmed	Sessue Hayakawa
Elinor Wayne	Lillian Hall
Zorah	Jean Acker
Soada	Marie Pavis
Cordelia Darwin	Elaine Innescourt
George Darwin	Harvey Clarke
Aboul Pasha	Fred Jones

Story by Gene Wright.
Scenario by E. Richard Schayer.
Directed by Charles Swickard.
Released by Robertson-Cole.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese star, and from point of time spent before the camera, one of the silent drama's oldest interpreters, comes to the ———— theatre the week beginning ————, in one of his best oriental dramas, "An Arabian Knight," written by Gene Wright, scenarioized by E. Richard Schayer and produced under the direction of Charles Swickard. The story is laid in Egypt, the country made famous by its works of art, its pyramids, and its Cleopatras. Hayakawa has the role of Ahmed, a donkey boy in a little hamlet along the banks of the historic Nile, until an eccentric maiden lady, is deluded into believing that he is a descendant of the house of Pharoahs. He is taken into the home of a wealthy Egyptologist as a servant and is instrumental in saving the lives of the entire household.

PROGRAM READER

Whenever we hear of Sessue Hayakawa we think of "The Cheat," a five-reel production made about five years ago and to this day considered as the best example of photodramatic work ever presented on any screen. Fannie Ward will be remembered as co-starring with Hayakawa in this picture. And whenever we think of "The Cheat" we think of Sessue Hayakawa because he was, in a big measure, instrumental in making "The Cheat" the excellent production that it was. Hayakawa's late picture, "An Arabian Knight" has its locale along the banks of the historic Nile in the country where the world's famous vampire, Cleopatra, vamped emperors from their thrones, notable mention going to Julius Caesar and Marc Antony. In such a setting, Hayakawa, as Ahmed, a young Egyptian donkey boy, is found and mistaken for a descendant of the line of Pharaoh's, by a maiden lady whose dreams of love leads her to believe that she is the reincarnation of an Egyptian Princess. Supporting Hayakawa in this picture are Lillian Hall, Jean Acker, Marie Pavis, Elaine Innescourt, Harvey Clarke, Fred Jones, Roy Coulson and Tom Bates.

SUGGESTIONS

The star is the big bet here? Next comes the story, of oriental flavor, clever comedy and beautiful settings of the country along the Nile. Call attention to the fact that the country made famous by the world's most famous vampire, Gleopatra, is used as a setting for the drama and to Hayakawa's supporting cast mentioning the names.

CATCH LINES

Ahmed, a donkey boy, plying his trade along the banks of the historic Nile, is mistaken for a descendant of the line of Egyptian kings. What, then, happens? The veiled beauties of the native quarters of Cairo. Hayakawa in Oriental drama of the historic Nile.

Dead Men Tell No Tales

"THE NOTORIOUS MISS LISLE"
(MacDonald Pictures Corp.-First National)

Katherine MacDonald in Drama of Divorce Scandal

SOCIETY will be mildly interested in Katherine MacDonald's latest picture, "The Notorious Miss Lisle," because in the unfolding of the story, which presents little, excepting Brittany atmosphere until the opening of the third reel, nice bits of divorce scandal are brought out and the beautiful star serves as magnetic target at which to throw the scandalous arrows. During the first three reels, the subtitler has made a valiant effort to supply suspense and to arouse interest in the absence of actionable or dramatic situations. For this reelage the audience is given some beautiful exterior shots of the rocky, sea-faring country of Brittany, with Miss MacDonald and her leading man Nigel Barrie, romancing on the rocks. Practically one-half of the picture is given over to introducing the characters and the locale. It is not until the marriage scene that actionable drama is seen and from this point on to the close, "The Notorious Miss Lisle" presents real entertainment.

Opinion will be divided on this picture. It is pretty certain that the fellow who books melodramas, and serials as weekly fillers, will not acknowledge that in this attraction he has a picture which meets the demands of his patrons. And it is likewise certain that the cosmopolitan public, those who read Town Topics and scan the society columns, religiously, every morning at breakfast, will accept Miss MacDonald's picture as desired entertainment.

"The Notorious Miss Lisle" has one point in its favor which in screen or stage drama is vitally important—reality. The divorce angle has been taken up, exposed in its true light and the unjust notoriety which the average correspondent usually suffers swept away by clever incident and the shroud of convicting circumstantial evidence, removed from the innocent. Miss MacDonald has improved on her initial performances before the camera, but still has a long road to travel before arriving at the pinnacle, marking the emotional genius she is credited with being. James Young directed, and the hand of an amateur in direction is seen in the opening reels, although the latter reelage reveals skillful handling of the production. Nigel Barrie has been given a good leading supporting role. The balance of the cast, excepting William Clifford, who is good in a semi-villain role, have minor parts.—Length, 6 reels.—Joseph L. Kelley.

THE CAST

Geanor Garstin (the notorious Miss Lisle)	Katherine MacDonald
Mrs. Lisle	Margaret Campbell
Peter Garstin	Nigel Barrie
Major Lisle	Ernest Joy
Craven	William Clifford
Mrs. Lyons	Dorothy Cummings

Directed by James Young.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Katherine MacDonald, famed for her beauty, comes to the ———— Theatre the week beginning ———— in the title role of "The Notorious Miss Lisle," considered by critics to be one of the strongest exposes of modern divorce, and the unjust criticism and scandal commonly accruing to the unfortunate correspondent, penned. Miss MacDonald is the objective of the poisoned arrows of scandal flung at her by babbling society, and to get away from it all she goes to Brittany to forget. Peter Garstin, a young man of wealth, and tourist, is traveling through this country and meets "the notorious Miss Lisle." The two fall in love and are married without the bride telling him of the scandal that enshrouds her name. Shortly after the marriage, the husband learns of this scandal, and the wife, loving him too much to face the charge, leaves for England, leaving a note in which she informs her husband that he can reach her by mail at a certain address. She is injured in an accident and taken to a hospital to which place the husband traces her. The man with whom her name had been connected is learned to be her benefactor and circumstances point to her guilt. All is explained and the wife proves to have been innocent of the unjust charges.

PROGRAM READER

"The American Beauty," otherwise known as Katherine MacDonald, considered to be one of the most beautiful women on the screen, is the star of "The Notorious Miss Lisle," a picture exposing in a dramatic manner, the evils of modern divorce, especially the injustice often meted out to the alleged correspondent, who, as this drama proves, is often an innocent victim of the scandalous tongues. Nigel Barrie, is Miss MacDonald's leading man, and others in the cast are: Margaret Campbell, Ernest Joy, William Clifford and Dorothy Cummings. James Young directed.

SUGGESTIONS

Miss MacDonald, the star of this production, is widely known as a famous American beauty and as one of the screen's leading emotional actresses. Give Miss MacDonald's name prominence in your exploitation. The story deals with the evils of modern divorce, which subject is sure to attract attention, especially the women. Nigel Barrie's name as leading man should be mentioned in connection with the newspaper announcements.

CATCH LINES

Is the correspondent of a divorce suit always guilty? "The Notorious Miss Lisle" says no.

Scandalous tongues can do a great deal of harm, especially when wagged in connection with a divorce suit.

Was the "notorious Miss Lisle" justified in keeping the scandal from her husband?

"WHAT'S YOUR HURRY"
(Paramount)

Wally Reid and Motor Truck Shine in This One

WALLACE REID'S chief support in his latest picture, "What's Your Hurry," is a motor truck which has been made to arouse almost human sympathy for the part it plays in Byron Morgan's Satevepost story, "The Hippopotamus Parade." The money kings of automobile row missed a great opportunity to publicize one or more of their auto-truck brands, for it will be almost impossible for one to witness a showing of this picture without grasping the wonderful exploitation possibilities that would accrue to a particular brand of motor trucks. The author should spend his spare moments writing industrials, for he has the right idea.

Jack London has humanized the dog family on the screen, Mack Sennett has come the nearest to making ducks, cats and other species of the animal kingdom, human before the camera, but it has fallen to the happy lot of Mr. Morgan, Director Sam Wood and Wally Reid to humanize the automobile and the great American public will have to admit that this trio, especially the author, has succeeded pretty well for the ungainly member of the automobile family, known as the motor truck figures in "What's Your Hurry" as conspicuously and incites as much sympathy and interest as any human could possibly figure or incite.

Wally Reid's latest is a novel picture and one that presents a new angle in a highly entertaining way. The first reel gives Wally innumerable chances to demonstrate his speed and pep and the winning way of his smile. The latter reels place him in a more serious mood and demonstrate to his numerous admirers that, if necessary, he can give us the hairy-chested stuff with equal proficiency. Sam Wood, who we are told, graduated only a short time ago from Cecil De Mille's staff of assistants, proves by this work that he was justly entitled to his "sheep-skin." Lois Wilson, although having little to do, adds a touch of beauty to the cast that would be hard to replace. Charles Ogle does his usual good work. Ernest Butterworth gets away with the Wesley Barry stuff.—Length, 5 reels.—Joseph L. Kelley.

THE CAST

Dusty Rhoades ..... Wallace Reid
Virginia MacMurran ..... Lois Wilson
Patrick MacMurran ..... Charles Ogle
Brenton Harding ..... Clarence Burton
Office Boy ..... Ernest Butterworth

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Another Byron Morgan story has been given to Wally Reid—"What's Your Hurry?"—and it is coming to the ———— theatre the week beginning ————. If you saw "The Roaring Road" and "Excuse My Dust," by the same author, you can't afford to miss this one, as it presents a theme which is entirely new to a vast number of picture dramas presented to the public in the last decade. Wally and a motor truck are the principal figures, with a thrilling auto race figuring prominently in the initial reels. Lois Wilson, one of the most beautiful leading women on the screen, is Wally's chief support on the feminine side. The story deals with Dusty Rhoades, one of our speed kings. He meets Virginia, daughter of one MacMurran, manufacturer of motor trucks. Dusty receives a promise from the old man to the effect that if he will do some real work and publicize his motor trucks he will consent to his marrying his daughter. Dusty accepts the job and at first makes some big mistakes, including a night spent in the lock-up for driving his truck along a fashionable boulevard. But the final test comes when the great Cabrillo dam in the valley threatens to burst because of the heavy rains. Dusty musters a number of MacMurran's trucks and goes to the rescue, arriving through almost impassable roads in time to save the dam.

PROGRAM READER

The great servicees rendered by the powerful motor trucks that are being manufactured now, play an important part in Wally Reid's latest picture, "What's Your Hurry?", by Byron Morgan, author of Wally's recent successes, "The Roaring Road" and "Excuse My Dust." The majority of Wally's admirers would find it hard to imagine their star in the role of the hairy-chested hero, but he proves in this, his latest picture that he can don overalls and do a real he-man's work with the best of them. As a climax you will see how Wally saves the great Gabrillo dam from overflooding the valley, by his thoughtful work with the motor truck. Lois Wilson, considered one of the screen's most beautiful leading women, is seen in support.

SUGGESTIONS

Exploit this feature as one of the most novel pictures Wally Reid has ever done. Bring out the fact that a powerful motor truck plays an important part in the picture, and that a thrilling auto race is staged in the early part of the reelage. This is a real, he-man's picture and one that can be advertised to the limit without a chance of causing disappointments.

CATCH LINES

Wally Reid as the snappy racing driver and as the hairy-chested man of toil.

Huge motor truck driven into break in dam by fearless driver, saving the country from a flood.

Byron Morgan's popular Saturday Evening Post story, with Wally Reid starring.

"THE LITTLE WANDERER"
(Fox)

Heavier-Than-Usual Story Does Not Suit Shirley Mason

LARGELY because the story of "The Little Wanderer" is weighed down with a plot of undying hate, broken lives, and utter despair, this picture does not equal Miss Mason's previous productions. The star could carry a lighter story, more replete with human interest, and offering a characterization to better accentuate her personality. It is only in the first sequence that the author and director have given her an opportunity to catch the light and thoroughly human vein of characterization that was so pleasing in "Her Elephant Man" and "Molly and I." This is when she is disguised as a boy, living the life of a tramp.

Bringing her to the big city, the author throws in a youthful philanthropist, a long-lost father unjustly imprisoned for twelve years, and considerably drama as he strives to take his revenge, and separate the lovers. This relegates Shirley and her dainty ways somewhat to the background and the later half of the picture is without a comedy situation. We also believe the day is past when tolerance will be granted to a subtitle explaining that a healthy-looking young man is about to die of a broken heart (nothing else is wrong with him) unless his sweetheart returns to him. When she comes, he recovers immediately.

There is one scene, when, disguised as a boy, the star is befriended by the hero, who offers to share his room with her. This may be slightly suggestive, but should not be offensive, for it is dwelt upon no longer than necessary, and is essential to the continuity.

The titles in the beginning are so frequent and so long, that they have a tendency to drag the picture. Raymond McKee again supports the star and is entirely satisfactory. Director Mitchell has given only a few close-ups of the star, and has injected a few "cute" shots in the dramatic part of the story which are not necessary. The fade-out consists of a close-up of Miss Mason's feet, to illustrate that she is enjoying her sweetheart's kiss. This is not new, but probably still effective. In general it is a story ill-suited to the star and will not make her many new friends.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

Story and scenario by Denison Clift.
Directed by Howard M. Mitchell.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dainty Shirley Mason, one of the youngest and most successful female stars of picturedom, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————, in "The Little Wanderer." Although this is only Miss Mason's fourth starring picture she has already risen to the heights of popularity with the American movie patrons. Her work in the picturization of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island," in which she played the dauntless Jim Hawkins, will long be remembered as an exceedingly forceful and natural characterization.

In "The Little Wanderer," Miss Mason plays the part of a "nobody." Of course in the end she turns out to be "somebody," and a "somebody" who is very dear to a certain young man, instead of a motherless, fatherless little wanderer. She is also given the opportunity in this interesting comedy-drama to appear in boy's clothes and with her bobbed hair and slim figure she makes an attractive and picturesque "boy." Playing opposite to Miss Mason is Raymond McKee, who was seen with her in "Molly and I," and "Love's Harvest," two of the latest starring pictures.

"The Little Wanderer" was written by Denison Clift, and its neat little story throbs with heart interest from beginning to end, as it tells the tale of a friendless, penniless girl who runs away from an itinerant medicine show to fight her way in the big city. And a dilapidated figure she is with her torn trousers and torn coat, and three shining pennies in her pocket. The romance begins when the young man who befriended her discovers that she is a girl and helps her to obtain a position as a waitress in a third class restaurant.

On the whole "The Little Wanderer" is an ideal, light and clean comedy drama that assures a full evening's entertainment.

PROGRAM READER

"De cops are after me!" said a ragged, excited young boy, as he burst into the room. So the wealthy young man promptly hid the fugitive until the danger was past. And lucky it was that he did so, for unless he had he would never have known that the frank-faced "boy" was really a homeless little girl and there would have been no such interesting story as "The Little Wanderer," which will be the attraction at this theatre on ————. Shirley Mason is the star, and the girls will fall in love with her in the first part of the picture when she plays the ragged little tramp, and the men will adore her when she emerges in silks and satins—a vision of feminine loveliness. "The Little Wanderer" is clean, entertaining comedy-drama from beginning to end, with Shirley Mason's dainty personality running through it to fascinate you every second she is on the screen. Raymond McKee and Edwin Booth Tilton are in the supporting cast, and the direction was done by Howard Mitchell, who was responsible for "Molly and I" and "Love's Harvest," two of Miss Mason's previous successes.

SUGGESTIONS

Concentrate on the star almost entirely in this picture. Recall her previous pictures to mind if you have shown them, not forgetting "Treasure Island," in which she had a big part. The title makes possible a number of teaser campaigns. The best slogan would be "Have you seen the little wanderer?" Follow this up with a description of Shirley Mason. A few days before the showing insert: "The Little Wanderer is found! She is none other than Shirley Mason and will be at the ———— theatre on ————."

CATCH LINES

Recipe: Mix a few tears; twice as many laughs; five real, human characters, and season with the daintiest personality in filmdom—Shirley Mason.

"THE WOMAN IN HIS HOUSE"
(Mayer-First National)

Good Audience Picture with Great Child Role

AGAIN we have the husband engrossed in business, the neglected wife and the philanderer, with full details of what happens when these well known figures in movie history are properly manipulated except that in this instance enough digression from formula has been accomplished to give the offering a passable status as entertainment.

The picture has a prologue which presents the opportunity for some melodrama and also serves to introduce a somewhat distorted theme that "love is the greatest thing in the world."

With the exception of a sequence in which a child does some very clever work, with good incident provided, the feature gets a bad start, but later it looks up considerably especially in the scenes where the child is presented and finishes fairly strong.

Many of the titles are exceedingly romantic and strive without much success to put over the "message" idea, but all in all the production registers as good audience staff and will probably make a special appeal to the feminine sex. In this connection the child sequences will be a big factor.

The star is not given exceptional opportunities from a dramatic viewpoint and the picture gathers most of its strength in the performances of the supporting cast, especially from what has been accomplished with the child referred to.

From a technical standpoint the picture is fully up to present day standard and the direction is praiseworthy. It is probably the best offering to be put forth with Miss Harris as a star since the days when Lois Weber was directing her. Not a big picture but better than the average.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Hilda	Mildred Harris Chaplin
Phillip Emerson	Ramsey Wallace
Peter	Thomas Holding
Robert	George Fisher
Sigurd	Gareth Hughes
Hilda's Father	Winter Hall
Philip, Jr.	Master Richard Hedrick

Directed by John M. Stahl. Story by Irene Reels. Scenario by Madge Tyrone. Pliney Goodfriend, cameraman.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Woman in His House," with Mildred Harris Chaplin in the title role, presented as the young wife of a physician too engrossed in his profession to give her proper attention with the usual attendant results, is the stellar offering at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement which begins ————.

Miss Harris' latest vehicle is a heart interest story of unusual worth and has been produced with careful attention to detail and consistency. In the story told lovers of the drama will find one of the best pictures of the year. There is a big theme back of the actual drama, something to make every man and wife think before they allow small matters to deprive each other of their companionship.

The star of "The Woman in His House" has been provided with a strong supporting cast and among these is Richard Hedrick, the cleverest child actor of the day. This little shaver puts over a characterization that is worthy of a grown-up from every angle. As a picture with audience appeal, the attraction can be recommended as one of the best bills to be shown at the ———— this season.

PROGRAM READER

Ostensibly the star of "The Woman in His House," a new First National picture to be presented at this theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————, is Mildred Harris Chaplin, but in reality the production is all-star in its cast, such well known players as Ramsey Wallace, Thomas Holding, George Fisher, Gareth Hughes and Winter Hall having prominent roles. Master Richard Hedrick as "Philip, Jr.," gives a most wonderful interpretation of the big child role in the picture.

"The Woman in His House" is a fascinating heart interest story, telling how a little child patched the breach between husband and wife and brought happiness again where misunderstanding and discord had existed. This offering may be truthfully recommended as the best picture in which Mildred Harris Chaplin has ever appeared.

SUGGESTIONS

In exploiting this picture, after giving the star due credit for the best picture of recent releases and promising a heart interest story, it is suggested that the child, Richard Hedrick, be given special attention. Use all the stills you can obtain in which he appears. Make a play for the matinee crowd. Use your mailing list calling attention to the child role promising a revelation in juvenile acting. Have a small cut made of Richard when he is supposed to be crippled and use on the cards or letters you send out. If you haven't given the orphans of your city a show recently this is a good picture for them. There is an opportunity for exploitation in the "love vs. science" theme, but we would dwell more particularly on the heart interest stuff.

CATCH LINES

"A little child shall lead them" forms the basis of this human, true to life, heart interest story presenting in support of the star, a notable cast including Master Richard Hedrick, the greatest child actor of the screen.

A story of the miracle of mother love, one that is a revelation in child acting and which ranks as a true to life photodrama that will please and inspire. Mildred Harris Chaplin appears in the best role of her career and is supported by an all-star cast including Master Richard Hedrick.

Dead Men Tell No Tales

"THE HEART OF TWENTY"
(Brentwood-Robertson-Cole)

ZaSu Pitts Gives Good Performance

ZASU PITTS, the feminine Charles Ray of the screen, again comes forth in one of the those "small town" roles in "The Heart of Twenty," her latest Brentwood Production, released through Robertson-Cole. Sarah Y. Mason, who has furnished most of the stories serving as starring vehicles for this star since her appearance under the Brentwood banner, is credited with this one and no one can deny that she has created an ideal story for Miss Pitts. She has based her theme on the commonly accepted theory that much of humanity's sorrow is the result of self-consciousness. She has made the heroine of this type and temperament.

Miss Pitts is an artist with the unsophisticated stuff and although she has on some occasions been given poor material in her stories she has never failed to live up to her reputation for excellence in interpreting the "small town" roles. This sort of work is her forte and it is to her's and the producer's credit that they have always striven to keep her within these bounds of dramatic interpretation. Put neat little ribbons on Miss Pitts' hair, dress her in gingham and give her free reign in expression and she will go through with one of these roles to perfection.

This she does in "The Heart of Twenty" with the able assistance of her supporting cast, headed by Tom Gallery, as leading man, in the role of the "nice young fellow" who saves Katie from the tragedy of her own self-consciousness. Director Henry Kolker has supplied ideal "small town" atmosphere and has placed emphasis on the excellent opportunities the story gives for touching the heart-strings of an audience.—Length, 5 reels.—Joseph L. Kelley.

THE CAST

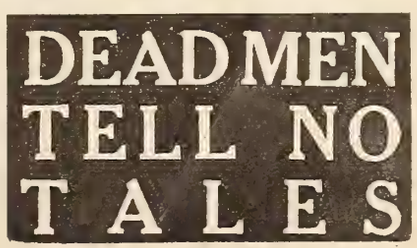
Kattie Abbott	Zasu Pitts
Aunt Lucy	Aileen Manning
Jimmie Hearne	Tom Gallery
Henry Higginbottom	Percy Challenger
J. Dale Briggs	Hugh Saxon
J. Wiseman	Jack Pratt
Rusty	Verne Einter
Alma Dale Briggs	Billie Lind

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Zasu Pitts, the inimitable comedienne, sometimes referred to as "the feminine Charles Ray of the screen," will hold first place on the ———— theatre's program for the week beginning ————. Miss Pitts has gained considerable reputation for her interpretations of "small-town" parts and it is seldom if ever, that she is seen without the bounds of these roles. In her latest picture, written by Sarah Y. Mason, the author who has written the majority of her starring vehicles of late release, Miss Pitts has the role of Sadie Abbott, a little country girl—one of the millions who live within the bounds of the small town—who takes herself seriously and makes of her life a near-tragedy, simply because she believes the whole world to be against her. But—the "nice young fellow" comes along and in him Sadie sees the silver cloud showing the way to her happiness. With him as an inspiration, Sadie takes a hand in the political campaign for her choice for town mayor and shows that, after all, there is lots to live for, if one looks on the sunny side of life.

PROGRAM READER

The feminine Charles Ray of the screen, otherwise known as Zasu Pitts, the silent drama's clever little comedienne and interpreter of "small-town" roles, is the star of "The Heart of Twenty," the main attraction at the ———— theatre this week. Miss Pitts is appearing in a typical "small-town" story written especially for her by Sarah Y. Mason, the author of many of her successes before the camera. In her supporting cast are seen Tom Gallery, as leading man; Aileen Manning, Percy Challenger, Hugh Saxon, Jack Pratt, Verne Winter and Billie Lind. Henry Kolker directed.



SUGGESTIONS

Play this feature up as a star attraction mentioning emphatically, the name of Miss Pitts. She has a large following who admire her particular kind of screen work. The author, too, should come in for her share of newspaper notice, in connection with the exploitation of the picture, as she is credited with the authorship of many of Miss Pitts' former successes. Mention the names of her supporting cast and her director, Henry Kolker, who is pretty widely known.

CATCH LINES

The "small-town" girl wakes up to the good times she has been missing.

Are you one of the many who believe all the world to be against you? Are you self-conscious and unhappy in the state?

"HERITAGE"

(W. L. Roubert Production—State Rights)

Worth a Trial on Strength of Title

THE producers of "Heritage" haven't given to Willard Mack's story the strength of drama that could have been given it by more careful direction and a bit more expense in sets and general production work. A rather clumsy bit of direction is seen in the first reel when the episode explaining the disappearance of the child is screened, for here we find an infant child in a carriage accidentally pushed down a long declivity and the convenient appearance of the abductors at the water's edge. Passing this point in the story, the director, W. L. Roubert, does tolerably well with the story, getting some good heart interest by the clever acting of the youthful star, Matty Roubert, and Joseph Burke, an actor of long experience and one who has contributed some excellent work before the camera, his acting in Edison's production of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Kidnapped," produced some four or five years ago under the direction of Alan Crosland, standing out as one of the best character impersonations of the silent drama. Philip Sanford is good in a heavy part.

Willard Mack's story is just what the title implies, a revelation of the part heridity may play in one's life, and in this particular case, dramatizing the events in the life of the child of theatrical parents, kidnapped when an infant and restored to his parents years later, because, like his father, he has followed the theatrical profession and eventually comes under his father's management as a child tragedian before he is recognized as the son.

The title of this picture will, no doubt, incite sufficient curiosity to draw as an independent attraction. And, too, some of its drama has been done well and acted well, with the heart interest element predominating throughout. Matty Roubert is a clever youngster, but we would not go so far as to say he is a star nor that he will draw as a star. The production's big advantage is in its title and in Willard Mack's connection as author. "Heritage" could have been a bigger and better picture. As it is offered to the independent buyers, it represents an average attraction which will have average success. It's worth a trial by the buyers.—Five Reels.—Joseph L. Kelley.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Willard Mack, whose stage and screen productions have met with unusual success notably his "Tiger Rose," "Kick In" and "The Big Chance," is the author of the special attraction, "Heritage," coming to the ———— theatre the week beginning ————. Heading the cast is Matty Roubert, a youngster who has attracted quite some attention because of his remarkable dramatic performances, notably his work in "Heritage," wherein he portrays the part of a child actor, the son of theatrical parents, who is kidnapped while an infant and obliged to make his own way. He meets an old tragedian with whom he shares a modest room. His old friend instructs him in the way of the stage and the boy develops to be a remarkable child actor. He, while still a mere boy, comes under the management of his own father who fails to recognize him until he has made a big Broadway hit, and then through marks of heritage he is identified as the son who had been kidnapped years before. Mr. Mack, the author, has given to his story a touch of heart interest that rings with all the dramatic effect of which the subject is capable. The theme is a big one and certain to prove of high entertainment value.

PROGRAM READER

Heredity plays a big part in the lives of many of us as has been proved by certain investigations, carefully made, by an eminent scientist. This scientist has shown where a certain family, prominent during the revolutionary period, had given to civilization more than one hundred criminals, proving that heredity is something to be reckoned with. Willard Mack, the successful playwright, has written the photodrama, "Heritage," which shows that a child, kidnapped from his parents, while an infant-in-arms, follows his parents in the theatrical profession, though not being under their influence and considered dead, until the boy had reached stardom on the stage, coming under the management of his own father before his relation as son was discovered. Matty Roubert, a clever child actor, has the principal role.

SUGGESTIONS

The big exploitation value in this attraction is the title first, and the name of the author, Willard Mack, second. Play up the fact that heritage has been known to assert itself in many ways and that it has fashioned the lives of many of us. Matty Roubert, a child actor of unusual ability, heads the cast and should be given especial mention as also should the name of Joseph Burke, one of the profession's oldest and most able character men. Exploit this picture as a special attraction, laying emphasis on the title and its meaning.

CATCH LINES

A boy kidnapped while an infant in arms, returned to his parents, years after kidnapping, through marks of heredity. "Heritage," written by Willard Mack, presents unusual drama.

"THE WHITE RIDER"

(Foundation Film Corp.)

A Good Western with Many Thrills and Exciting Moments

EXHIBITORS whose patrons are partial to the western drama, with its thrills, suspense and dramatic moments, need not be afraid to book "The White Rider," for it contains all the necessary ingredients to make it popular with their clientele.

Its story is above the average run of westerns and the author has succeeded in concealing the identity of the leading male character until the end in such a way that suspense is sure to be aroused.

The usual ridings and shootings occur, but they are arranged in such a way that they do not detract from the story, although it appeared in spots as though too much time was taken up with long shots of the riders appearing in the distance and riding up to the camera, and visa versa.

Joe Moore, the youngest of the Moore brothers, and Eileen Sedgwick are the stars, and their good work, especially that of Moore, whose daring feats in horsemanship are a delight, is an added attraction.

The direction is up to standard, especially as to the action, which is kept at an even tempo throughout.

A youth from the east is in love with a western girl, who recripocates in a casual way because he is not of the strong virile type. And then along comes a mysterious rider who is daring in action and physical prowess and who creates a strong interest in the young girl which ripens into love.

When a wrong has to be righted the mysterious rider is always on the job in his suit of white. His identity is withheld in such a way that in the end a surprise is sprung when "The Whte Rider" and the youth from the East are found to be the same persons.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Directed by William J. Craft.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Joe Moore and Eileen Sedgwick in the Foundation Film Corporation feature, "The White Rider," will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

It is a western picture of the times when dare devil riding and quick shooting were the essential requirements for men who inhabited the "wild and woolly" with plenty of romance intermingled to give the feature attractive qualities.

The stars, Joe Moore and Eileen Sedgwick, are ideal in the roles they portray. And it might be said here that better horsemanship has never been displayed than the quality shown by Joe Moore, who is the youngest brother of the famous Moore family.

The story tells of the love of a young fellow from the East who becomes enamored of a Western girl. His love is only casually returned because he is of the tenderfoot variety. But when the young woman discovers that this is only a sham and that he is the notorious "White Rider" who has saver her father from his enemies, the tables are turned and love has its way.

PROGRAM READER

If you care for Western pictures, the kind that thrill and excite you and at the same time fill your mind with the romantic atmosphere of the old West, see "The White Rider," which will appear at this theatre on ———— of next ————.

Joe Moore, the youngest of the famous Moore brothers, and Eileen Sedgwick are the stars, whose splendid acting, dare devil riding and love making are an added attraction.

The story, which is of the unusual sort, has been well directed and the various roles are portrayed in true Western fashion.

When the young heroine saw that her father's claim was to be wrested from him by defrauding schemers, she sought aid from her Eastern lover. It was in vain, however, for he proved to be a tenderfoot.

But when it turns out that he is the notorious "White Rider" who so skillfully brought the villains to bay, all things are righted and love has its way.

SUGGESTIONS

If your patrons care for Western pictures, this one should interest them.

It has a good story with plenty of action and romance intermingled and a good cast in the prominent roles.

You can bill the stars as strong as you like without any fear of a comeback. Mention Moore's work as a horseman, for he does some daring riding.

Also run a little account of the story in your town papers, for it should interest.

If you care for street exploitation dress a horseman up in a white costume and let him ride through your town.

CATCH LINES

She wanted him to be brave and strong in order to gain her love. Did he prove that he was worth while? See "The White Rider."

In what way did the tenderfoot show that he was equal to the love of a beautiful girl? See "The White Rider."

Why did the young man withhold his identity? See "The White Rider."

EVERYBODY'S GOING Paramount WEEK

A National Event

IT'S going to be holiday week for America beginning September 5th.

The tribute the motion picture-going public will pay to the better class exhibitors—the exhibitors of Paramount Pictures—is going to be enormous.

Will that tribute come to you as it will to thousands of your fellow exhibitors?

It should.

You owe it to your theatre, to your own prestige, to your future success.

And even now it's not too late for you to join in this great event of the new season—to put yourself on record as the type of exhibitor who has made better pictures possible.

HOMESPUN FOLKS

featuring

LLOYD HUGHES

and an all-star cast

Story by Julien Josephson ~ ~ ~ Directed by John Griffith Wray

A Heart-Drama of Ten Thousand Small Towns and Sixty Million Small Town People.

Another "Old Homestead"

And "Way Down East"

"Homespun Folks" is the title. Julien Josephson, who wrote many genuine, natural dramas that increased the fame of Charles Ray, is the author—and this is his greatest story.

Thomas H. Ince, with the authority of his great skill and genius, has provided as his first Associated Producers special production a clean, fine, wholesome American theme in a small-town environment typical of all the small communities that ever were.

Now you know why Thomas H. Ince more than a year ago placed Lloyd Hughes under contract. He saw in him a quaint, natural boy who would become an idol of the American people. In "Homespun Folks" the Ince star-making vision is fulfilled.

"Homespun Folks" is not a cocktail drama. It has romance and tenderness. It has pathos and robust comedy. It has tenseness and the rush of melodramatic action with big scenes involving hundreds of people. It is a beautiful mother story that hits the greatest target in the world—the human heart.

"Here are the days of Triangle beginning all over again," exhibitors will say when they receive Thomas H. Ince's first Associated Producers' special production, "Homespun Folks."

Historic days those were in production. You still think and talk about them in every managerial office. New blood; new personalities to become famous and enrich your theatre earnings; new ideas; new technique; but mature, skilled producers with sure and certain mastery of their craft. All of this and more is what Associated Producers now mean to the industry—this year and for years to come.

EXHIBITORS WRITE IN ABOUT NEAL HART

Unusual Interest Has Been Aroused by National Advertising

There has been one rather unusual result that has followed the nation-wide advertising which has been running in the trade papers concerning the forthcoming series of super-features starring Neal Hart.

Exhibitors from far and wide have been attracted by this advertising and have written direct to the offices of the Independent Films Association in Chicago asking for information.

Over seventy per cent of the United States has closed under contract and franchise awarded to the local independent exchange which will handle direct bookings to theatres. Lists of these local exchanges have been given widespread publicity by the Association. Yet in spite of this fact, letters from the theatres continue to arrive in Chicago.

"WHALE OF A STAR"

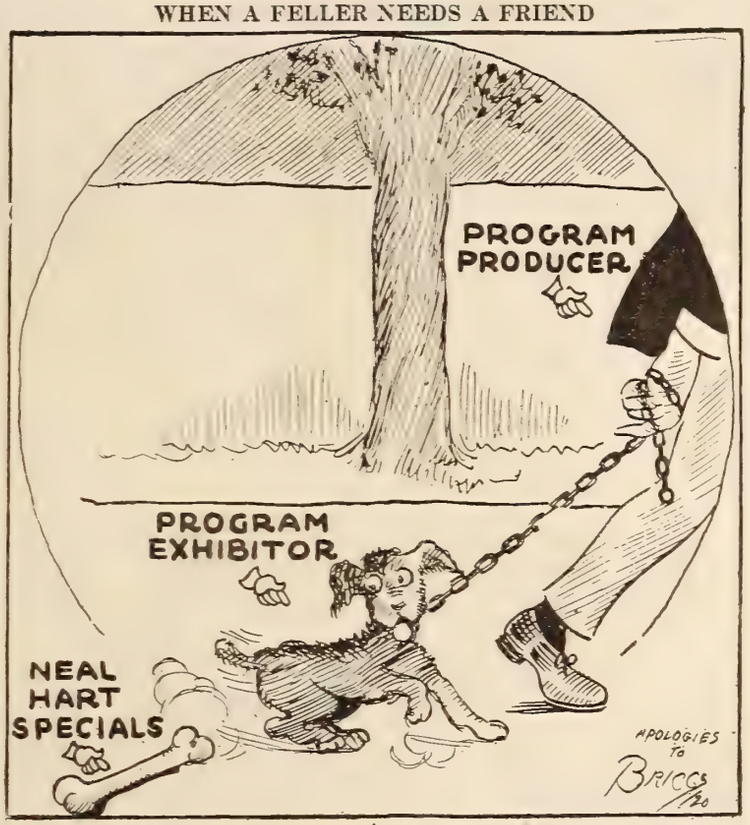
"Neal Hart has always been a big favorite with the patrons at my house," writes an Oregon exhibitor. "They don't fall for male stars of the ———— type. They like Hart because he is a real man and shows it. If you get the right kind of stories for your five-reel pictures, we'll have a whale of a star in Neal Hart before we know it."

An exhibitor located in a small town in Texas wants to know if all of the Hart Specals will be "Westerns." He remarks that in Texas they are mighty strong for this type of picture when the hero is obviously a real Westerner and not a would-be one. Neal Hart is very popular there, he reports.

OUTDOOR PLAYS DEMANDED

Judging from these letters, there is a very widespread public reaction in favor of plays of the outdoor variety having a wealth of human appeal of the homely, wholesome sort. Vamp stories, society stuff and problem plays seems to be on a decline. The old "back to nature" craving that hits all people sooner or later seems to be manifesting itself in the public appetite for entertainment; and stories with genuine characters whom everybody knows in real life, with action and situations that do not constitute an insult to the intelligence, acted and not over-acted by the players—stories of this sort are ringing the bell of public approval as never before.

FIRST VEHICLE SPLENDID



The opinion expressed by the Oregon exhibitor, that "we'll have a whale of a star in Neal Hart before we know it," is a view shared quite generally throughout the country on the part of exhibitors and exchange men as well.

It is freely predicted that Hart will find himself in the first rank of box office attractions following the release on October 1 of his first Pinnacle production, "Hell's Oasis." No better vehicle could have been selected for Hart than this picturization of the well known story of "The Fighting Parson," which played season after season and year after year on the stage.

FEDERATED JOINS US

It is a distinct pleasure to welcome the Federated Film Exchange of Kansas City to membership in the Independent Films Association. The Neal Hart Specials will be given the best of handling in the Kansas City territory by this organization.

WHEN A FELLER NEEDS A FRIEND

WE WANT TO KNOW

The News would like to hear from exhibitors in all parts of the country on this question:

Do you prefer dealing with independent exchanges, providing they can supply you with desirable productions, and why?

There are no restrictions. The News is making the inquiry to get the exhibitors' angle on a question that is looming bigger and bigger all the time. We shall from time to time publish pertinent extracts from your letters. Address Independent Films Association, 606 Consumers Building, Chicago.

SECOND HART FILM WILL BE "SKYFIRE"

The title of Neal Hart's second production for Pinnacle now being started at Glendale, Calif., is "SKYFIRE."

The locale of this story is the Canadian Northwest, and the name of the production carries a reference to the aurora borealis, or northern lights. This phenomenon is occasionally visible in the lower latitudes of Canada, and ancient tradition has always connected its appearance with death or calamity of some sort.

The story, "SKYFIRE" is built around this legend—and is not only spectacular scenically but thrill-packed with the mystery-suspense movie fans go out of their way to enjoy.

"We never sleep except at night," writes JOHN CALMAN, of the Co-operative Film Co. of Birmingham, Ala. And that's the only time for an independent exchange man to sleep, says we!

Old Man Dooley's son Tom, of Syracuse is awaiting his first print of "Hell's Oasis" with great interest. "If it's as good as I'm expecting," he says, "I have my whole territory booked already."

WELLITSBETTERTHANTHAT

CAST FOR "HELL'S OASIS"

The cast for "HELL'S OASIS," the first of the Neal Hart Specials, which will be released October 1, exhibits one of the strongest groupings ever assembled for a Western dramatic feature.

Neal Hart's leading lady in "HELL'S OASIS" is Betty Brown, who portrays the innocent girl pitched suddenly into the turbulent and lurid life of a town where vice and crime reign supreme and the little frame church has a "For Rent" sign on it. Miss Brown is a splendid horsewoman and has had three years film experience. She has previously supported Neal Hart as well as other well known male stars, Lew Cody among them.

The vampire is played by Inez Gomez. She has supported Sessue Hayakawa, Dustin Farnum and other leading stars, and was in Goldwyn's all-star cast for "Out of the Storm," as well as Ince's all-star cast for "Dangerous Hours."

Wiliam Quinn, who plays the heavy in "HELL'S OASIS, has supported Warren Kerrigan, Betty Compson, Lew Cody and many others. Mr. Quin Lew Cody and many others. Mr. Quinn was in legitimate stock over nine years and has played in Lon Chaney and George Larkin productions.

Johnny Tyke, a cowboy who has made good as an actor, is another interesting member of the cast for the Hart picture. Tyke has a national reputation as winner of roping and riding contests and is a professional "bull-dogger." He has been in pictures eight years and created quite a sensation in the character he portrayed opposite Harry Carey in "Three Mounted Men."

Not by Chance

SOME people think that a news scoop is solely the result of enterprise. This is only partly true. Scoops are not a matter of chance. They are the result of organization—the result of co-ordinating hundreds of elements, only one of which is Enterprise.

The organization behind International News is perfected to the point where a certain number of scoops a year are assured even before the year begins. This is merely the working out of the Law of Averages—the identical law upon which insurance companies figure their rates. Just as insurance companies know before the year begins how many persons are apt to collect insurance that year, so does International News know beforehand that the service is going to score a certain number of "beats."

So—when you book International News you do not book merely a news reel—you actually contract for the services of an organization that reaches into the farthest corners of the earth—an organization working to bring to your house the big and little news first—working to present the most interesting features to your audience—working to give you scoops that are as certain as tomorrow's sunrise. This is the sum and substance and success of

WITHOUT a doubt, "THE HIDDEN LIGHT" is the one best bet that has been offered the independent exchange man in many moons.

"The Hidden Light" stars Dolores Cassinelli and is the best picture in which the famous Cameo girl has appeared. Miss Cassinelli's work in this production is excellent and demonstrates her ability as the screen's foremost emotional artist.

The story is full of action and suspense and contains the most remarkable climax ever conceived.

Do people talk about the scenic pictures your theatre shows? Do they remember the brand—do they ask for more?

That single reel should stand out on your program like a wonderful story, some gem of verse amid a mass of mere printed matter.

SCENICS BEAUTIFUL

Direction of Robert C. Bruce

THE KIND YOUR PATRONS WONT LET YOU STOP SHOWING

FOR five years these pictures have remained in a class of their own; they have grown from pioneers in the field to necessities in better theatres everywhere. If you are showing "just a scenic," there are many to choose between. If you want your patrons to recognize your theatre as the best, there is no choice—you will book the Bruces.

Two new series of the Scenics Beautiful have ust been completed—one taken in the Northwest and on the Alaskan coast, the other in Cuba and Jamaica. They are triumphs of the camera and the artist.

And there are scores of other Bruces. And every Bruce picture that you have not shown is a promise of delight for your patrons.

Read what the leading Musical Trade Paper says about Motion Picture News and THEATRE MUSIC

MUSICAL AMERICA

Vol. XXXII. No. 13 JULY 24, 1920 NEW YORK

Apropos of Charles D. Isaacson, I notice that the Motion Picture News, which occupies a prominent and influential position in the great world of the movies and which appeals to the 25,000 theaters that present film pictures in this country, has started a department to furnish practical information regarding music to the managers of these places and so has engaged Mr. Isaacson for this work. Mr. Isaacson has come into prominence in the last few years with regard to his work in connection with the Globe free concerts, the 1000th of which was recently held at the Metropolitan Opera House. He has already won a distinguished reputation, as a writer, through his contributions to Collier's, Hearst's Magazine, the Pictorial Review, The Theater, Physical Culture and other leading publications.

As we know, music in such leading movie houses, in New York, as the Capitol, Rivoli, Rialto and the Strand, has, through the work of Hugo Riesenfeld and Mr. Rothapfel, come to a notable degree of excellence. Large orchestras, consisting of some of the best musicians in the city, render the highest class of music and what is more, do so to the evident appreciation of the large audiences which assemble in these houses.

Now it is proposed, through the enterprise of the Motion Picture News, to carry the good work further and by propaganda and practical suggestion to improve the music in the movie houses all over the country and it is for this special work that Mr. Isaacson has been engaged.

His appointment is all the more fitting as no one has done more to bring music, through the Globe free concerts and other enterprises, within the knowledge and grasp of the masses. Incidentally it should be put to Mr. Isaacson's credit that he makes regular visits with his concerts to asylums, prisons, schools, hospitals and so has accomplished an amount of missionary work whose value cannot be easily estimated.

Through these concerts, it has been demonstrated to educators, and especially to those who are interested in prison reform and in the humane treatment of prisoners and insane persons, that the greatest remedial force that can be applied is "good music."

The undertaking of the Motion Picture News will be watched with a great deal of interest and it is certainly to the credit of this representative and reputable periodical that appreciating the trend of the times, it has come to realize the importance of presenting good music to the masses who frequent the movie theaters. That it had the good sense, as well as discrimination, to select for its representative a young man who, it can be said without any flattery, has already accomplished wonders in bringing home to the masses not what they can do for music but what music can do for them, is most fortunate.

Among the direct developments of this undertaking by the Motion Picture News will unquestionably be that many of the larger movie houses through the country will follow the lead of the large movie houses in New York and enlarge their musical entertainment by making a competent symphony orchestra a prominent feature. In this way, they will not only cultivate and improve the taste of their audiences, but will attract to their auditoriums a class that has hitherto perhaps not been among their most frequent patrons.

This will naturally open new fields for the professional musician and for all those who are interested in the manufacture and sale of musical instruments. Even in the houses where they cannot see their way to engage a symphony orchestra, it will mean a very decided advance from the present orchestra, which sometimes consists of not much more than a piano, or a piano and violin or piano and cornet.

It is only those who are in touch with the vast opportunities for educational work presented by the movie houses who can have a proper estimate of the importance of an enterprise which will go far to aid and supplement all the various efforts being made at the present time to increase the appreciation of the better class of music among the masses of the people.

"BRIDE 13"

A serial in fifteen acts

Staged by Richard Stanton

Story by E. Lloyd Sheldon

Scenario by Edward Sedgwick

Moving Picture World says: "It presents a whirlwind of action and is undoubtedly one of the fastest serials that have been placed on the market."

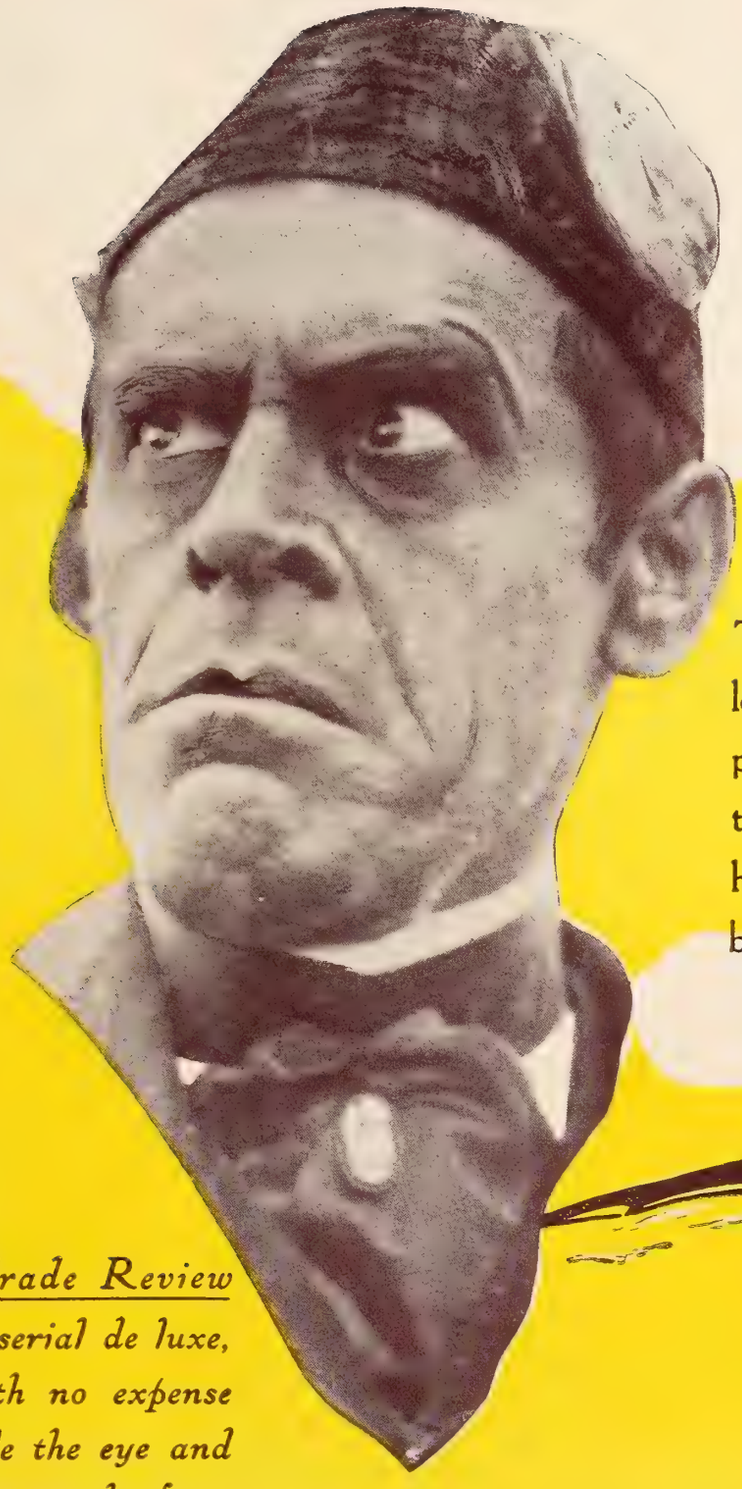
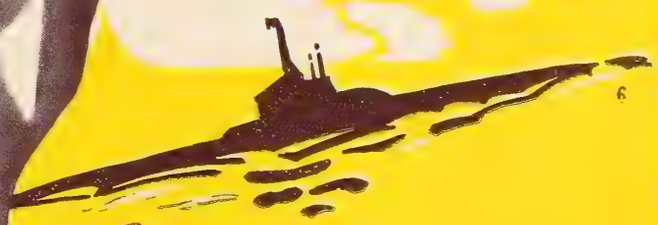
The thirteenth bride, a figure of sterling courage and steadfast devotion—the embodiment of the finest qualities of American Womanhood.

"BRIDE 13"

The Hero whose unswerving loyalty, unconquerable bravery and keen decision outwit the knaveries of the pirates, and upset the gigantic crime plotted beneath the sea.



The Society Accomplice of the Mahdi—a suave and polished "gentleman" who utilizes his acquaintance with wealthy families to betray them into shame and misery.



Motion Picture News says: "Action and more action is the keynote. There is not a let-up, no slackening in speed or punch. — The seaplane stunts are certainly 'hair-raisers.'"

"BRIDE 13"

The Mahdi—arch villain, leader of the vile band of pirates that seeks to besmirch the hearths of the wealthiest homes; a sinister force symbolical of the darkest evil.

Exhibitor's Trade Review says: "It is a serial de luxe, all right, with no expense spared to dazzle the eye and stir the spectators to the fever point of excitement."

Exhibitors Herald says: "As was to be expected, the picture market is the richer for William Fox's entry into the serial field. 'Bride 13' is a chapter play of unusual and salable qualities, well supplied with the elements that make for box-office prosperity."

That's what Edward L. Hyman, Managing Director of the Brooklyn Strand says—and further: "It is one of the finest productions I have ever played, and the audiences were so delighted they applauded enthusiastically, a rare thing in a motion picture theatre.

"The play is clean, wholesome, human and so different from the usual run of pictures it was a rare treat. It's the kind of picture that builds up a theatre's reputation."

Whitman Bennett

Behind All Great Pictures There's A Master Mind

In some pictures the star is everything.

In some pictures the play is the thing.

In still others it's the producer.

Whitman Bennett is such a producer—because he knows how to pick a great star and a great play—and to pick both so that they fit each other—and also because he understands the detail of artistic development that goes to make a really great production.

It takes brains to make a great picture, brains plus experience.

Associated First National feels that exhibitors should know something of Whitman Bennett, so that they will have the same confidence in him that we have.

He's a university man; a student of the drama and a writer of dramas.

He's been:

A newspaper man of wide experience—including dramatic writer on the New York Times.

General publicity representative of the Shubert Theatrical Co.

Publicity representative for a chain of 200 shows.

Special publicity representative of the Mutual Film Corp'n.

Publicity representative of Lasky Feature Play Co.

Whitman Bennett's Is the Mind Behind "The Master Mind"

He's been:

Manager of the R. & M. Syndicate, backing David W. Griffith.

Business Manager, Lasky Feature Play Co.

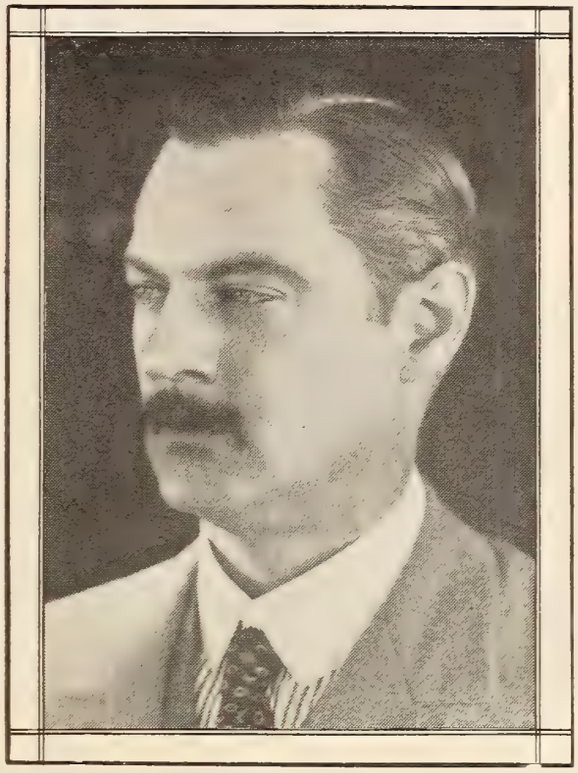
Office Manager, Famous Players-Lasky Co., and assistant to Mr. Lasky.

General Production Manager, Famous Players-Lasky Co.

Owned and conducted several road shows.

Partner in many motion picture theatres, including the Burland, Miners, the Spooner, New York City; Rialto, Flatbush.

He's a SHOWMAN!



Results count. They prove what brains plus experience can do.

We have seen Whitman Bennett's first personally supervised production for Associated First National, "The Master Mind."

We can assure you with absolute verity that it is one of the greatest and most finished productions ever filmed.

There is a great star and a great story—a study of the human mind as audiences know it. There is depth to it, but that is not all. There is action, tense action; thrilling dramatic situations; human interest—everything that goes to make a really GREAT picture.

Time Tells

THERE is nothing transient nor temporary about the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. It had its inception when the motion picture industry was in its infancy. It is in its ascendency now, when the motion picture industry is in its prime,—and it is our expectancy that it will still be the leader in poster production when photoplays are ages old. And if the time ever comes when moving pictures vanish from the face of the earth, RITCHEY posters will still be treasured in museums for that which they are,—genuine works of art.

For they are works of art! Advertising art! Which is the greatest and most complex art of all. For in addition to the rare qualities that go into the making of an ordinary work of art, in advertising art is the added factor of psychology.

In the RITCHEY poster that factor is worked out no less carefully than the others. Its ability to appeal to the psychology of the crowd is one of the strongest characteristics of the RITCHEY poster. It makes that appeal strongly and with an absolute conviction. And it gets the appeal over every time. More than that, a motion picture poster can not do. The rest is in the hands of the ticket sellers,—and the RITCHEY poster will keep them busy all the time.

VOL. XXII SEPT. 4, 1920 No. XI

Prices and Fundamentals

THERE is a striking parallel today between the high cost of living and the high cost of picture rentals; or, we might be more general and say that the economic ills we are facing as a country today are quite similar to the economic disturbances of this young picture industry.

The high cost of living arouses the same resentment in the breast of the average citizen as does high rental cost with the average exhibitor. If you want to get Mr. Average Citizen good and mad you've only to remind him of what he pays for sugar, shoes, rent and the like; and the one sure way to make Mr. Exhibitor curse is to mention a star's salary.

And yet getting mad is having no effect whatever on sugar or stars.

THE country today is young, just as is the picture industry; economically speaking it has been born anew, after a vast upheaval, just as it was after the Civil War and after the War of the Revolution. It is starting life, in an economic way, all over again, and just like a new industry, it will have to go through an era of growing pains and diseases, and reach stable and immune maturity.

When the citizen gets good and mad the politician is eager to pacify him; so we have laws made to jam prices down. And the prices don't jam.

The trouble with the price fixing laws is that they work from the top down instead of from the bottom up. Economic troubles don't come from surface causes; they begin deep down and they will have to be corrected deep down. The one law that fixes prices is the fundamental law of supply and demand; and it is not only futile but decidedly dangerous to try and block this one natural law with a lot of artificial ones.

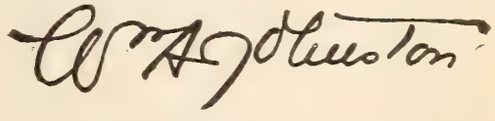
SO with this industry of ours: the one sure law that is guiding its course, all the time, is the economic law of supply and demand. It is simply a matter of the manufacturer supplying, through the exhibitor, what the public demands. That is it sounds simple; but every trouble we are up against in this business today is due to somebody's blind effort—be he exhibitor, distributor or producer—to short cut or buck against this inevitable law.



It would be nice if we had a commission in this business, a commission of competent men who could delve down to the roots of things and untangle the surface snarls. But it can't be done and if it could it would take half our fun away. What would we do if we didn't have constant wrangles and misunderstandings between the exhibitor, distributor and producer?

Monopoly, of course, won't solve the trouble. There isn't enough money in the world to monopolize this peculiar business.

Time and economics alone will unwind the tangles in this business. In the meantime there will be brilliant and short lived successes. But the old steam roller of supply and demand will flatten out the bumps in its ponderous and patient fashion.

All of which, in picture language, means that the man who makes good pictures will sell them; and if he sells them fairly to the other fellow he will prosper.

This simple situation is fundamental to any other which, from time to time may arise, and even loom very large for the time being.

Gore Bros. and Lesser Add to California Chain

Six additional theatres were added to the circuit controlled by Gore Bros. and Sol. Lesser during the past week, they having purchased during that period the American and Belvedere at Pomona, Cal., Neptune and California theatres at Venice, Cal., the Capitol theatre at Redondo Beach, Cal., and the La Petite at Ocean Park. In addition negotiations were closed for suitable site for a house to be erected at Pomona, Cal. This project provides for a house of 1,800 seats. During the same week actual construction work was started on the new Hollywood theatre, which will have a seating capacity of 2,500 and represents the consolidation of the Hollywood, Apollo and Windsor theatres in Hollywood with the Gore Bros.-Sol Lesser interests, which represent a million dollar corporation. Gore Bros.-Sol Lesser interests now control thirty theatres in Los Angeles and vicinity.

Mississippi Exhibitors Form Association

At a meeting of theatre owners from all sections of Mississippi held in Jackson recently, an organization was launched of the league of independent motion picture exhibitors of Mississippi. The purpose of the organization was declared to be to promote the interest of the motion picture business, and to give to its members protection from whatever outside forces may seek to dominate the industry in this state. S. V. Anderson of the Peoples Theatre Company, Greenville, Miss., was named temporary secretary, and a second meeting called for August 29, 1920, at which permanent organization is to be effected. A representative of the National Association will be present.

Atkinson Goes West to Visit Metro Studios

William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, left New York on Thursday for a visit to Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, Cal. Mr. Atkinson's present trip to the Pacific Coast, as has been the case in previous westward jaunts, will be in the nature of a tour of inspection of the Hollywood plant.

According to his present plans, Mr. Atkinson will be gone about a month.

Labor Day Opening for New Ascher Theatre

Ascher Brothers announce that they will open their Commercial theatre at Ninety-second street and Commercial avenue, Chicago, on or about Labor Day. The Commercial is the latest addition to their circuit of motion picture theatres operated under the Ascher policy of highest class entertainment obtainable.

This enterprising firm has also under construction in Chicago, the West Englewood on Sixty-third street and Marshfield avenue, which will be open about January 1st, 1921. The Portage Park on Milwaukee avenue and Irving Park boulevard, which will be open about October 15th, and the Roosevelt in one of the busiest shopping sections of the Loop, on State street between Washington and Randolph streets.

Vandenbergh-Paramount Expedition Back

With more than 36,000 feet of motion picture film, depicting the primitive natives of East Africa and Uganda, their racial characteristics and tribal customs, the Vandenburgh-Paramount Expedition has returned to the United States with what is declared to be the rarest collection of photographic treasure ever obtained in foreign lands.

The expedition, which sailed from New York last September and was the largest photographic and scientific mission ever launched, was financed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and conducted with the co-operation of the American Museum of Natural History.

Arthur Todd Is Awarded Prize for Photography

The first gold medal given by the National Cinematographic Society for master photography, has been awarded to Arthur Todd, cameraman for the Pathe-Brunton Feature, "The Devil to Pay." Todd was voted the prize following a review of "The Devil to Pay" in Los Angeles.

Several of the close-ups in this feature were photographed with a chemically treated lens of Todd's own invention.

Censorship Bill Dead in Georgia

Word has been received at the offices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry that the Georgia Legislature has adjourned without passing the censorship bill which has been one of the most active measures before that body this year.

Arthur Lucas had charge of the forces in opposition to this bill and he was assisted by the exhibitors of Georgia as well as the daily newspapers of the state. When the bill was introduced representatives from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry were sent to Georgia and they assisted the local committee in its work.

This Georgia victory closes the season's campaign of the National Association against censorship. During the year censorship bills have been defeated in a score of states through the joint co-operation of the Censorship Committee, the exchange managers' associations, and in many localities the prominent exhibitors have given their aid to the campaign.

Under the direction of Chairman Gabriel L. Hess, the committee is now preparing for censorship battles in at least 36 states during the coming winter, when more Legislatures will be in session than in any two previous years.

A. E. Rousseau, of Pathe, Returns from Europe

Arthur E. Rousseau, manager of Pathe's Foreign Department, returned last week from Europe on "La Lorraine." Mr. Rousseau visited England, France and Belgium and feels very enthusiastic about the motion picture conditions in Europe. Commenting on the situation, he said:

"While I was in London, about the middle of July, not less than eight legitimate shows were taken off during one week on account of bad business and it was the consensus of opinion in the trade that this was due to the success of motion pictures. There is serious talk of converting several legitimate houses into permanent picture theatres as there is a great need for more cinemas which cannot be built on account of Government restrictions.

"I don't think that there is another country in Europe where the motion picture business has developed so rapidly as in Belgium. Theatres are popping up in the smallest communities and towns which had only one theatre before the war have two or three now."

B. S. Moss Moves Offices in New York City

B. S. Moss announce that they have moved their office from 1441 Broadway, New York City, to the seventh floor of the Palace theatre building, on Seventh avenue near 47th street. The change was made on August 27.

Musicians' Strikes End in Some Cities; Continue in Others

Cleveland and Atlanta Strikes Reported Settled; Buffalo Tie-Up Avoided

THE strike fever, which has been spreading throughout every industry in recent months, seems to be at its heyday just at present in the motion picture business. From many sections of the country come reports of striking musicians and striking operators. New York city only recently settled its strike of laboratory workers, which threatened for a minute to seriously affect the output of finished prints from the laboratories.

In every striking city, the operators and musicians demanded large increases in salary. The Cleveland operators came forward with a demand for a hundred per cent increase, presenting a wage scale to the exhibitors which made their pay dependent upon the scale of admissions of the theatre. According to latest reports, a satisfactory agreement was reached at a conference in New York on August 20th.

Operators, stage hands and musicians in Albany, N. Y., are threatening to tie up the picture houses; many Indianapolis theatres are dependent upon pipe organs for their music on account of the striking musicians; Buffalo has just narrowly averted the same condition of affairs, an agreement having been reached between exhibitors and musicians, who were agreed to walk out on September 1st; while in Atlanta, Georgia, peace has just been restored with the return to work of striking musicians. The musician strike in Indianapolis continues.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Operators Union, Local No. 610, first presented demands for wage increase which they stated must become effective on August 19th. After repeated meetings between exhibitors and operators, an agreement could not be reached and as a result a general walk-out was ordered for the morning of the 19th by Harland Holmden, the president of the local operators' union. On the afternoon of the same day, however, the strike was called off by James Lemke, president of the International Union, from his New York headquarters. Following a message from Mr. Lemke, a committee of five musicians and three exhibitors left for New York on Thursday midnight to confer with him. It is reported that a satisfactory agreement was reached and that peace had descended upon Cleveland picture houses once more.

The operators in Cleveland originally demanded $1.25 per hour for Class A houses, or houses charging fifteen cents or less admission; $1.40 per hour for Class B houses, or those charging between fifteen and twenty-five cents; and $1.55 per hour for Class C theatres, or those bringing a quarter or more at the box office, with double time on Sundays and holidays. This demand was later modified to $1.15, $1.25 and $1.35, with time and a half for Sundays and holidays. The exhibitors offered $1.15, $1.20 and $1.30 an hour straight for seven days a week, but this was not satisfactory to the operators' union. A midnight session of the exhibitors on August 18th was represented by 112 members.

Buffalo exhibitors and members of the Musicians' Union have also reached an agreement on working conditions and the threatened strike of September 1 has been averted. At a meeting in the Hotel Iroquois on Friday, August 20, it was agreed by the musicians not to limit the playing periods to 50 minutes at Shea's Hippodrome and that working and rest periods at this house should be decided on by Harry Wallace, president of the musicians' association, who is a member of the Hippodrome orchestra, and Harold B. Franklin, manager. The other theatres compromised at six and one-quarter hours of playing time, and an agreement was reached whereby the managers and the leaders of the various houses will adjust the playing and rest periods.

Working conditions as demanded by the stage hands have also been adjusted and the operators have accepted the wages granted by the managers, so that the entire situation has cleared and all is set for the opening of what should be Buffalo's most successful film season.

The managers gave the stage hands a 30 per cent boost, the operators a 25 per cent raise and the musicians' salaries were raised 50 per cent. The musicians were given the largest raise because the operators and stage hands received increases last year.

Out of a clear sky has come a demand for more money from the Albany operators, stage hands and musicians employed in the motion picture houses and theatres of that city. The operators are asking an increase from $25 to $40 a week, the musicians from $30 to $35, with a leader at $45 and from $40 to $50 in the larger houses, while the stage hands are demanding a 40 per cent increase. Unless the managers meet the demands by Septetmber 6, there will probably be a strike effective in this city.

There was a meeting of the managers at the Albany theatre this week in order to discuss the demands from the unionized forces. While no announcement has been made it is generally conceded that the managers are willing to meet the others half way, but the whole thing is being left with a committee of five, which is meeting with a similar committee from the other side.

The managers claim that the operators were under contract until September, 1921, but unfortunately for them, this contract was a verbal one and not binding. The theatres are planning to increase their prices of admission in order to meet the advance in wages.

The musicians'strike in Atlanta ended August 24th, and theatres resumed showings with orchestras.

The settlement was made in accordance with the terms outlined by Willard Patterson, who represented the local houses in the fight.

Three weeks ago when Patterson refused to meet the demands of the union the orchestras walked out. Southern Enterprises, Inc., made a temporary adjustment. With the arrival of a representative of the national organization here a settlement was effected.

The strike of the musicians' union of Indianapolis affecting every local theatre but one, which has accepted the union terms of $1.50 per hour and double time for Sundays, is in its fourth week. Photoplay houses continue to depend upon pipe organs, phonographs and specialty acts to take the place of orchestras.

Playing Your Music Up

SOME of the most valuable instalments in Charles D. Isaacson's music articles, written especially for Motion Picture News, are appearing these weeks.

Last week and this, Mr. Isaacson is presenting means by which the exhibitor may announce his plans to feature the music at his house and develop it as a real box office factor.

Are you following the Music Department? Remember, the new department in Motion Picture News is nothing like the dry material you have been accustomed to in treating this subject for the trade press. It is real, informative, and written from the box office angle.

Walter Hall Author of "Bachelor Apartments"

A recent trade journal announcement, through error, accredited Howard Hall with the authorship of "Bachelor Apartments."

Walter Richard Hall, well known scenarioist and writer of screen vehicles for Taylor Holmes, Owen Moore and other present day stars, is the author of the screen play in question which stars Georgia Hopkins and is being released by Arrow Film Corporation.

Alfred S. Black Makes Counter-Charges

Does Not See Why He Should Answer Cohen; Talks of First National Monopoly

ALFRED S. BLACK, the large Boston exhibitor, whose name was used in connection with that of Adolph Zukor at the recent meeting between the Famous Players-Lasky head and the committee representing the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, has issued a statement which reiterates his claim that he is an independent exhibitor only, not interested in the production of pictures, and which accuses the committee headed by President Cohen of the M. P. T. O. of attempting to discredit his independence and position as president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc.

Mr. Black sees no reason why he should meet the M. P. T. O. committee to answer such charges as they see fit to make, and states that any attack upon his activities should be made publicly and he will answer them through the trade journals. He states that any New England exhibitor who feels that he has been injured in any way by Mr. Black's organization should report the grievance to Mr. Black himself and be assured of personal attention.

The New Englander continues his statement by asking the committee, the product of the Cleveland convention, which he condemns, why they do not turn their attention to the First National, which he calls the greatest distributor-exhibitor organization in the country, and especially to the activities of Nathan Gordon, of Boston, the owner of the New England First National franchise.

"Why don't the M. P. T. O. of America," asks Mr. Black, "ascertain whether or not the First National through Mr. Gordon's management in New England and by others over the United States, has done the independent exhibitor more harm through heavily increased film rentals and extension of theatre ownership than any other ten interests?

"Why don't they find out about the pressure being used by First National to make the exhibitors buy their franchises on the one hand and the theatre activities of Mr. Gordon's affiliated interests (and some new ones too) on the other hand?

"Why don't they investigate the First National's new booking proposition which, if put into successful operation, would soon tie up (between all three methods) the motion picture business in a regular vise?

"Why don't they now openly admit, which they do privately, that the so-called Patterson Chicago movement was financed by the First National and the attack on the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation alone was malicious and unfair?

"Why did Mr. Cohen and his committee refuse to admit the press at their meeting with Mr. Zukor?

"Why was it that the recent meeting of the Connecticut Exhibitors, which Mr. Sidney Cohen attended, was turned into a First National banquet?

"As president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, I openly ask Mr. Gordon and the officials of the First National to deny these charges and to state their honest intentions, not camouflaged by their affiliated interests. If we are going to clean house and find where everybody stands, let's go through the whole list and do it on the level openly, not privately.

"So there will be no misunderstanding as to my exact position in the New England theatre field—I have not sold control of a single theatre. I was forced through Mr. Gordon and his various connections to recently make a booking arrangement with financial interest to protect my theatre holdings. Believing that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation produced the best pictures made, I succeeded in making an affiliation with them to offset to a considerable extent Mr. Gordon's rapidly attempted control of New England.

"I do not believe in threats and have never, in developing my theatre holdings, attempted to threaten any exhibitor or force him to do business with my organization.

"At the present time, after using the Famous Players output, I am one of the largest buyers of independent film in the United States."

Educational Planning More Conventions

First Gathering of Eastern Exchange Managers Declared a Great Success

SO great was the success of the initial convention of managers for the eastern district at the Hotel Astor that E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announced this week that not only would there be frequent district meetings, but that just as soon as the sales representatives complete their initial work of covering their territories, the entire force will be assembled for a general discussion.

According to the statements of Educational the meeting far surpassed expectations, not only in the reports of business and forecast for the future from each manager, but from the point of view of genuine enthusiasm shown. As an indication of the effect of the gathering, it is said that at the luncheon which marked the close of the gathering, one of the district managers said:

"I have a confession to make. I accepted the management of my exchange so that I would be properly occupied until another position would be open. After hearing the reports of my fellow managers and the plans and ability of Educational, I want to say that I will never willingly leave this organization. I know now that it offers possibilities without limit."

Probably without a precedent among motion picture gatherings was the opening talk of Mr. Hammons who outlined to the sales representatives the strength of the organization, giving the names of the financial interests owning stock in Educational and stating the reasons for their investment. "These sums," he said, "do not represent speculation, but investment after the most rigid investigation of our plans, our business conduct and the personnel of our organization. They form an assurance that we will be able to carry out any plan we undertake, no matter how ambitious."

Groundwork for the general discussion was provided by statements of policies from the heads of the production, domestic sales, advertising and publicity and distribution departments. Exchange managers were invited to ask questions concerning any point and to have no hesitancy that they might enter any "forbidden field." After this there was a general discussion of sales and the particular problems of each territory.

Another unique feature of the meeting was that the visiting managers were invited to inspect product that had been offered Educational for release and their opinions requested. Although no indication had been given in advance of the opinion of the home office officials, it is said that the views of the managers were identical with that of the officials, though some instances involved acceptance of product and others rejection.

Besides all of the heads of departments of the home office, those present were: John J. Scully, manager of the Boston exchange; Stanley W. Hand, New Haven;

Williams, Cohen and Patterson Reply to Alfred S. Black

Williams Belittles Attack; Cohen Invites Proof; Patterson Denies Charge

OFFICIAL statements have been issued during the week by J. D. Williams, manager of First National, and by Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, making reply to the allegations directed against the First National organization and Mr. Cohen by Alfred S. Black, a prominent New England exhibitor, who is also head of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America. Mr. Black's statement, including the various charges referred to above, is presented elsewhere in this issue.

The statement issued by J. D. Williams from the First National headquarters is submitted as follows:

"There are only two or three points in the statement by Mr. Alfred S. Black of Boston that deserve to be dignified by a reply from Associated First National Pictures.

"The first is his vague and extremely ambiguous reference to Mr. N. H. Gordon of Boston. It hardly becomes Mr. Black as the partner of Mr. Adolph Zukor in his New England theatre enterprises to attack an absolutely independent exhibitor who has competed with him in that territory. It is only natural that any independent exhibitor who is compelled to meet the opposition of any theatre organization which is known to have the financial backing of the leading producer-exhibitor element should seek to protect his own theatre investments by affiliating directly and intimately with independent stars and producers. Mr. Gordon has done nothing more serious than this, and if his steadfast allegiance to the cause of independence is a crime to the eyes of Mr. Black and his partner, Mr. Zukor, then many hundreds of other independent exhibitors who are Mr. Gordon's fellow-members in this co-operative organization, are equally guilty in the eyes of Mr. Zukor and his partner, Mr. Black.

"Perhaps if Mr. Black had originally possessed the vision and the shrewd ability to foresee industrial evolution, which is one of Mr. Gordon's characteristics, he, and not Mr. Gordon, would have been the Associated First National member for New England, in which event Mr. Gordon's inherent faith in a sharp distinction between exhibition and production would not have placed him as Mr. Black's competitor in the dual position which Mr. Black occupies as an exhibitor working on capital obtained presumably from production profits.

"We challenge Mr. Black to prove that he does not know he is wrong when he says that pressure is being used by First National to make exhibitors buy franchises. We want this proof in the form of affidavits from exhibitors which can be used as bona fide legal evidence in any court of equity. If Mr. Black is loyal and sincere in his oft-repeated declaration that he is 'of exhibitors and for exhibitors,' he is an absolute traitor to the exhibitor cause if he fails to provide the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America with information to the effect that any of its members are being treated unfairly by Associated First National.

"If Mr. Black would reduce his literary output to allow time for an occasional perusal of trade papers, he would have seen at some time or other the statement from this organizatoin which has been repeatedly published and which declares without equivocation that neither First National Exhibitors' Circuit nor Associated First National Pictures is interested in, has any affiliation with, or has any public or private connection with any booking proposition. However, Mr. Black wanted to make an attack, and blindness to facts always provides material for attack.

"While we dislike to be burdened with the responsibility of the presence in our organization and its offices of any producer-exhibitor representative, nevertheless we invite a most complete and careful investigation as the most definite means of again challenging Mr. Black's rights to be considered truthful when he declares that the 'so-called Patterson Chicago movement' was financed by First National. If 'the attack on the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation alone was malicious and unfair,' as Mr. Black charges, evidently meaning that the 'so-called Patterson Chicago movement' was responsible for its start, then he deliberately and directly accuses every exhibitor present at the Cleveland Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America of being malicious, unfair and a party to something which, if untrue, is generally described as criminal libel. We refer to the resolution passed unanimously by the Cleveland Convention and accordingly concurred in by all the exhibitors present. If Mr. Black presumes to contradict the action of that convention upon this point, we presume that Mr. Sydney Cohen, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, will, as a matter of respect to its members, rise in their defense and reply in person to Mr. Black on this point.

"Mr. Black charges that 'the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. produces the best pictures made,' in which we disagree with him, but we do not believe that even he suspects the exhibitors of the country to be sufficiently gullible to assume that his opinion for or against the interests of any organization apart from Famous Players-Lasky Corp can be exactly neutral and utterly without bias, in view of his pronounced preference for that company. Consequently, we feel no special resentment toward Mr. Black for his attempt to criticise or attack our organization, because any attack of this character which if not free from preferences toward opposing concerns always is amenable to classification as a business move, in behalf of the concern to which the attacking party feels most friendly.

"There is the same measure of absurdity in his reference to Mr. Cohen and the meeting of Connecticut exhibitors as there is in his other statements. It is due Mr. Cohen to explain that he left the meeting before the First National luncheon, at which Mr. Gordon presided, and to which exhibitors attending the meeting were invited, was even started. Therefore, he cannot make lasting his contention that Mr. Cohen showed the least inclination to lend his presence to anything that had the semblance of a First National gathering.

"We want to suggest through Mr. Black's favorite medium of private communication—the trade paper—that his vacuum-cleaning propensities be reduced to specific statements of fact and not to generalities.

"We will concede freely and happily that if Mr. Black could succeed even in part in creating doubt among exhibitors about the conduct of the affairs of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, he would be adding strength to the name of Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., of which he admits he is president; and that more than this, if he could succeed even remotely in creating exhibitor suspicion about Associated First National, he would be adding strength to the opportunities sought by the company which is headed by Mr. Zukor, who has admitted publicly that he is financially interested in Mr. Black's theatre enterprises.

"There is a curious and significant inconsistency in two paragraphs of Mr. Black's statement. In one he says: 'There is certainly no reason why I should meet the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America committee to answer such charges as they see fit to make. . . let any New England exhibitor who feels my organization has injured him in any way state his grievances to me, and I will be glad to meet him and give same my personal attention. Hence, why talk with any committee?'

"Denying the right of a committee representing the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to investigate him and his affiliations, Mr. Black in another paragraph states: 'Why do not the officers and this committee, the product of the Cleveland Convention, turn their attention to the greatest distributor-exhibitor combination in the United States—the First National—and especially to the activities of Mr. Nathan H. Gordon of Boston.'

"We should like to inquire of Mr. Black by what divine right or privilege he places himself in one sentence above the sordidness of a committee investigation, and in the next paragraph demands that a committee investigation be made of this exhibitor organization, and individuals prominent in it?

"To us the only consolng phase of this entire matter is that without intention we are fortunate in selecting a rainy Saturday afternoon when ball games and outdoor recreation are not attractive in which to read Mr. Black's statement and prepare the foregoing.

"ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES, INC.

"J. D. Williams, Manager."

President Sydney S. Cohen has responded to the accusations of Mr. Black in a lengthy "open letter" which reads as follows:

"Dear Sir:

"The committee of independent exhibitors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America appointed under the instructions of the Cleveland Convention to remedy the evils of unfair competition in the exhibiting field, sincerely regrets your inability or unwillingness to appear before its members.

"The Committee is engaged in a task which ought to appeal to all friends of the industry and especially to the great body of motion picture theatre owners who have no producing or distributing affiliations, and whose investment can only be protected by intelligent and united action.

"We hope that you will appear before our Committee and furnish us with data concerning the activities of members of the First National Circuit to which you allude in your letter to the trade press. The scope of the Committee's activities is large enough and its purposes are earnest enough to take up such evils as exist in New England according to your statement. You may rest assured that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners are deeply concerned in the welfare of the independent exhibitor. If you will furnish us with evidence which will warrant action on our part, we will get to work immediately and leave nothing undone to abate the dangerous practices to which you allude in your statement.

"If, for any reason satisfactory to yourself, you do not wish to appear before the Committee personally, we will be glad to have you send in the facts, which we suppose are in your possession. Our organization was formed to fight and check all unfair competition no matter from what source or quarter it may develop.

"Let us tell you in the plainest terms that our organization is neither directly nor indirectly affiliated with First National, though attempts have been made to have it appear so.

"Your suggestions and 'leads' as to an investigation of certain phases in the development of the First National have been anticipated by the Cleveland Convention which appointed a special committee for the investigation of franchise and booking plans. This committee is gathering data and will be under obligations to you for forwardng to it any facts which you may care to supply to its chairman. If your claim of friendship for the independent exhibitor is founded on fact, you will have nothing to fear from our committee which represents the independent exhibitors of the country.

"You ask 'Why did Mr. Cohen and his committee refuse to admit the press at their meeting with Mr. Zukor?' Our answer is, this was done at the request of Mr. Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who after hearing and reading some of the letters and affidavits of independent exhibitors of New England relative to threats and intimidations made by you and your representatives, asked us in justice to you to give you an opportunity to defend yourself. Mr. Zukor stated that this was a personal matter of his organization and he did not want the press present. We might also state that he vehemently denounced tactics as alleged in the letters and affidavits to us about yourself and representatives.

"As to your question 'Why was it that the recent meeting of the Connecticut exhibitors which Mr. Sydney Cohen attended, was turned into a First National banquet?' This is our answer: The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America sent out at its own expense a notification to all exhibitors in the State of Connecticut asking them to meet for the purpose of forming a state organization and suggesting an affiliation with our National organization. It was indeed the same invitation that had been extended in every other state. The response was gratifying, as you may have gathered from the report of the trade papers.

"With the banquet following the convention and with the presence at the banquet of representatives of the First National and with the attempt to spread First National propaganda, we had nothing whatever to do.

"Following is a copy of a letter sent August 3, 1920, 'special delivery' to every exhibitor in the State of Connecticut notifying them to be present at the State convention at the Hotel Taft.

"Dear Exhibitor:

"In order that there be no misunderstanding as to the complexion of the convention called at the Hotel Taft, New Haven, on Friday morning, August 6, at 11:30 o'clock, we are writing you again that the gathering of these exhibitors is for the specific purpose of organizing the independent exhibitors of the State of Connecticut, in order that your State may have a strong organization and be a part of the National organization which was formed at Cleveland, and so as to be in a position of properly cooperating with them for the protection of your investment in this industry and the correction of the many abuses existing in this business.

"We are just advised that on the same day at the same hotel there will be a meeting of theatre owners called for the purpose of discussing the First National franchise proposition. In order that there be no misunderstanding on this point we are advising you that the convention which is called for 11:30 a. m. has nothing in common with the meeting called for First National purposes at a later hour.

"This organization has no affiliation with any producing or distributing corporation or organization.

"We cannot urge you too strongly to be present promptly at 11:30 a. m. at the Hotel Taft, New Haven, to help your state organize, because organization is the insurance of your business.

Sincerely yours,
Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America,
SYDNEY S. COHEN, President.

"Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, C. C. Griffin, of California, vice-president, and E. T. Peter, of Texas, treasurer, and S. I. Berman, executive secretary of the New York State League, attended the convention in Connecticut to help organize the independent exhibitors of that State. We did not attend the luncheon tendered to Mr. Nathan H. Gordon, of the Associated First National Exchange. We learned that this luncheon had been arranged for by an employee of one of Mr. Gordon's theatres in New England. We wrote to this party asking him to kindly postpone the luncheon to some other date, in order not to interfere with our convention. This man was asked to send a telegram or letter to the exhibitors of Connecticut to

The Independent Pictures Win Their Place in the Sun

Exhibitors Hold Open Dates for State-Righters, Says Shallenberger

NOT only hopeful for the future of the independent field, but positively certain of its growth and final domination of the industry, is Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, and general manager of the Federated Film Exchanges of America. In addition, Dr. Shallenberger is not satisfied with looking to the future for good times for the independent exchange man. He insists that prosperity has already arrived and that the coming season will find independent exchanges throughout the country doing business far in excess of that which they did last year.

"The surest indication," said Dr. Shallenberger, in a recent interview, "is the fact that for the first time in the past five years, exhibitors have held off signing for their entire year's product with the national organizations. They are going to give the independent exchange man a chance. Last year at this time, a great many exhibitors had completed their bookings for fifty-two weeks—this year they intend to wait. They want to see just what pictures the independent has to offer, because they realize that in the past some of the biggest and greatest pictures have gone through that channel.

The Arrow president reiterated that the time when all pictures will be bought on the open market is bound to come and come fast. He also made the startling prediction that within a year and a half, a number of theatres would have the slogan, "This Is an Independent Theatre," strung over their doors. "If I owned a theatre," stated Dr. Shallenberger, "I would do that today, and I would be glad to have people ask me why I did it."

In the past, he stated, some of the biggest features, and most attractive productions from a box office standpoint, had been placed with the independent. He cites the case of "The Birth of a Nation," "Civilization," and others. Even today, he explained, some of the national companies are placing their biggest pictures in that manner, because they realize that they can bring more money in this way, than through their own exchange system.

In his many years in the film business, Dr. Shallenberger has always been in the independent field. "I have seen the hard times the exchange man had to obtain recognition. I can cite the case of Arrow itself, which not so many years ago, only made one sale a month, and at times not even that." The Arrow Film Corporation today is among the leaders in the independent field.

"An independent exchange man," continued the doctor, "would come into my office ofttimes literally down at the heel and with sleeves frayed. They were hungry, emaciated and starved, figuratively speaking. And not only from a financial standpont, but they were hungry, starved and emaciated for good pictures. They could not get the pictures to sell. But that day is past. The independent not only has pictures today, but he has good pictures. There may have been a time when an independent's picture was synonymous with a cheap picture, but that time is no more. I need only cite the recent announcement that four Bessie Love pictures are to be distributed through the Federated Film Exchanges. This is the most important and encouraging news that has come from the independent field in many a day."

W. E. Shallenberger, general manager of Federated

Announcement of the signing of the contract between the Federated Film Exchanges and Andrew J. Callaghan, the producer of the Bessie Love productions, was made in the NEWS several weeks ago. Other Federated productions include Billy Rhodes in "Nobody's Girl" and a series of Monte Banks comedies of two-reel length.

The fact that the independent exchange man knows his field, and is better able to understand the small exhibitor than the general manager of a national organization, who is sometimes appointed from a different state, was also emphasized by Dr. Shallenberger. This point was also made by Sam Grant of Boston. "A small exhibitor can only afford to pay a small price for a picture," said Mr. Grant. "The independent exchange man understands this and is willing to let him have the picture for that price, rather than lose his patronage altogether. But what about the national organization? The branch manager receives notice from the home office that such a picture is to net a minimum of a certain price. This price is more than some exhibitors can afford to pay. Even if the local branch manager is a man who has grown up with that territory, and understands this, he is powerless to make a change. The home office of a national organization knows nothing about local conditions when setting their price—the independent exchange man does."

Dr. Shallenberger took as another example of the growth of the independent field, the recent sale of the Clara Kimball Young pictures on the independent field. Much of the territory has already been sold. Two years ago, according to the doctor, an exchange man would not have been able to buy these pictures.

Dr. Shallenberger pointed out that the Federated Film Exchanges, of which he is general manager, is a distinct step forward towards the wide open market. "For it is certain to come," he stated, "although a great many people do not realize it at present. This year exhibitors have held off signing long contracts with national organizations and they are going to continue to do so in the future."

Educational Plans More Conventions

D. J. Savage, Buffalo; John J. Iris, New York; C. S. Goodman, Philadelphia; J. H. Beaver, Washington; C. A. Lynch, Pittsburgh; H. R. and Jack Skirboll, Cleveland and Cincinnati. Lee L. Goldberg, who is interested in the Louisville exchange, was in attendance at all the sessions.

Charles Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Company, whose product is now released through Educational exchanges, attended one of the sessions by invitation and outlined the future plans of his organization.

Carrying out the same work that was accomplished for the eastern territory at this meeting, Henry Ginsberg, manager of the domestic sales department, starts in a few days to visit all the other exchanges. Among his first stops will be New Orleans and Dallas, where he will complete arrangements for opening Educational exchanges.

The Figures that Tell the Story

First National Takes Issue with Charlie Chaplin

Star's Reputed Efforts to Sell "The Kid" Bring Forth Warning

FOLLOWING publication of an interview attributed to Charles Chaplin to the effect that he intends selling a motion picture produced by him and entitled "The Kid" and that he was considering several offers, First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., in a statement signed by H. O. Schwalbe, secretary, declares positively that the comedy star has no right to transact such business with any individuals or corporation other than the First National organization until the expiration of his present contract.

The statement, which appears under the heading, "Regarding Charles Chaplin and 'The Kid,' and which is addressed "To Whom It May Concern," was published as an advertisement in the film trade press this week. It warns that Chaplin is still under contract to produce eight photoplays solely and exclusively for First National and that the Circuit is prepared to "prosecute and defend its rights in the premises in the courts of the land to the utmost of its ability."

Chaplin has to date made only four photoplays for First National since entering into his contract with that organization in June 19, 1917. The statement declares that until he has completed his contract he has "no right or authority to produce motion pictures for any person, firm or corporation other than the said First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc."

The statement resulted from a newspaper story emanating from Salt Lake City, Utah, in which the comedian is quoted as saying that his wife, Mildred Harris Chaplin, now suing for divorce, is seeking to restrain him from selling his picture, "The Kid," the Salt Lake interview attributes the following statement to Chaplin:

"I have offered my wife a dignified and substantial settlement, but she seeks to restrain me from selling the picture. Now I am going to remain here until the picture is sold, and there won't be any divorce until the picture is sold. There is a state law that protects me and prohibits the service of the restraining order on me here. Probably I shall have a Salt Lake attorney look after my interests. Several cinema men will be here to see me with regard to purchasing the rights to 'The Kid.' In fact I have received several offers from local interests. I may be compelled to take a trip to New York in this connection, but I shall stay in Salt Lake until the picture is sold."

The story set forth that Chaplin had found sanctuary in Utah, adding that "here the process servers cannot serve him and he will remain until he has sold his great cinema effort, 'The Kid,' reputed to have cost $1,000,000 in the making."

Continuing, the article says: "Chaplin is wise. He knows all the wiles of the cinema game and he knows how to thread himself out of the labyrinth of the law as well. He has consulted expert counsel and he knows where he stands. He has knowledge of a law on the Utah statute books which the California attorneys seem to have overlooked, or perhaps have not discovered, which renders him safe from the restraining process servers so long as he remains in Utah, so he says."

"I have been working on 'The Kid' for two years and I do not propose to lose the fruits of my efforts," Chaplin is quoted as saying. "I wrote the scenario, acted in the play, directed it and produced it.

"I have invested in it $300,000, paying a weekly expense account of $5,000 to keep the company. It is a drama of pathos and humor, unlike anything I have ever done and it means everything to me. I have practically completed the picture except writing the titles.

"The difficulties between myself and wife have already had too much airing in the newspapers. It isn't a question of granting her a divorce. I will be willing to do that at any time. The part I am fighting is the effort to restrain me from selling 'The Kid,' in which I have invested almost everything I have. 'The Kid' did not cost $1,000,000. Nothing like it. I have been reputed to be a millionaire, but I am not a rich man by any manner of means."

Mildred Harris Chaplin, who is now in New York, is quoted as saying that she was not seeking to restrain Mr. Chaplin from selling the picture. "I have no personal interest in Mr. Chaplin's productions, and anyhow he is under contract to deliver eight of them to First National," she said.

News of the Studios

LILLIAN R. GALE is now busy gathering news of directors and players in Eastern studios for readers of Motion Picture News.

This department, which appears on page 1909 of this week's issue, is prepared in form that makes it readily adapted for the use of newspaper editors and in theatre programs.

Its service to players and directors will be developed and improved from week to week until we feel sure it will fill a valuable and permanent place as a mouthpiece of studio folk and to editors and exhibitors.

Cohen Replies to Black

call off this luncheon and the National Organization offered to defray the expenses incident to the wires and letters calling off the luncheon, but he refused to do so.

"We note your characterization of the Cleveland convention, of which you disapprove so severely, but neither we nor any one else noted your appearance on the floor, and it seems to us that under the circumstances you could not possibly have left the floor unless your entering and leaving occurred in the night time, when you and your agents spread a lot of printed attacks on our officers on the patient and empty chairs in the convention hall, where they were found the next morning and disposed of by the swift summary and unanimous condemnation of the delegates.

"Your view of the Cleveland convention is in striking contrast with that expressed by every publication in the motion picture field. Motion picture journalism was present at the convention in kindly but withal critical mood, and the able men who represented our journals, having observed the events at the convention closely and impartially, concluded without one dissenting voice that the convention was the most successful, the most honest and the most intelligent ever held. We refer you for comments in detail to any and every publication in the field.

"We invite you once more to appear before us, Mr. Black. It is an invitation and not a summons we have sent you. Information has reached this committee to the effect that you have time and again resorted to coercion against independent exhibitors.

"You say that if there is any trouble with any exhibitor you prefer to fight it out in the trade press. A moment's reflection must convince you that such a method is impractical. First of all, the trade press has not the space to fill its columns with lengthy controversial matter. Second, no possible practical conclusion can be reached by such a procedure.

"In the friendliest of spirit we again urge you to appear before our committee. You may depend upon the most fair and courteous treatment being accorded you. We have purposely deferred action on the large budget of information touching your alleged methods to give you an opportunity to set yourself aright. Neglect of this opportunity on your part permits of but one conclusion. We have answered all your questions fully and fairly in the generous belief that they were asked in good faith.

"Under the circumstances the fair and honorable thing on your part is to meet us and answer our questions. If the information filed with this committee is found to be one-sided or ill-flavored after a hearing, we will deem it a plain duty to give the facts the widest publicity and circulation.

"We are anxiously awaiting your decision.

"MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF AMERICA,
"Sidney S. Cohen, President."

Replying to the charge made by Mr. Black that the Chicago convention of exhibitors was financed by First National, Willard C. Patterson of Atlanta, who was the leading force in assembling the picture-theatre owners in Chicago last April is quoted as follows:

"Black's accusation that there was collusion between First National and myself in calling the Chicago convention is a lie. I am prepared to go before any body of exhibitors or producers at any minute and prove conclusively that Black's accusation is false and malicious.

"Moreover, I will furnish indisputable evidence as to who financed the Chicago call. Since I refused to agree with Black at Cleveland that Cohen was a grafter, Black's attitude toward me has been antagonistic."

Tells of Withdrawal of Theatres

According to a telegram received from J. W. Allender, president of J. W. Allender, Inc., that company has withdrawn its theatres at Spokane, Pullman, Moscow and Colfax from the independent exhibitors corporation.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

An unusually large number of out-of-town moving picture men were seen around the exchanges during the week and many expressions of pleasure over the outlook for good Fall pictures were heard. Among the visitors were: John Neis of the Star theatre, Ohio, Illinois; E. L. McDermott of the Ark and Grand theatres, Logansport, Indiana; A. R. Nelson of the Star and Paramount theatres, Kokomo, Indiana; C. C. Jones and his wife of the American theatre, Johnston City, Illinois; Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Wormold of La Salle, Illinois; G. H. Hines of the Auditorium theatre, So. Bend, Indiana, and G. H. Meyers, Park theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

Frank Harris of Chicago's Pathe Exchange has been promoted to branch manager at St. Louis and Tom Norman, one of the veterans of the industry, will take his place as northside salesman. Mr. Norman for the past six years has operated the Rex theatre at Racine and a few weeks ago sold it to Steffen & Smith of Sheboygan. Previous to that, Mr. Norman was connected with Chicago office of Universal for six years and has the friendship and esteem of practically every moving picture owner in the Windy City. Tom has a big new Hudson with which he expects to cover the northside and fill up the tonneau with orders. Another change in the Pathe staff results in the promotion of W. E. Grust from assistant booker to booker to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of B. A. Tomte.

After a week spent in New York looking over the feature market, Harry Weiss, president of Superior Screen Service, Inc., has returned to Chicago with the following productions which he acquired for distribution in Illinois and Indiana. "A Woman's Business," Olive Tell and all-star cast; "Daughter of Devil Dan;" "Wings of Pride," featuring Olive Tell; "Tillie's Punctured Romance," with Charles Chaplin, Mabel Normand, Mack Swain, Chester Conklin and Marie Dressler; "Woman's Man," Romaine Fielding and an all-star cast; "Love's Protege," Ora Carewe and others; and "Frazee Comedies," twelve in series.

Charles J. Vollmar, formerly manager of the Washington theatre, Belleville, Illinois, has taken over the Rialto theatre at Jacksonville, Illinois. District Manager Hansen of Robertson-Cole has returned to the Chicago office after a tour of the west which included visits to Omaha, Kansas City and St. Louis, and reports that the outlook for fall business is wonderful, every indication pointing to the big records made in the past year being surpassed.

"Shipwrecked among Cannibals" continues to draw such throngs to the Casino that Manager Mrs. Emma Cohn has arranged to run the picture for another week. This will make seven weeks straight showing of this big Universal picture on Madison Street.

Eddy Eckels of Independent Films Association, has sent a representative in person to the west coast studio of Pinnacle Productions, Inc., at Glendale, California, to get the negative on "Hell's Oasis," the first of the Neal Hart five reelers and bring it to Chicago for printing. Eddy is taking no chances of losing the precious negative or in delays in its handling by express company employees. The picture will be released October 1st.

Emil Rogasner, is to be transferred to the New York exchange of Universal and will cover city territory there. Mr. Rogasner, who has been connected with the Chicago branch for sometime, has had a wide experience with Universal, having started as a salesman in Philadelphia and since then working in Spokane, Seattle, Detroit and Chicago. Jack Meredith, another Universal salesman, has resigned his position with that company.

Manager Lucas of Robertson-Cole Chicago office expects to move the Chicago exchange into the new Robertson-Cole building at Ninth and Wabash about November 1st. The new building, which will be occupied exclusively by Robertson-Cole, will have ten thousand square feet of floor space and will give this progressive organization an exchange of which it can be proud.

Charles F. Schwerin, of Fine Arts, was a Chicago visitor this week. Mr. Schwerin came to Chicago to close a contract in this territory for "Up In Mary's Attic," which, he reports, is doing a fine business in the east. Only two territories are now open on this production, according to Mr. Schwerin, Ludwig Schindler of Mickey Film Corporation is still vacationing at Elkhart Lake and reports reaching Chicago are to the effect that, although fishing is good, Mr. Schindler cannot find time for it as long as pinochle continues as active as at present.

One of the biggest motion picture deals ever closed in Chicago was that completed last week by Lubliner & Trinz and District Manager Harris P. Wolfberg, of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The deal is said to involve close to $500,000 and covers bookings at all the Lubliner & Trinz houses in Chicago. The entire program of the Paramount studios was contracted for by the Chicago chain. Because of the increased cost of production and distribution of films, the rentals involved in the new deal exceeds that ever before figuring in a similar contract.

McConaughty's Publicity Puts Over "Male and Female"

"Danse De Kassandra" Rivoli Ballet Number

THE Rivoli ballet number this week, a solo interpretation of "Danse de Kassandra" by Mlle. Thalia Zanou is staged before a black drop instead of a scenic setting.

The effect is not as artistic as have been the former offerings in this line at the Rivoli and suggests that while vocal numbers may be effectively presented with a black background, the ballet number needs bright colors and assorted flood lightings properly blended to get the best results.

For the number in question only the foots in amber are used with the result described.

In interpreting the dance Mlle. Zanou scatters confetti about the stage as she goes through the various steps. She is attired in the conventional ballet gown.

S. Barrett McCormick Manager of New Rivoli, Toledo

Thursday evening, August 19th, witnessed a theatrical event which echoed throughout the state of Presidents and the middle west, in the opening of the Toledo, Ohio, Rivoli theatre, a motion picture house seating three thousand and the last word in the movie palace line.

Its general manager is none other than S. Barrett McCormick, for a number of years managing director of the famous Circle theatre of Indianapolis, whose connection with the Circle was announced in the NEWS as having been terminated a few weeks past.

With a theatre of such excellence, a showman of such acknowledged genius as is Mr. McCormick, and a city of such unusual prosperity as that which Toledo is experiencing, the new house can not fail but be the greatest of successes.

The NEWS extends congratulations to Mr. McCormick, the new million dollar Rivoli and Toledo. It is a trio which means much to the motion picture industry.

Seymour, Ind., Gets Results with Window Displays

And still the exploitation trail of "Male and Female," like that of "In Old Kentucky," goes on and on and in each instance recorded is told a story of handsome profits for the efforts expended.

The latest chronicle of how this picture, "Male and Female," was put over comes from the Princess theatre, of Seymour, Ind., operated by the Columbia Amusement Co., and managed by C. E. McConaughty.

On the opposite page is told in illustrations better than text can inform you what Mr. McConaughty did in the way of cooperative window displays, one of the most effective methods by which this production can be exploited.

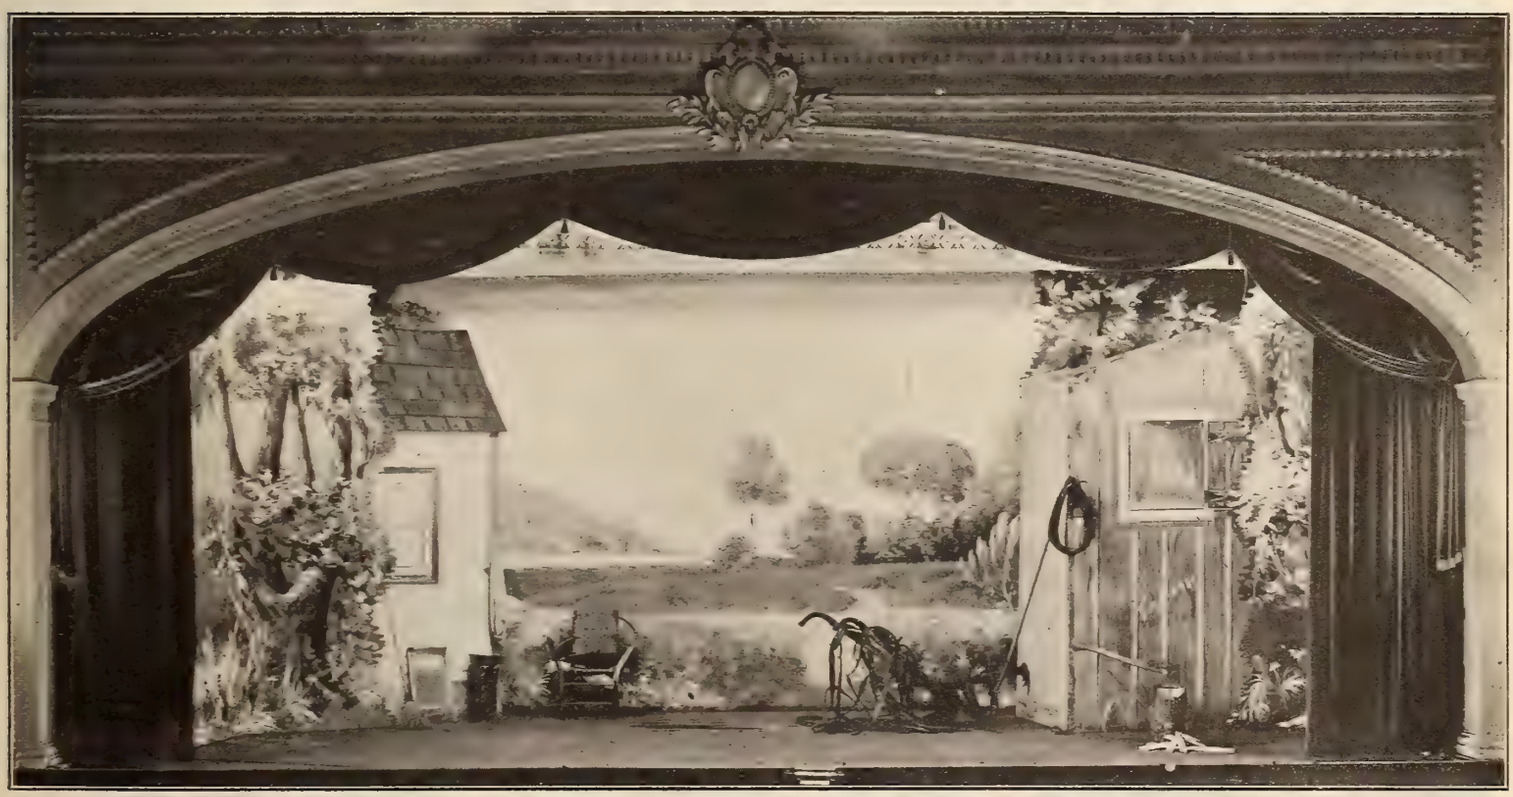
In addition to the window displays, the Princess used newspaper space freely, plastered the town with paper and otherwise publicised the attraction.

In sending in the photographs from which the illustrations were made Mr. McConaughty states that his exploitation campaign was the means of attracting S. R. O. business during two days of a very hot week.

"Humoresque" at the Rivoli This Week

THE entire bill including the prologue used with the showing of "Humoresque" at the Criterion theatre has been moved to the Rivoli for the week's run of the above mentioned picture at this theatre.

The prologue uses as its base the singing of "Eli, Eli" the Jewish lament, as described in this section of the NEWS thirteen weeks ago the opening week of "Humoresque" at the Criterion.



The stage of the Rivoli is small but the prolude staged even in cramped quarters is quite as effective as it was at the Criterion.

Incidentally after twelve weeks showing in New York, the offering is proving a capacity box office attraction at the Rivoli.

Swimming Events Good Exploitation for Kellerman Picture

Midwest exhibitors are combining the interest aroused in swimming for women by the Olympic Games try-outs as a means of exploiting the latest Annette Kellerman production, "What Women Love." Comparatively small prizes are all that is necessary for the organization of a diving and swimming competition at almost any summer resort and the middle west exhibitors are utilizing this method of attracting summer crowds with great success.

One of the largest of these exploitation stunts which have been reported took place in Omaha on August 11, under the auspices of the Carter Lake Club

How to Get the Business of Summer Tourists

Getting the business of summer tourists for a motion picture house is a much simpler matter than it would appear on the first glance, especially if an exhibitor is within driving distance of hotel colonies. This statement comes from James T. Allen, manager of the Federal theatre, Salem, Mass.

"In spite of the fact that Salem is almost the centre of a straight line of summer resorts extending from Nahant to Gloucester the Federal theatre had never gone after the business which these resorts offered before this summer. We had thought of it as being desirable especially when our regular patronage slumped off due to the summer attractions which nature offers, but we hit upon no feasible idea for getting it. Possible locations for billboards were too far out of the way of the crowds, no newspaper reached the majority of the summer vacationists but a request to one hotel proprietor to permit us to deliver circulars on the beach in front of his resort met with a counter proposition that we adopted. He said that if we would print something neat he would put it on the desk and instruct his information clerk to hand one of them out in answer to all inquiries as to local amusements. We found all the other hotels perfectly willing to use a small folder in the same way as to the manager who made the suggestion to us.

We also got advice from the hotel managers as to the style of circulars which would be most appealing to their guests. The boosting of a special attraction was discarded on the grounds that people wouldn't be asking daily for these cards and that the best effects would be gained by showing the guests that an up-to-date motion picture theatre was nearby. Accordingly we decided upon an attractive cover made up of cuts of Norma and Constance Talmadge, and a symbolical border. Inside the first cover we printed an announcement: "Showing all the productions of Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Katherine MacDonald, Marshall Neilan, etc." At the bottom was the notice "See White Sheet for weekly program."

This white sheet was to be changed weekly and it carried the attractions we had scheduled for two week periods, with the stars emphasized on the theory that the stars would be the best known to the hotel guests. On the back cover was a road map of the vicinity, taking in all the hotels where we had the booklets and with the road into Salem emphasized. On all the incoming roads we erected signs pointing to the road leading to the Federal theatre.

As a result the Federal theatre is doing as good business this summer as it has ever done in the winter. Bus men make regular trips from the hotels to the theatre and back again after the performance and charge a regular fare.

"The Bohemian Girl" Capitol Overture

THE Capitol theatre's elaborate rendition of the overture number, vocally and instrumentally interpreted, is continued this week with the presentation of excerpts from "The Bohemian Girl."

The number opens with a prelude by the orchestra (a), with (b) a rendition of "The Heart Bowed Down," the "Count Arnheim" baritone solo, by Wilfred Glenn before entrance one. The house draperies are used with flood lightings in scarlet from the sides.

The singer is attired in the regulation "Bohemian Girl" uniform of the opera.

"I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls," the "Arline" soprano solo, is sung by Athene Buckley in a full stage set showing a mountain scene with the moon rising over a set piece rock. The open rear of a gypsy wagon, with regulation covered top, is placed up stage at left, with its front portion masked off by wood wings. At right center a camp fire with crossed stick kettle holder is placed. "Arline" sits near the wagon for her song. She is attired in the gypsy costume of the opera. In the same setting and following the close of the soprano solo, "Thaddeus," also in correct costume, interpreted by Sudworth Frasier, sings "When Other Lips."

The number closes with a quartette offering by the Count, Thaddeus, Arline and the Queen (Melanie Verbouwens).

The stage setting is by artist Wagner of the Capitol staff. The lightings are varying floods, with scarlet used most effectively.

Lobby Display Feature of "Sand" Exploitation

On the suggestion of Fred E. Walters, exploitation representative for Famous Players-Lasky out of Cleveland, the Victoria theatre of Stuebenville, Ohio, used some unusually effective exploitation methods for the engagement of "Sand."

Among the best of the publicity stunts originated was a lobby display.

Boldly outlined from the telephone pole on the curb was a marked poster of William S. Hart in highwayman's get-up with two revolvers pointing towards the theatre. It was a sure-fire sensation. Every one who passed noticed it and turned to look at the theatre, which was covered with other cutouts of Hart and with posters from "Sand."

The cutouts and posters were also placed in and about the lobby. A set of 8 by 10 scene stills, a set of 11 by 14 lobby pictures and two 22 by 28 star photos of Hart were arranged in attractive lobby stands and gilt frames and panels, making one of the most attractive lobby sets ever seen in Steubenville.

Then in the interior of the lobby was a heap of clean white building sand—nothing elaborate, nothing costly. It was just unusual and simple.

The entire stunt was comparatively inexpensive and all the material used would be easily available to any theatre. It proved a winner as an idea and certainly brought the crowds to see "Sand" because the Victoria theatre was packed every day of the picture's run.

Binghamton Becomes a "Treasure Hunt" City

"Listen! Boys and girls and everybody, because this is not a fable, but a true story about a real treasure island right here in Binghamton."

That's the way the story started. It was under a two column black face head and was accompanied by a two column map.

The story that landed all this space was put over when John P. McConville, exploitation representative attached to the Buffalo office of the Famous Players-Lasky company pulled one of the best stunts of the summer season in Binghamton the week of August 9.

Mr. McConville arrived in town to aid Manager Fred Gillen of the Strand theatre put over "Treasure Island." He got busy with the local merchants and succeeded in persuading them to give him money contributions, which he said he wanted to bury on an island in the Susquehanna river.

The burying process over, John hurried to the office of the Binghamton Press and unburdened himself of the story. He told the editors that the city had a real treasure island in its midst which it knew nothing about and that all good Binghamtonians were invited as soon after sunup as possible on "Friday the 13th" to wade across the channel and search for the money and the bunch of passes to the Strand which were also hidden around the island. The editors pronounced the tale a likely one and not only accepted the story but also published a map, drawn by "Architect" McConville himself, showing the position of the island, the stores which came through with contributions, which by the way was an excellent bit of publicity in return for the money, and other essentials necessary for the knowledge of an honest-to-God treasure hunter.

Early Friday morning every child in Binghamton got up with the sun, overlooked breakfast, jumped into a pair of pants, some had more on, and dashed for the channel and the island as per McConville map. It looked like the advance of the Reds on Warsaw. Never was so much fun had and never WAS SO MUCH TALK ABOUT TREASURE ISLAND.

At this writing it is not known just whether anyone found the money, but several unearthed passes for the theatre and it is probable that John is waiting for the complete list of money finders before he announces it.

The stunt was an excellent one, unusually original and attracted more attention to the picture at the Strand than a week of full page ads.

John in drawing the map, seems to be all out of ordinary paper and could find nothing but a letter-head with the name FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION, etc. and etc. slammed across the top of it. This got into the paper with the map and John should have credit for it.

Todd Talks on Small Town Exploitation

Heralds Best Advertising Medium, States Manager of Manheim-Tucker Company

"WHAT is the best medium of advertising for the small town theatre?" This question was put up to Bert Todd, of the Manheim-Tucker Amusement Company of Cleveland, and without a moment's hesitation Todd answered, "The herald. In my opinion," Todd explained, "the herald is the direct link between the small town picture theatre and the theatre's patrons. But the herald must be something more than a piece of paper with an announcement printed on it in black ink. Black is very effective in its way, but its way isn't the straight way from the pocket book to the box office, and as the mission of the herald is to coax the shekels from their abiding place to the cash box it must contain some element that will offer some inducement for the reader to react in the manner intended. And that element must be the element of being opportune.

"The secret of the success of the herald is its timeliness. That's why I believe that heralds should be sent out the same day of the performance. 'Tonight Charlie Chaplin plays at such-and-such a theatre in his biggest comedy hit of the year,' your herald reads. Tonight, the family gathers around the table and each member plans out his program. Some member of the family has seen a herald. Some of 'em don't know what to do, and the printed suggestion hits the nail right on the head.

"Now, if that herald had announced what would play at the theatre the next night, three-quarters of its value would have been lost. Tomorrow night the family might have something else to do. By tomorrow night the herald would have been forgotten. But if you get out daily heralds, and catch the folks who haven't made up their minds where to go or what to do, then you have picked up a lot of business that would have drifted into other channels.

"Here's a herald that we got out in connection with Wallace Reid in 'The Dancin' Fool' that got us a lot of patronage. The Liberty theatre is located in Geneva, Ohio. Now, right near Geneva, there is a summer resort, where dancing is the big feature. Our heralds read as follows:

"'Dance this afternoon or tonight with Wally Reid (The Dancin' Fool) at the Liberty Theatre.'

"This herald took like wildfire. It caught the attention instantly because dancing is the order of the evening in Geneva. What followed was read because of the big headline 'Dance.' And it did tremendous business.

"I am also a great believer in the value of trailers in connection with the small town picture theatre. We run three or four a month at our houses in Geneva and Painesville. You've got your readers right where you want them and they can't get away from you. They'll read what is put on the screen, whereas they're apt to pass by any printed matter that is passed around. And you can tell 'em the whole story in a trailer. Slides are too curt. They don't give the exhibitor an opportunity of showing his wares. Trailers, to a motion picture exhibitor, are what an attractive window display is to a merchant. It's his chance to show what he's got to sell, and to create a demand for his product.

"We are great believers in exploitation. We exploit every picture that goes into our houses, and we lay a great share of our succeess to the efficacy of exploitation. It's a mistake to let a picture sell itself to the public. The exhibitor, especially the small town exhibitor, must wake up to the fact that it's his job to sell his features to the public. It doesn't make any difference whether he uses slides or trailers or heralds or exploitation stunts or all of these methods, just so that he uses intelligent, opportune and timely advertising."

Builds Lobby Display for "Elephant Man"

On the opposite page is shown the lobby display designed by O. J. Chandler, manager of the Isis theatre, Peru, Ind., for the engagement of "Her Elephant Man."

The cut will explain itself in so far as the lobby display is concerned, it only being necessary to add in text that the lobby floor was covered with sawdust and that the ticket seller officiated from a special box office made to represent the ticket box of a circus.

The circus wagon shown in the lower illustration was driven about the city drawn by a handsome team of black horses and a clown band discoursed the latest jazz music on top.

Mr. Chandler reports that fixing up the display required some work, more or less ingenuity and a little money but that it paid big returns, being a most effectual means of bucking a carnival that has located in Peru for the week.

Requests More Attention to the "Little Missionaires"

From the Roth and Partington trio of theatres in San Francisco, the California, the Imperial and the Portola comes a timely query.

The question asked along with the comment that much is being written in the trade papers about the display advertising of the "once a week" or Sunday variety, is "How about the daily ads? The smaller cuts used for economic reasons, on which considerable time and talent is being expended by the publicity men all over the country? Why not shoot the searchlight into the little every day outlay of money and learn if the boys are getting their money's worth from these little missionaires?"

One of the California's (San Francisco) daily ads referred to in the accompanying story

Are they? We don't know. We have an opinion but our opinions do not weigh much against the proved experience of the exhibitors and publicity men who are taking care of the advertising for fifteen thousand picture theatres.

Will you write us for publication on this subject, giving concrete examples of your experience? How about "the little missionaires"? Do they pay? Tell us that we may tell the exhibitors what you have proven.

We are reproducing one of the California's "little missionaires," we like that phrase. It was two columns by five inches.

Selections from "The Firefly" Being Sung at the Capitol

GEMS from "The Firefly" by the Capitol orchestra and a selected company of singers and dancers is one of the musical numbers on this week's bill at the Capitol theatre.

A prelude by the orchestra opens the number. This is followed by the singing of "Giannina Mia" by Athene Buckley, soprano, after which Mlle. Gambarelli and A. Aumansky dance the gavotte "Love is Like a Firefly."

The duet "Sympathy" sung by Melanie Verbouwens and Bertram Peacock closes the offering.

The stage setting provided by artist Wenger is a black velvet drop with the stage dressed with a gilded potted palm. For the duet a bench is added to the stage props.

Base Ball Scores Good Exploitation Medium

Any picture house located in a small town can cash in on baseball announcements, just like the Liberty theatre, Geneva, Ohio, does, and be sure of a full house every evening, instead of watching the crowds go by the lobby every time the thermometer takes a jump.

The Liberty theatre, Geneva, has arranged to share the expense of having a wire to Cleveland, over which the baseball scores are recorded daily. The score is flashed on the screen every evening, during the performance, and there's usually a big crowd on hand to read it, no matter what the weather is. There are no baseball editions in Geneva, and the theatre is the only place where the fans can get the score. Any small town which is near enough to a big city to participate in the city's sports can cash in on a proposition like that.

The Liberty, however, doesn't confine its energies to the big league baseball team. Geneva has a team of its own. And this summer the home team has more than held its own with the competitive teams. So the manager of the theatre has arranged with the local team that whenever it wins, the whole team is to be the guest of the Liberty theatre.

It isn't much of an expense, but it makes the Geneva folks feel as if the theatre were interested in the life of the town. Too many theatres are only interested in getting the nickles and dimes out of the inhabitants, but the Liberty has proven that taking an active part in the civic affairs of a small town, of patting its pet hobbies on the back, and of rejoicing with it in what interests it, is the best way of building up a permanent patronage.

When "The Copperhead" Played the Liberty

Mrs. Wiesenberger Gets the Home Town Exploitation Angle Whenever Possible

THERE aren't a lot of women running motion picture theatres in this country, in proportion to the number of men similarly occupied, but it's a notable fact that the women who are in the exhibiting end of the business are almost all of them successful. Not only successful along lines laid down by the "dominant sex," but successful along original lines.

Not least among these successful exhibitresses is Mrs. Cecile Wiesenberger. Mrs. Wiesenberger is manager of the Liberty theatre, Geneva, Ohio, for the Manheim-Tucker Amusement Company of Cleveland. Geneva, Ohio, isn't a metropolis by any means—the last census estimates the population about 3,000—but the people of Geneva see the best shows on the market, and Mrs. Wiesenberger sees to it that the shows they get can stand comparison with the best performances in any of the big towns.

Mrs. Wiesenberger is great on the personal touch. She says that's the psychology of the small town exhibitor. She knows everybody in the place, young and old. She knows whose kids belong to whom. She makes it her business to know who's sick and she asks the relatives about them when they come to the show.

Here's the kind of things she pulls. Recently she played "The Copperhead" at the Liberty theatre. It doesn't tell much to say that she had the Geneva Martial Band playing out in front of the Liberty theatre for half an hour every evening before the show opened. But everybody'll appreciate what the Geneva Martial Band means to Geneva when they understand it's the old G. A. R. fife and drum corps.

But again Mrs. Wiesenberger ran the personal touch into her campaign. "The Copperhead," so she discovered, had been shown privately at the Soldiers' Home in Dayton. Now Geneva boasts of having one old Civil War veteran living at the Soldiers' Home in Dayton. Mrs. Wiesenberger dug up the name of this solitary "vet" and wrote him a letter, asking him to give her his opinion of "The Copperhead."

Of course the soldier fell for the proposition, and came back with a glowing criticism of the picture. The Geneva paper got hold of the letter and came out with a big front page headline about the letter received from the city's only surviving veteran of the Civil War, followed by the letter in full.

That's an example of how a small town theatre can tie itself up with the life of a small town. It's just a way to get under the skin of the patrons and it's the kind of exhibiting and the kind of managing that makes friends for a theatre. But more important than making friends for a theatre, it makes money for the theatre, and a consistent policy of this sort keeps on making more friends and more money.

"Sick Abed" Bedroom Again Makes Hit

When it came time for the Liberty theatre of Geneva, Ohio, to play "Sick Abed," the live wire Liberty manager having observed the first of the "bedroom" lobby displays for this feature that have been illustrated in the NEWS, decided that this stunt was a good bet for his theatre.

Instead, however, of fitting the theatre lobby into a bedroom, one of Geneva's leading furniture stores was induced to use its show window for the purpose.

Another exploitation medium which brought good results was hanging a regulation telegram in the lobby of the Liberty, which read: "Latest reports from the bedside of Wallace Reid. No perceptible change in last few hours. Respiration 106½. Grave doubts for his recovery. No nurses obtainable. (Signed) Dr. P. J. Smith."

The newspapers fell in line to give the Liberty a boost on the picture and every day for a week the Free-Press Times carried a bulletin captioned "From Wallace Reid's Bedside."

On the last day of the stunt it carried a front page story kidding Wallie about being sick in a furniture store window, and not a trained nurse in sight.

That's the kind of get-together stuff they work down in Geneva. And because the theatres pull with the papers, and because the papers work with the public, the public and the theatre are constantly in harmony, with the happy smile for the patron, and a full cash box for the exhibitor.

Concerning the Capitol's Ballet Offering

THE ballet portion of the Capitol program this week is titled "La Source" being a quintette number with Mlle. Gambrelli heading the cast.

The dancers appear before a black velvet drop with some low artistically colored set pieces in front of it. From the flies a number of white balloons are suspended.

The girls are supplied with garlands and scarlet nets which they wave in rhythm to their steps in the dance.

The artists are attired in regulation esthetic dancing costumes and are lighted by floods from the wings, which vary from amber to scarlet as the steps of the dance change.

Cinderella Slippers Advertise "Slim Princess"

While H. C. Horater (Doc) and Mrs. Horater were sojourning in New York, Doc's resident manager of the Alhambra theatre back at Toledo, Ohio, was putting over the details of the exploitation campaign previously planned for the run of "The Slim Princess."

Previous to the opening date for the picture, announcement was made that a series of prizes would be given to the first five members of the fair sex who could wear the tiny shoes which one of Toledo's most fashionable shoe stores was displaying in the show windows.

When the store opened the morning following the prize offer announcement it was almost impossible to get near the door of the establishment. All the women in Toledo had small feet, or at least, thought they did, and were all on deck to try on the famous slipper.

There were five Toledoans, however, whose feet were tiny enough to slip into the shoes comfortably, and to these five passes for periods covering different durations, were handed out.

Doc states that if business would only hold up on every picture as it did for "The Slim Princess" he could afford to live even at Mrs. Astor's boarding house in New York all the time.

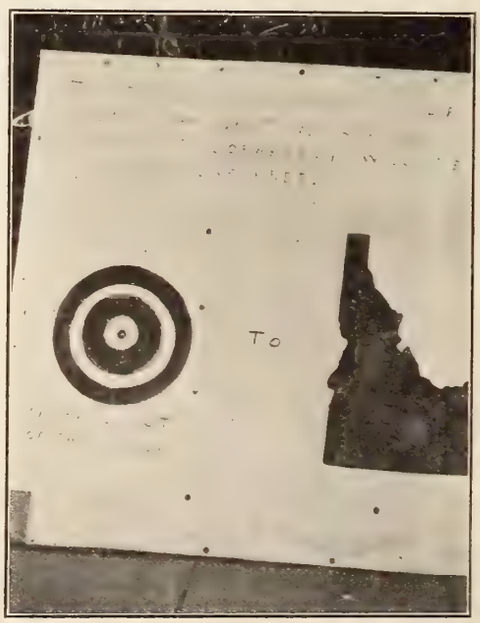
How Miller Manages Orofino's Rex Theatre

Exploitation Stunts of Special Interest to the Small Town Manager

ONCE more it is the small town guy who comes through with a brand new exploitation idea, one which bats .400 with us.

The chap we refer to is J. H. Miller, manager of the Rex theatre, Orofino, Idaho, a town of less than a thousand inhabitants. The picture for which Mr. Miller's exploitation stunt was successfully used is "Back to God's Country."

Before reading the text explaining the idea, inspect the accompanying cut. It will make easier digesting the full details of the stunt.



Prior to advertising "Back to God's Country" except by slide on the screen, Mr. Miller placed the puzzle shown in the illustration in one of the windows of a local store.

The target was black and after knocking the l out of the word, "back" remains. Following the word "black" is a map of the state of Idaho, which as Mr. Miller states, "Everyone knows is God's Country."

Mr. Miller allowed the puzzle board to remain in the show window two days, in which time eleven women of Orofino had solved the puzzle, everybody else in town had tried to figure it out, and was talking about the stunt, all of which put "Back to God's Country" very much in the limelight.

When the interest in the puzzle itself had finally died down, Mr. Miller printed the answer and a list of the eleven women who had solved it, which gave him some more publicity.

In addition to the puzzle stunt, Mr. Miller adopted the press book suggestion which has proved so popular, that of stenciling the sidewalks with the "Wapi" tracks all leading to the entrance of the Rex.

J. H. Miller puzzle exploitation idea for "Back to God's Country" as described on this page

Mr. Miller is strong for newspaper advertising and has a regular space on the front page of the local paper, something he is able to get away with by some hook or crook, which he gives careful attention each week. For "Back to God's Country" exploitation he used a regulation "Lawful Notice," or as it is called in some parts of the country, "Legal Notice" stunt, naming a number of farmers residing in various sections outside of Orofino, being careful to select those who had cars, and the result was an extensive country audience for the showing.

Recently Mr. Miller found himself with a circus opposition, which in a town the size of Orofino would usually mean closing up or playing to empty seats. Mr. Miller did neither. He ran shows in between the two circus performances and picked up a lot of extra business. As exploitation for the attraction he was playing he had tickets similar to those used by a circus printed and distributed them during the parade.

Mr. Miller meets the opposition of the annual visit of a Chautauqua in the same manner as he did the circus. In consequence he is able to have his special showings, including the title of the picture, announced from the Chautauqua platform.

Mr. Miller tells us he looks on the NEWS as his assistant manager and that he gets many a valuable hint from the Exhibitors' Service Bureau.

Two Attractive Lobby Displays for New Feature Pictures

Populous Family Aids "Married Life" at Los Angeles

Victory theatre, Los Angeles, Calif., staged one of the most unique and unusual features ever billed in connection with the exploitation of a motion picture during the showing of Mack Sennett's "Married Life."

This picture was exhibited in the Kinema theatre the week previous, when every conceivable idea, seemingly, was brought into play to give the picture widespread exploitation. Therefore, when the production was moved over to the Victory theatre it became necessary for the management of that house to unearth something entirely new and something that would continue the standard of advertising set by the Kinema theatre.

Manager Arthur Wenbel remembered a very populous family by the name of Bryan, consisting of father and mother and thirteen children, who had just recently moved into a Los Angeles hotel from somewhere in the middle west. In other words, it was "Married Life in the greatest sense of the term."

Then the Victory theatre apparently "butted into" the affair and presented the family with a perambulator for two and passes to the performance of "Married Life." They began to make a general exploitation use of the family that was surprising to everyone except the Bryans themselves. The daily papers came out with great columns about the multitudinous family and reproduced pictures of the family en masse. Then the Victory sprang another surprise. Public appearance of the Bryans at the Victory was the bill and the box office crowds were amazing. Such wide and unique exploitation has never been beaten in this city. Finally the truth came out. About half of the children were their own.

Rialto Departs from Established Presentation Custom

A DEPARTURE from a long established custom in New York, that of opening the bill at all of the motion picture theatres with the overture, is found at the Rialto this week, where the show opens with the screening of the news weekly to fade in at its close to the orchestral rendition of "Sicilian Vespers."

Whether or not this is a permanent change in the Rialto presentation is something on which we are not informed but there seems to be considerable virtue in the departure from the usual.

The New York shows are begun at periods of the day when patrons are coming into the theatres in the greatest numbers. The exhibition of the current events first permits many hundreds of people to get seated during a part of the bill over which most people are not so concerned, as to a matter of being disturbed, as they are with a musical number.

Also it provides for a less important number to "open the show" which is according to approved stage methods of long years standing.

Carpenter Begins Early with "Humoresque" Exploitation

George C. Carpenter, the enterprising manager of the Paramount-Empress theatre of Salt Lake City, is acquainting the Salt Lake public with the virtues of "Humoresque," opening at the Paramount-Empress Labor Day.

As one of the methods devised for this purpose, a motion picture showing Sid Chaplin, Mayor Clarence Nelson and Chief of Police Joseph Burdidge of Salt Lake City and a number of other celebrities has been made and will be shown at the Paramount-Empress with a huge bill board containing a publicity sheet on "Humoresque" as a background.

Trailers showing portions of the picture will be thrown on the screen from time to time. Sid Chaplin stopped off at Salt Lake City on his return from Europe before proceeding to Los Angeles.

Sharp Uses Floats to Advertise "Suds"

George F. Sharp, managing director of the Liberty theatre, Fresno, Cal., used a float as an exploitation aid for his engagement of "Suds."

The float was paraded about the streets during the day and at night it's value was further enhanced by the addition of four electric flood lamps located at each corner of the wagon. The current was derived from a storage battery appropriated for the purpose.

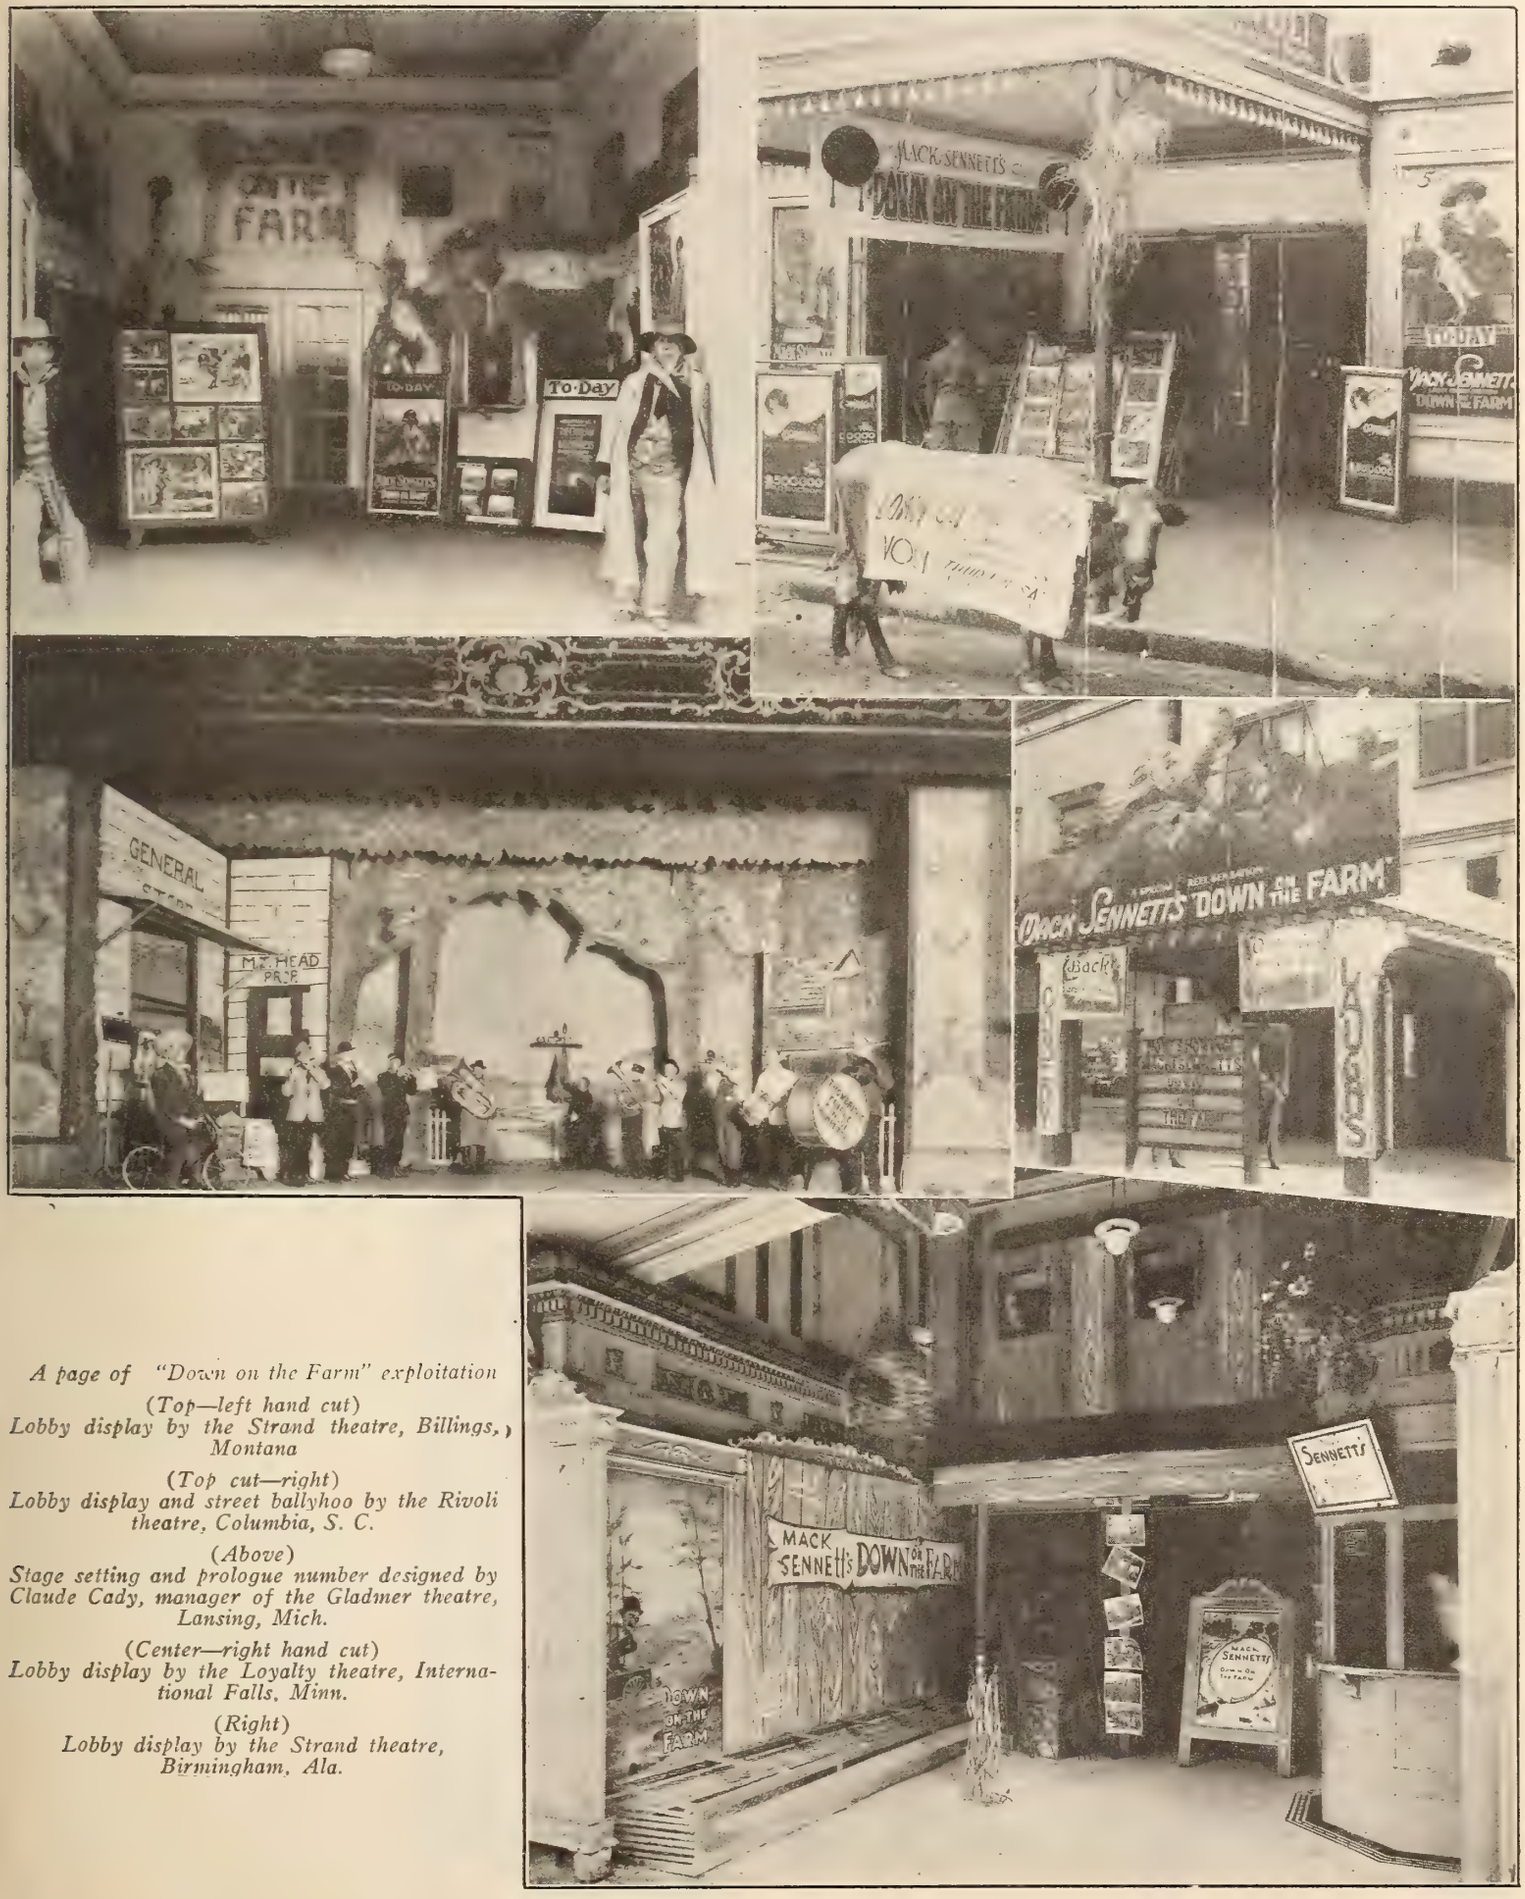
"It Pays to Prologue" at the Madison

Kunsky Publicity Forces Stage Elaborate Prelude Offering for "For the Soul of Rafael"

"IT pays to prologue" is evidently the maxim of the live-wire exploitation and stage staff of the Kunsky forces in Detroit, for this week will see Detroit flocking to the Madison to enjoy one of the most lavish settings and preludes ever staged on any production. The occasion is one that fully justifies the unusual effort expended by Messrs. Roe and Pearce in introducing "For the Soul of Rafael."

As the curtain rises, a Gothic convent is disclosed at the right, with two arched gateways forming the entrance. Two high towers rise at both ends of the gates, and a circular wall forms the background. The whole scene is flooded in blue light. A bell is seen swinging to and fro, and from back stage come the clarion tones of the Angelus. Gradually a pale gray light spreads from the left, and four men, clad in the cowl and gown of monks, emerge, singing the "Te Deum" or "Pagliacci" to the sombre accompaninment of the organ. When this quartette is over, the leading tenor appears, also dressed as a monk, at the door of the convent.

As he appears, a soprano, in the garb of a nun, emerges from the convent. The vacquero bursts out with the love song from the opera "The Huguenots," "Fairer than the Lily," while the quartette harmonizes to it. When this is over, the soprano responds with the famous farewell solo, "Adio," from "La Boheme," after which the lovers draw nearer and sing the duet from "Trovatore." Meanwhile the yellow light that has grown stronger over the entire scene is dimmed when the duet is over, and made blue again, while the monks vanish into the gloomy convent singing the "Te Deum" from "Tosca," while the nun remains lingering at the steps, casting a parting glance at the departing vacquero.



Ballet number at the Rivoli theatre last week under the title of "Pierret's Dream," in which the Rivoli dancers, May Kitchen and Paul Oscard, appeared

The stage is darkened for a moment, and then a spotlight flashes on a beautiful girl at a window, and another spotlight on a young man below. They gaze at one another, while from the background comes the deep voice of a dramatic reciter who declaims the love poem from "Romeo and Juliet," after which the curtain descends and the picture begins.

The properties used in the foregoing were inexpensive, as the Madison theatre has an extensive array of material. The tenor used was Caesar Nesi, brought from New York. The entire prologue was made to fit the theme of "For the Soul of Rafael."

Sivitz's Exploitation for "Go and Get It" Worth Inspection

Samuel Sivitz, manager of the Liberty theatre for the Rowland and Clark Enterprises in Pittsburg, Pa., employs as method of buying publicity space in newspapers where the reading columns are not for sale. Mr. Sivitz recently put over a record business for a week's run for the summer months. The fact that the Marshall Neilan picture, "Go and Get It," shows the inside workings of a newspaper office made Manager Sivitz anxious for some publicity space. He took the synopsis story, carefully marked it as to type faces corresponding to that used by the newspaper, emphasized the fact that no rule borders were to be used and handed it into the advertising department.

When published it looked exactly like free reading matter and the apparent fact was emphasized by the appearance down in another part of the page of some Liberty theatre advertising. The synopsis was especially effective, inasmuch as the amusement columns are very chary of any praise of a picture, and the fact that the nearly quarter page on "Go and Get It" was uncensored praise and about newspaper life created the impression that it was the paper's own opinion of the picture.

Mr. Sivitz backed up this start with a lobby display of cutouts, using skillfully the contract between the ace-man and the heroine of the picture, the hero-reporter and Wesley Barry the boy detective. On bill boards he used the same attraction of this contract and in the newspaper advertising also. One of the most effective of his newspaper displays was a reproduction of the first page of the "Harbor City Gazette," the newspaper which furnishes the nucleus of the story, and breaking through the type was the picture of the ace-man, the heroine, the hero and the boy detective.

Reese B. Harrington

"Youngest Exhibitor in the United States"

This is a photograph of Reese B. Harrington, the boy manager of the Reese Opera House at Harrington, Delaware. He is probably the youngest exhibitor in the United States if not in the world, having been situated in the position of being around the theatrical business all his life.

At the early age of twelve he began his career as manager of the Reese Opera House, and has continued in this position until the present time, he having attained the age of seventeen. During this time he learned the show business from A to Z, and set the town afire by some of his exploitation stunts. He is known by mostly all the showmen who travel the road, and when they want a little advertising done out of the ordinary they find Reese.

When he gained control of the theatre it was in bad shape and also the town when it came to amusements. Some pronounced the theatre to be open about two weeks, others said nothing, they just thought. The first thing he did was to gain the confidence of the people and giving them the right of selecting the pictures. The attendance began to increase and the slogan "Always a good picture at the Opera House" began to spread through the town and community. He not only knows the theatrical game but studies it, and what is the result—why a fifty thousand dollar theatre is going to be erected in Harrington, of which he will be the manager and part owner.

Meyers Made an Ordinance Work for Him

No More Is Cairo, Ill., the Sleepy Town Mark Twain Wrote About

IN the archives at the city hall of Cairo, Ill., there is a statute which forbids masquerading in any form within the corporate limits of the town. Al Meyers, manager of the Kimmel theatre, the only first-run house in Cairo, inadvertantly heard of this law, but very advertantly set to work to incorporate it in an exploitation plan for "On With the Dance" which played his house August 9th and 10th. The result of Meyer's publicity stunt filled his seating capacity of 900 on both nights and compelled him to turn away exactly 1,500 prospective admission fees.

The stunt which is outlined below gained for him several columns of free space in his local newspapers besides gaining the attention of many small-town papers in Illinois and Missouri within a radius of 100 miles of Cairo.

Now for the modus operandi—

On Saturday, August 7th, there alighted from the inbound Chicago & Alton coach a well-dressed young lady whose general appearance was cloaked in mystery because of the black mask that covered her eyes. The young "mysterious stranger" carried a black suit-case and immediately proceded through the down-town section of the city to the main hotel. There she registered as Gertrude Garnett of Kansas City. When questioned concerning her mask, she became reticent and walked away. Large crowds of towns-folk followed the mysterious lady during all her perambles through the city all Saturday night.

On Sunday the visitor again appeared on the streets still retaining the secrecy of her real identity and gaining much notoriety. The crowds of curious people became so large during the afternoon that many business men complained to the police, reminding them that there was a city law against masquerading on the public thoroughfares. The police department knew about this all the time because Meyers had taken every precaution not to antagonize them. But the telephone calls became so persistent that the Chief of Police ordered the "wagon" out to arrest the dark lady.

She managed to be on the Main street when the arrest occurred and at first attempted to resist the efforts of the police. At the station she was questioned and accordingly she told this story:

"My name is Gertrude Garnett and I am an understudy of Miss Mae Murray who will appear tomorrow night at the Kimmel theatre in her greatest production. I will dance at both performances and will dance according to the instruction of Miss Murray. My costume will be the same as the one she wears in her picture.

"I will be glad to meet all young ladies in Cairo who have aspirations to enter the movies and give them the best advice I know. They can see me at any time during the two days that the picture is to show at the Kimmel."

With that explanation the authorities released the lady who had caused such a sensation in their city. The explanation startled Cairo to such an extent that money was actually turned down at the box-office because of the lack of sufficient seating room.

As an additional feature some of the residents of Cairo addressed letters to the "People's Column" in the Cairo Bulletin either praising or condemning the audacity of the exhibitor. The fact that the stunt pleased hundreds more than it displeased was evinced by the receipts.

Atlantic City Convention Condemns Producers

RESOLUTIONS condemning theatre-building and theatre-buying on the part of producers were passed on Tuesday, August 24th, by the convention of exhibitors of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, and Delaware, which opened on August 23rd at Atlantic City.

Albert G. Fisher, of the Mammoth theatre, of Philadelphia, presided at the opening of the convention, and Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, was the principal speaker. Mr. Cohen told of the work of the National Association and stated that an energetic campaign would soon be undertaken with a view to stopping the practice of jumping contracts and "star stealing," with its consequent higher rentals for the exhibitor in order to meet the higher salaries demanded by the star.

President Cohen also explained the intentions of the M. P. T. O. in regard to the deposit. They had in mind, he said, the passage of a law such as existed in New York, in every state in the union, whereby the deposits would be kept in trust for the exhibitor without any danger of loss. He cited the failure of General Film, the United Picture Theatres and finally of Hallmark to prove the danger to exhibitors' money that existed.

Fred C. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, was one of the speakers during the second day's session. He urged co-operation and stated that the raising of prices, brought about by the producers, would eventually place the screen outside the reach of the masses.

Several thousand dollars were raised for protecting the interests of the theatre owners after Mr. Herrington and other speakers had deplored the hitherto unprotected condition which made it possible for exhibitors to be held up for $700,000 in franchises.

Other resolutions adopted included one against percentage booking, one against payment of rentals in full more than seven days in advance of exhibition, censorship, music tax, and one condemning the practise of re-issuing of films with new titles for the purpose of deceiving exhibitors.

Luna Theatre Specializes in Matinee Parties

Specializing in matinee theatre parties in a simple way which can be utilized by almost any exhibitor has developed a good regular afternoon patronage for the Luna theatre at Lafayette, Ind. The development of the business came about through an inquiry from a young hostess as to whether or not it would be possible to reserve twelve places in the theatre for a matinee. The management said that it would and then the young woman said that there would be any number of parties made up except for the uncertainty of being able to get seats together if they waited to purchase their tickets until theatre time. The management immediately had a large announcement printed offering to reserve eight or more seats for any matinee party, which caused business to develop immediately. The sign itself was suggestive as to a convenient and economical way of entertaining friends or clubs, and "movie" parties have become quite a fad.

At a recent showing of "The Yellow Typhoon" there were twelve separate theatre parties totalling 172 people present. The management attributes a part of the penchant for parties to this particular picture to the fact that the unusual invitations issued by the hostess of one was printed in full by the local newspapers in an account of the affair. The invitations which were composed by the hostess herself read: "Bulletin—Beware of the typhoon scheduled to reach this city Monday afternoon, August 9th. I will provide my friends with a place of refuge where they can view the devastation wrought if they will assemble at my home not later than one-thirty on that afternoon provided each wears a yellow aster.

Prologue for New Criterion Bill

IN connection with the presentation of "The Right to Love" opening this week at the Criterion theatre a most appropriate prologue is being staged, under the title of "In a Seraglio."

As a background, the scenic artist shows a panoramic view, looking from above, of the city of Constantinople, accentuating the rotound tops of the city's many mosques. In the foreground to the right is erected a "Romeo and Juliet" balcony from which a girl, dressed in the native Turkish dress, sings the call to prayer. The front stage proper is set to resemble lobby of a typical Turkish harem, with a guard, a singing girl, a dancing girl and a dervish as the characters portrayed. This scene follows a short reelage entitled "On the Bosphorus." As setting for the feature picture whose story is laid in Constantinople and as an attractive bit of pantomimic performance, "In a Seraglio" is due especial mention.

Pershing Gets Publicity in Novel Manner

In one of the most widely read St. Louis daily newspapers, a humorist conducts a column in which he lambasts various freak signs which are posted about the city. He has a string of readers who constantly send in to him pen and ink reproductions of freak signs and these in turn are printed. The results which occur very often when one poster is superimposed over another are laughable and most times ridiculous, and so the Sign-Hunters column is exceedingly popular.

To capitalize a circumstance like this, E. Reeves Espy, of the Famous Players-Lasky Missouri Corporation, which controls the Pershing theatre, has purposely planned to have freak signs appear on the front of this theatre and busy sign hunters have repeatedly reported the matter to the newspaper. The resulting publicity given the Pershing by this means of exploitation has even carried one of the really freakish signs into the Literary Digest Topics of the Day. It was the result of a poster for "Why Marry," being placed directly above another for a Mutt and Jeff cartoon. When completed it read:

WHY MARY
MUTT AND JEFF.

Another was to this effect:

WHY CHANGE YOUR HUSBAND
with
MARY PICKFORD.

"Mr. White" Suicide, Exploitation Stunt

Atlanta "Tragedy" Turns Out to Be Publicity Stunt Originated by Tudor Theatre

ONE evening recently, a good-looking, well-tailored young man hurried into an Atlanta hotel, registered, and asked for room 512. He registered as "John White, Chicago, Ill." On being assigned to his room, he telephoned down that, should any call or telephone, particularly a woman, they should be told that Mr. White was out.

It was a busy hour at the hotel, so a note was made of the message, and no one thought of it again. At ten, a woman called up on the phone, and asked for "Mr. John White, in Room 512." She was told that he was out, whereupon she flew into a rage.

"You tell him to call Mrs. Sands the minute he comes in," demands the voice. "Never mind the number—he knows it well!"

At eleven, the same woman called again, leaving a similar message. And at one o'clock, when she called again he was still "out," she broke into a turbulent fit of weeping and rang off hurriedly.

The next day, when no call could be put through to "Mr. White's" room, the hotel detective investigated—and found the room empty. Several fragments of letters, one addressed "Mother Dear" and another to "My Dear Brother" were scattered around the room with many half-burned cigarette stubs. A worn pocket-Bible, open at the story of the Prodigal Son, was on the bed, which had not been touched.

The case was duly reported to the police. An interesting clue was discovered later in the morning, by a street-car motorman on an suburban car-line, in the shape of a man's coat and hat, on the banks of the Chattahoochee River, at a point which has earned for itself the name of Suicide Bluff, owing to its gruesome popularity with those seeking self- destruction. With this coat, was a note, which read,

"Mother Dear:

"I know that what I am about to do is going to hurt you cruelly—but I'd rather die than face life, with the notorious Mrs. Sands dogging me. Forgive me, Mother.

"Your heart-broken son, JOHN"

In the pockets of the coat, were several business cards, a cigarette-case of leather, much worn, and a small amount of money. The fact that the letter was addressed to "Mrs. Katie White" at a Chicago address, was considered sufficient proof that the supposed suicide was the "John White, of Chicago." The hotel-phone-girl remembered the telephone calls from "Mrs. Sands" at most unconventional hours—and the newspapers made the most of the "tragedy." For three days and nights, both city and county police dragged the river—but no trace of the missing man was found.

The story "broke" the following Sunday, when all the newspapers were given half-page ads on the Tudor theatre's feature picture for the following week—Bessie Barriscale in "The Notorious Mrs. Sands." The indignation of the police, the chagrin of the reporters, and the strenuous protest of the hotel so "featured," caused the story to be given considerable space the following week.

It was the best-planned, and most successful "coup" that has ever been put over in Atlanta, on any picture—and it is safe to say that it will be a long time before another will be even planned, for the police are still somewhat belligerent on the subject.

The "stunt" was planned by Paul V. Phillips, exploitationist and salesman for Robertson-Cole, in collaboration with Manager James J. Jackson, of the Tudor, and Rufus A. Davis, branch manager for Robertson-Cole.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

First National Franchise for Ritter

James C. Editing Bureau Organized

Fine Arts Announces New Service in Charge of Edward M. Roskam

M. W. CARSON, president of Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., announced this week the formation of a service bureau, organized for the purpose of aiding producers, distributors and independent releasing concerns to secure the greatest possible results from their productions. Chief among the objects of the new bureau is the establishment of an organization to cut and edit pictures for the trade with the aid of experts in this particular line handling the work so that the highest standard of excellence in editorial perfection can be guaranteed, says Fine Arts.

Edward M. Roskam, who has had charge of the re-editing and cutting of pictures for Universal for the past two years, and who handled such notable box office successes as "Polly of the Circus," "The Masque of Life," "The Virgin of Stamboul," "Blind Husbands," "The Devil's Pass Key," and others, will have charge of this department which will handle the cutting and editing of all pictures submitted.

In addition to the department for re-editing pictures, The Fine Arts exploitation department will be at the disposal of those desiring press and campaign books for their productions as well as other kinds of advertising and exploitation material.

Simultaneously with the opening of the Fine Arts Service Bureau, Edward Roskam announced the perfection of a new and original illustrated title, which not only enables the editor to give the reading matter a most advantageous setting, it is claimed, but makes the illustration symbolic with the theme of the picture, an angle which is often overlooked but which is of utmost importance in taking advantage of either tense dramatic scenes or comedy situations.

Joan Film Well Received

Much Interest Attaches to "She Played and Paid" Among Buyers

THE Joan Film Sales Company reports that it is meeting with greatest success introducing its first release to the independent market, "She Played and Paid," starring Fannie Ward. "It might be added," continues the statement from the Joan Film Sales offices, "that in the bright outlook facing Joan and its star, Fanny Ward, is included the states-rights buyer, who is promised a handsome profit with this gripping photodrama."

The statement from the Joan Film Sales Company continues as follows: "From a study of the state-rights comment on this feature, it appears that the plot of 'She Played and Paid' is the favorite subject, above all others connected with the picture. As those who have seen it, or those who have read the play from which the picture is taken, 'The Raffle' by the celebrated French dramatist, Henri Bernstein, the theme of the picture is laid in the exclusive Parisian smart-set, amidst the gaiety and brilliance of the French salon. Fanny Ward rises to the height of her art as the beautiful and spirited Helene de Brechebel, married by family obligation to Baron le Bourge, a reckless French financier, whose home is the gaming table. Her love naturally seeks an outlet elsewhere, and the third corner of the Triangle appears. After a while the triangle is broadened to a rectangle, and we have one of the most absorbing and fascinating dramas of domestic life ever pictured.

"For a states-rights picture 'She Played and Paid' was the cause of much surprised comment, quite a few states-rights men claiming that it surpassed many a higher-priced feature in local color, spice, direction, setting and cast performance."

Blackton Film Issued by Pathe Sept. 5th

Pathe releases September 5 "The House of the Tolling Bell," a J. Stuart Blackton production, said by Pathe to be one of the strongest Blackton pictures ever made. In it is introduced the prominent British actor, Bruce Gordon, who plays opposite May McAvoy, the star of Blackton's "My Husband's Other Wife" and "Man and His Woman." Prominent in the supporting cast are Eulalie Jensen, William R. Dunn, Louis Dean, Edward Elkas, Edna Young and William Jenkins.

Adolf Milar in Cast of Tracy Feature

One of the outstanding artists in the cast of "The Silent Barrier," the Louis Tracy novel which was made into a photoplay by the Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., and released through Hodkinson, is Adolf Milar, who in the role of Stampa, the guide, gives to the screen a really extraordinary characterization, according to W. W. Hodkinson.

Mr. Milar has long been a favorite with music lovers the world over. Both here and abroad he has won fame on the operatic stage and was long a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Seitz and Company Get Back from Spain

George B. Seitz and the members of his producing unit arrived in Boston, August 20, from Spain, where he took scenes for his first Pathe feature, "Rogues and Romance." The Seitz company returned on the S. S. Canopic of the Red Star Line. Approximately six weeks were consumed in making the exteriors for "Rogues and Romance."

Old Biograph "Coming Back"?

AS a result of numerous reports which are being rumored concerning the alleged mysterious producing activities, said to have been inaugurated at the Biograph Company's studios in New York and, also because certain published announcements have appeared in some of the trade journals in connection therewith, the following statement is issued by Allan Rock, who is associated with Messrs. Bruenner & Persons in their current producing activities—preliminary to a formal announcement which the latter will make very shortly, relative thereto.

It is expected that the forthcoming announcement will be of interest in that it will either give the lie to the persistently rumored beliefs that the world famous AB Trademark of the Biograph Company will again be seen on the screen, or else it will corroborate the purport of the rumor—in which event, the latter announcement will undoubtedly create considerable comment in picture circles.

The first part of Mr. Rock's statement announces the introduction of a new star, bearing the title of "The Blonde Vampire of the Screen." The statement, after linking the identity of the star with the name of De Dacia Mooers, a blonde beauty of the Pacific Coast and author of the novel, "The Blonde Vampire," continues as follows:

"It can be logically expected that the production or screen-play above referred to is a picturization of Miss Mooers' novel, 'The Blonde Vampire' and she herself will be starred as the heroine of the book and the film.

"It is true that for the time being we have endeavored to avoid any publicity in connection with our future plans," Mr. Rock's statement continues, "simply because we expect to launch a revolutionizing stunt in motion-picture-advertising, publicity and general exploitation in behalf of our new star and production. Naturally, we preferred to avoid any mention of anything that might 'take the edge off' such a campaign. This, however, has no bearing on the question as to whether or not the AB Trademark will be revived or whether or not it will adorn this production.

"In tracing the origin of the rumor, we discover that it was caused by an unscrupulous actor who sought publicity for himself by sending a notice to the press falsely claiming to be the 'featured player.' Realizing that it would require something considerably more important than the mention of his own name to 'get his yarn over' he deliberately invented the false information concerning the revival of the AB Trademark and included it in the notice which he sent out and which some of the trade papers, innocently enough, printed. I believe it apropos at this time, to request the trade and press to condemn such unfair, if not dishonest tactics.

"We have already received a score or more press-clippings from 'dailies' far afield who have devoted liberal space to reminiscing on the early days at the Biograph. We realize that this impression must be either affirmed or denied before it gets beyond our control, and Mr. Bruenner and Mr. Persons have promised to take action by issuing a statement very shortly, definitely stating the facts.

Blanche Sweet Feature Seen at Broadway

During the week of August 15th B. S. Moss gave Blanche Sweet's new starring vehicle, "Help Wanted: Male," the headline position on the program for his Broadway Theatre. It is an adaptation of Edwina Levin's magazine story, "Leona Goes a-Hunting," which was directed by Henry King for Jesse D. Hampton. Mr. King also played the leading male role opposite Miss Sweet.

As "Help Wanted: Male" is not regularly released until September 26, Pathe has the following to say about the B. S. Moss pre-release showing:

"Mr. Moss was in need of a strong feature to help build up his mid-summer business at the Broadway, and, as Miss Sweet is one of the best box-office attractions the theatre plays, his application for a pre-release showing on her latest feature was readily granted by Pathe's New York exchange."

David Powell in Cast with Monte Blue

David Powell, the Welsh actor under contract to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will be one of the featured players in the Charles Maigne Production for Paramount, "The Kentuckians," by John Fox, Jr. Information was given out some time ago that Monte Blue, also under contract to the same company, would be featured in the production, and he has already come East to begin work.

Big Cody Press Book Is Ready

THE press book which Robertson-Cole has issued for the exploitation and advertisement of "Occasionally Yours," starring Lew Cody, is said by the producers to be in keeping with this Cody picture, and will give the exhibitor every imaginable aid to make the best possible financial showing with "Occasionally Yours."

The front cover done in black, gray and blue include a picture of Lew Cody. Just inside is found a group of pictures of those in the cast, including Mr. Cody, Betty Blythe, Elinor Fair, J. Barney Sherry, Lillian Rambeau, Gertrude Astor, Lloyd Hamilton, William Quinn, not forgetting "Boots" the famous dog actor, who has a large part. There is a selling talk by A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, calling the attention of the exhibitor to the merit of "Occasionally Yours."

The next page is devoted to a biography and sketch of Mr. Cody. After this are shown the lobby photographs which contain views of the studio scenes of the picture. Below are listed many accessories which Robertson-Cole sends along to exploit the picture.

A novelty art page sets off "What You Will See in 'Occasionally Yours.'" This is followed by a program page containing the material which an exhibitor needs to properly advertise the picture in advance in his house organ or program. There is a complete musical setting for "Occasionally Yours."

Carpentier to Return to United States

ROBERTSON-COLE'S recent announcement that Georges Carpentier would shortly return to the United States to train for a fight with Battling Levinsky on October 12, Columbus Day, is being given universal verification by American daily newspapers.

The sporting pages are filled with details of the fight, which is to take place at Ebbets Field, Brooklyn, before the International Sporting Club. Also, in a large story, used by some of the country's greatest newspapers, Carpentier reviews his American tour, and makes the positive and signed statement that he will fight Dempsey.

These stories have added to the interest in "The Wonder Man," the Robertson-Cole picture, starring Carpentier, according to the producers.

"Ruth of the Rockies" Opens August 29

"Ruth of the Rockies," Pathe's new serial, starring Ruth Roland, is to begin its run of fifteen weeks on August 29th with a record-breaking number of first-run bookings, announces Pathe, Inc. Two weeks previous to the release of the first episode the bookings on "Ruth of the Rockies" assured the serial of showings before a vast majority of the picture-going public, says a statement from the Pathe offices, and made it evident that the popular heroine will play to numbers equalled by few stars.

Road Companies Will Tour With Picture

According to the intentions of contract holders on the all-Indian picture, "Before The White Man Came," which Arrow is distributing, this picture will be novel exploitation, according to Arrow. An announcement this week is to the effect that A. C. Bromberg of the Bromberg attractions of Atlanta, has signified his intention of putting on tour five road companies, each carrying a special Indian orchestra and bally-hoo.

F. P. Lasky Has New Division

Rodgers Heads New Short Subject Sales Branch

WITH the establishing of a separate division for the sale of short subjects and the appointment of W. F. Rodgers as short subjects sales manager, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announce a radical step in the recognition of the importance of the one and two-reel pictures in the general scheme of motion picture exhibition.

Mr. Rodgers, who heads the new division, comes to Famous Players-Lasky with a wealth of experience in the selling game. His connection with the industry dates back to the days when Mutual was a power in the film world, his early experience having been gained with that company. He then went to General Film where he remained several years, latterly in the capacity of sales manager. He also was for some time with Goldwyn, serving successively as assistant to the vice-president and to the president.

For the past three weeks Mr. Rodgers has been engaged in perfecting the details of organizing his department. In each one of the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges there will be a salesman—in some exchanges there may be two or three, according to the development of business—whose sole duty will be the selling of short subjects. These men will be known as Short Subject Representatives. So far, seventeen of these men have been chosen and assigned to their respective territories, the list including the following: David A. Levy, New Haven; S. B. Kramer, S. Freund, New York; L. Wiener, Buffalo; John Morphet, Albany; M. M. Emanuel, Washington; Max Gilbert, Pittsburgh; W. A. Bugie, Cincinnati; J. M. Burnstine, Cleveland; Oscar E. Watson, Detroit; E. L. Goldberg, Chicago; Al. Heusman, Minneapolis; E. P. O'Neill, Kansas City; M. Stahl, St. Louis; S. Aronowitz, Des Moines; W. C. Buskirk, Omaha; Miss L. Olson, San Francisco.

The growing importance of the position which leading exhibitors throughout the country have been giving to short subjects in the construction of their programs has been an influential factor in bringing about this move on the part of Famous Players-Lasky, it is said. Men like Riesenfeld of New York, Grauman of Los Angeles and Newman of Kansas City, not only have been choosing their short subjects with extreme care but have been featuring them in their advertising and publicity. They have put them up in electric lights in a display often equal to that given the features. These men, in common with hundreds of other successful exhibitors, have proceeded on the theory that the short subjects, be they comedies, scenics, educationals or topicals, can make or mar programs and maintain or destroy house prestige just as certainly as can the features.

Among the short subjects now listed for distribution by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation during the coming year are fifteen new Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies, two new Paramount-DeHaven comedies, twelve Paramount-"Fatty" Arbuckle re-issues, all of two-reel length, and twelve new Paramount-Post Nature Pictures, twelve new Paramount-Burlingham Adventure Pictures, fifty-two new Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures and fifty-two new Paramount Magazines, all single reels. In addition to these subjects which are regularly scheduled, a special drive will be made by the Short Subject Representatives on all the Paramount-Briggs, Paramount-St. John, Paramount-Truex, and Paramount-Flagg comedies and all the hundreds of past releases of the Paramount-Burton Holmes subjects and the Paramount Magazines. These subjects it is felt, have not had adequate representation under the system which has heretofore been in vogue when they were carried merely as a side line, so to speak.

Complete co-operation will be given to these special salesmen by the members of the exploitation field force under Claud Saunders.

Ruth's Publicity Piling Up

Star of "Headin' Home" Winning Unprecedented Space in Dailies

"THE most talked of person in the United States:" That is the reputation ascribed to "Babe" Ruth, the home-run "swatter" of the Yankees, and Kessel & Baumann, who have signed him up for the star role of their photoplay, "Headin' Home," believe that this nation-wide publicity won by "Babe" will go a long way towards making the picture-production a "marvelous box-office attraction." The career of the champion batsman is now being published in leading newspapers of the country, and millions of readers are following the daily installments with greatest interest. Kessel & Baumann submit the following remarks made by George Buchanan Fife concerning the furor that Ruth's performances on the diamond have raised throughout the country:

"The most talked of person on the American Continent to-day is 'Babe' Ruth of the Yankees.

"The thousands who crowd the baseball parks wherever he plays are an almost inconsiderable fraction of those whose interest and allegiance he has won. Every day newspaper readers in all parts of the country rustle to the sporting page in eagerness to know the latest thing the 'Babe' has accomplished, whether he has again broken his own amazing record of home run making.

"The mark which he, at this writing, has hung up for all America to see and to admire—forty-one home runs in a season which still has several weeks to run—surpasses anything that was ever dreamed of in bat prowess.

"Until he hewed the way, the most skilled batsmen in the national game were accounted heroes if they made twenty home runs in a season. And then 'Along Came Ruth' with his powerful back and shoulders—his bat heavier than any hitherto wielded in the game—and his 'batting eye,' which could follow the fastest, snakiest of balls, and in one season the records came crashing down."

"So Long Letty" Near Ready

Christie Practically Finished With Stage Hit

"SO LONG LETTY," the screen version of the stage play, which has been under way for some time in the Christie studios, is now about complete, and will be released in the early fall, according to an announcement by Robertson-Cole, which will distribute the production. "So Long Letty" has been personally directed by Al Christie.

Few screen productions have had a more appealing stage play for their basis, according to the producers, for it was played from coast to coast by several companies, scoring successes in the great cities in all parts of the country, as well as becoming familiar to theatre-goers in even the smallest of towns.

The irresistible quality of "So Long Letty's" humor, and the dramatic strength of its novel story, coupled with the extreme picturesqueness of its locale attracted Al Christie, who determined to make it a super-production, and at once contracted with Morosco for the motion picture rights.

The volume of advance inquiries, which has been flowing into the Robertson-Cole office since it announced its arrangements for the release of "So Long Letty," is taken by that company as prediction of the interest there is in the production among exhibitors. Robertson-Cole feels that "So Long Letty" has many qualities which assure it becoming a big picture.

In summing them up, it holds that the production would win instant success on the strength of its exploitation possibilities alone. For, in addition to the fame which belonged to the spoken version, the exhibitor in this picture has his greatest chance of the year to play on many angles, and draw public attention compellingly to his attraction.

"So Long Letty" is laid in a bungalow colony along the coast of California, which background is no small element in considering the exploitation possibilities of the productions. It tells the story of two young married couples who agreed to trade connubial mates for a week to see if their difficulties could be straightened out, and peace restored. The leading roles in the Christie production, which is to be released through Robertson-Cole, are played by Grace Darmond, T. Roy Barnes, Colleen Moore and Walter Hiers.

In putting "So Long Betty" on the screen, Mr. Christie, tried so far as possible to retain the musical comedy flavor which made the spoken play such a great success.

"The great difficulty," said Mr. Christie, "in making a motion-picture of a musical comedy is in retaining the snappiness or 'pep.' Many who witnessed such productions on the stage and liked them, were usually disappointed in the screen version. This I feel will not be the case with 'So Long Letty.'"

"Stop Thief" Promises to Be Popular

According to a Goldwyn announcement, the early demands for Tom Moore in his latest production, "Stop Thief!" exceeded expectations. Among the first bookings of the picture were the following: Capitol theatre, New York City; Cameraphone theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Ascher's Merrill theatre, Milwaukee; American theatre, Oakland, Calif.; Auditorium theatre, Dayton, O.; Family theatre, Davenport, Iowa; and the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kan.

Keen Interest in Two Climax Productions

The Climax Film Corporation reports that keen interest is being displayed to state-right buyers in its two productions, "Love's Battle," starring Joe Moore and Eileen Sedgwick; and "The Fourth Face," showing an all-star cast. The two pictures are widely different in theme and in type. "Love's Battle" is a semi-Western comedy-drama of five reels. "The Fourth Face" is a mystery story, said to be novel and baffling up to the end.

Many Bid for "Hidden Light"

WITH numerous inviting bids reported to be pouring into his office from all parts of the country and Canada, following the initial announcement of the placing of "The Hidden Light" on the open market, President Sam Zierler of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, who controls the worlds right to that production, is confident he will set a record in the sale of the picture. He has already closed some deals for territories and believes it will be but a matter of only a few weeks before the entire country is sold on the production.

"The number of bids and inquiries for "The Hidden Light" that I have received has borne out my belief that I have the prize independent picture of the year," said President Zierler.

"I viewed the production with a number of representative exhibitors of this territory, in which I have operated as a territorial exchangeman, and they were quick to back me up in my judgment that the picture would be one of the real box-office winners of film history. I am glad that I called in these prominent exhibitors to view the production with me, before purchasing it, as they are among the keenest and shrewdest showmen in the business."

"The Hidden Light" stars Dolores Cassinelli and is declared by Commonwealth to be one of the best stories in which the "cameo girl" has appeared. Miss Cassinelli does excellent work, it is stated, and again demonstrates her ability as an emotional artist. "The Hidden Light" was written by Abraham Schomer, whose play "Today" will be remembered as one of the strongest legitimate offerings seen on Broadway. It won equal success on the screen. In "The Hidden Light," Mr. Schomer again demonstrates his ability as a dramatist. The picture contains love, romance, mystery and the necessary comedy relief. It is said to be a gripping production with no padding and no lull in the action.

"As a territorial operator—my territory being Greater New York, and northern New Jersey—I know the great need for excellent independent pictures and when the opportunitty to purchase the world's rights to "The Hidden Light" presented itself, I lost no time in closing the deal that made the picture my property," said President Zierler.

"This is Miss Cassinelli's first appearance in an open-market production. Her name is well known to picture-goers through her wonderful work in 'The Right to Lie,' 'Tarnished Reputations,' 'The Virtuous Model' and other gripping photo-dramas."

"The Hidden Light" marks the advent of Mr. Zierler in the national independent field. In less than eight months his local exchange has become one of the strongest and most successful independent organizations in the country.

"Mr. Zierler's success has been due to his fair-dealing, his ability to pick box office winners and his wide knowledge of the industry," said a prominent Brooklyn exhibitor, one of the numerous exhibitor-friends of the new state-right market operator. "I predict Mr. Zierler will be equally successful in the national field.

George Walsh, Fox star now working in "Dynamite Allen"

Fox Has Three Year Old Secret

Clyde Cook, Eccentric Comedian, Signed Back in 1917

An honest-to-goodness surprise is promised by William Fox in the introduction of Clyde Cook, he of the india rubber legs and miraculous knees, to picturedom.

The announcement comes not as a promise for the future, but as news of work accomplished. As soon as he was through with his Hippodrome engagement last season, Cook went to Hollywood and began making pictures for William Fox. "Kiss Me Quick," the first of the series, is now ready for the theatres. It may be booked at any Fox exchange for immediate showing.

"'Kiss Me Quick' is altogether new in film comedy," states the Fox office. "So is Clyde Cook. But there is nothing experimental about him. He has proved his worth as a laugh-getter. He proved it years ago as a music hall artist. He proved it again all this summer at Hollywood, where they have had to change the layout of the big stages in order that the actors in serious drama might keep straight faces.

For three years William Fox has kept Clyde Cook under his hat. One rainy evening, three years ago Mr. Fox dropped into a London music hall in a you-can't-make-me-laugh frame of mind. He had the mood of the dramatic critic of the Atlantic Monthly at a musical comedy. He did not even read the bill or the program. But he had not been in the house five minutes before Clyde Cook took up the challenge. And Cook hadn't been on the stage three seconds before Mr. Fox succumbed.

Clyde Cook starred in the Fox Sunshine comedy, "Kiss Me Quick"

Next day Cook signed a contract to make film comedies for William Fox, beginning in the summer of 1920. But it was all kept very dark. Cook had a contract for the New York Hippdrome; that had to come first. Mr. Fox could afford to wait; Cook was unique, and no imitator could steal his style.

Nobody can steal india-rubber legs. In dear ol' Lunnon they used to say that Cook had the most 'strordnry knees in the world. "Early doors" were double-price when he was on the bill; the gallery whistled, and even the stalls stamped sedately. At the New York Hippodrome last season, audiences from every country were doubled up with mirth at the way Cook's arms, legs and body were doubled up with emotion.

Emotion is correct. Clyde Cook is no mere contortionist. Every wriggle is charged with terrific import. Nothing that he does is meaningless. When he wags his left ear, he does it knowingly or wisely or archly or cannily; he never merely wags his ear. When he falls downstairs he does it with gusto, verve, abandon and eclat. It is no use attempting to describe Clyde Cook on roller skates; it must be seen to be believed, and then it is altogether impossible and incredible, these last two words being the highbrow equivalent of "There ain't no such animal."

The only part of Clyde's anatomy that does not gyrate, revolve and convolute is his face. His countenance is as stonily solid as that of the estimable Christopher at Columbus Circle, or that of Benjamin Franklin at Park Row, or that of Rameses, the mummy, in the Metropolitan Museum.

"What a countenance," they used to say in London. As soon as Cook was old enough to have a sense of humor he looked into a mirror and decided that what was there should stay. It made him laugh. Other comedians had tried the serious face idea, and it had worked well. Cook, deciding that his particular face was a cuckoo, joined the old-fashioned serious face school, founded upon the humor of contrast.

Cook belongs also to the clean school of comedians. It is his boast that never in his life has he ever tried to get away with anything that was "off-color" in the slightest. Which means that he is a comedian who knows his business.

"Kiss Me Quick," is a story well suited to Cook. It gives him a chance to prove on the film the title he earned in the music halls—"Clyde Cook, the India-rubber man."

Ruth at Bat in Slow-Motion

Single-Reel Special Released at Once by Educational

"Babe Ruth—how he knocks his home runs," is the subject of a single-reel special, which is just announced for immediate release through Educational Exchanges. Prints have been rushed to all of the exchanges to care for the great volume of bookings that is expected.

Three features are pointed out as making the reel of great value to all theatres: First, by use of the ultra rapid, or slow motion camera it shows in every movement just how Ruth swings to hit the ball and what happens when his bat comes in contact with the sphere. It also shows him hitting in an actual game and warming up as a pitcher, the role he filled before his home-run hitting ability became known

Second, the picture shows by similar slow motion analysis the pitching of Carl Mays, the only underhand twirler in baseball.

Third, the picture was made during an actual game between the Cleveland and New York teams, and shows all the celebrities, including Speaker, Peck, Pratt, Bodie, and the rest.

An added consideration, is said to be that while the greatest interest in the picture will likely be with baseball fans, that there are human elements in the film, and that it is so arranged that it will instruct and please even those ignorant of the national game.

The picture was produced by Science Films, Inc. Educational lays emphasis on the fact that it is neither a drama nor a hodge-podge of extracts from news reels, every foot of it having been made for the specific purpose that it is being presented. It has never been publicly shown.

Educational reports that the film has startled the baseball writers by whom it has been seen and that instructions have been given to all exchanges that immediately on receipt of the print to invite the sporting writers on their territory to view the picture and then to publish their opinions on it.

"Our first two Specials," says an Educational statement, "'Modern Centaurs' and 'The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes,' have established a new record for single reels, but this picture will far surpass them, because it has the added advantage of the greatest possible timeliness. It is only because it is such an illuminating record of the most sensational season baseball ever knew that we are placing emphasis on the fact that this is neither a picture posed for dramatic purposes nor made up of portions of news reels.

"It was made for the purpose of showing Babe Ruth in action and demonstrating by means of the slow motion camera just how he hits his home runs. This is done by the camera during the progress of an actual game between Cleveland and New York.

"During the same afternoon that the Ruth pictures were being made the regular motion picture camera and the slow motion camera also took pictures of Carl Mays, the only underhand twirler in baseball, showing his methods. This was before the regrettable accident that cost Ray Chapman of the Cleveland team his life.

Kelly Deplores Advance Deposits, C. O. D.'s

"Smiling Jim" Kelly declares that United States government statistics prove that ninety per cent of the exhibitors of the country are men that have "financial capital, business acumen and are fully competent to be handled on a credit basis similar to that which exists in other lines of commercial endeavor." In view of this, Mr. Kelly deplores the practice of advance payments, deposits and C. O. D.'s, which he characterizes as an "insult" to the honest, high-class exhibitor. Asserting that his organization is designed to do away with these methods, Mr. Kelly says that it is eventually up to the exhibitor to fight for such recognition that will place him on the same plane of dignity as occupied by other professional men and merchants of his community.

Gorgeous Production Is Seen in Equity Film

Elaborateness is said to mark the new production, starring Clara Kimball Young, from start to finish. "Mid-channel," which is a six-reel adaptation of Arthur Wing Pinero's stage-play of domestic life, is declared by Equity Pictures Corporation to show a most generous expenditure in the way of gorgeous gowns, interior sets and decorations. The outdoor scenes, it is stated, rival the others in wealth and beauty, sunken gardens, richly adorned lawns and magnificent palatial homes being features of the story's background.

Chester Comedy on Third Week of Run

"An Overall Hero," the second of the Chester Comedies released through Educational Film Exchanges is on the third week of its run at Grauman's Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, where it was picked to accompany "Humoresque." According to advices from Sid Grauman he expects the feature and comedy to run for eight or ten weeks, and probably longer, so great are the crowds.

Hubbard Urges Originality

Universal Scenario Chief States That Fans Demand Human Stories

"WRITERS and producers must awaken to the fact," recently remarked Lucien Hubbard, scenario chief at Universal City, "that the public is beginning to demand more and more stories that possess the human flavor as opposed to the highly romantic and obviously tricky plots of many a novel and screen play.

"So far as Universal is concerned, all screen material purchased from now on must be one hundred per cent human. The stories must reflect life as it really is, and not as it might be in one case out of a million. The old situations that have served novelists and playwrights as first aid since time immemorial must give way to incidents from real life and scenes that represent modern conditions as they are known to the many.

"We do not want such situations in our stories as the girl who is forced to make a disagreeable marriage to save the family pride or pocketbook. We are opposed to plots that depend upon secret lockets or hidden birthmarks or the long arms of coincidence, or dual roles or 'dream' endings. In short, we want stories that have their counterparts in every day life, dealing with problems which, though we may not have faced them ourselves, have entered into the lives of some of our neighbors.

"A number of the better authors of today have been writing along the newer lines for some time. Novelists like Fannie Hurst, Edna Ferber, Peter Kyne, H. Hergert Knibbs and Eugene Manlove Rhodes, extract their material from human experience. In the main, however, it is the new author who must be looked forward to for the human stories. The established writer is so often tempted to take one of the old situations with which he is familiar, dress it up in new uniform, and by the cleverness of his pen turn out a readable story. When reduced to actual scenes, however, deprived of the magic of the author's words, the triteness of the plot becomes apparent. The new writer, however, striking out boldly to make a name, will often hit upon an entirely new plot, or upon an original angle of an old situation."

"Fine Feathers" Is Started

Drama-Within-Drama Scenes in Picturization of Walter's Play

INITIAL scenes in "Fine Feathers," Eugene Walter's picturization of his own stage play of the same name, which is to be a forthcoming Metro all-star production, were screened this week at the Comedy theatre in West Forty-first street. The scenes show a typical theatre crowd watching a successful Broadway play.

The play selected for the screen audience to watch was "Paid in Full," Eugene Walter's first big dramatic success. Besides the actors appearing in "Fine Feathers," who are part of the audience in the picture, virtually another cast was required to appear in the opening scenes from "Paid in Full."

In the Metro production of "Fine Feathers," Eugene Palette is playing the lead and Claire Whitney appears as his wife. Thomas W. Ross is seen as the newspaper reporter; Frederick Truesdell as John Brand the financier, and June Elvidge as Mrs. Brand.

The production is being directed by Fred S. Sittenham. Mr. Sittenham has for the opening scenes hundreds of extras employed to represent a fashionable audience at the Comedy theatre, showing them going into the theatre, watching the play, and chatting between the acts.

American Pictures Get Boost in Mexico

Reports from Mexico indicate that the first American industry to be affected favorably by the fall of the Carranza government and the establishment of the de facto regime is motion-pictures. American pictures are in demand all over the country, and the improvement in transportation conditions and the better protection for travelers has boomed the industry to a great extent. Americans coming from Mexico City declare that a great deal of the talk of prejudice against Americans in Mexico is inspired. This seems to be borne out by the popularity of American films in Mexico and especially Mexico City where they are preferred to the products of England and France.

Benj. Hampton Changes Character's Name

In the all-star production of Winston Churchill's novel, "The Dwelling Place of Light," which Hodkinson will soon release, Benjamin B. Hampton calls the author's heroine "Janet Butler" instead of "Janet Bumpus."

It is a matter of audience, according to Mr. Hampton. "Bumpus" is a good old New England name, ideal for the use to which it is put in Mr. Churchill's novel, but "Bumpus" to the screen audience is a comedy name.

Douglas MacLean Stars in "Some Chickens"

"Some Chickens" is announced as the release title of the latest Douglas MacLean starring vehicle to be released as a Paramount-Ince picture. The production was filmed under the title of "Yanconna Yillies," the name of the original story by Herschel S. Hall, which, appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

"Torchy" Series Is Scoring Hit

A "Torchy" on Opening Program of Rivoli at Toledo, O.

S. BARRETT McCORMICK, under whose management the Rivoli theatre in Toledo, O., has just opened, has selected the "Torchy" Comedies as one of the features of his bill which he announces under the general classification of "screen novelties."

According to reports from Educational, this series of comedies made by Master Films, Inc., from the stories by Sewell Ford, and featuring Johnny Hines, are receiving a cordial welcome all over the country. Including in the theatres where they are being shown are such houses as the Rialto, Washington; the Euclid, Cleveland; the Tivoli, San Francisco; the Walnut, Cincinnati; the Strand, Louisville; the entire Chicago chain of Ascher Brothers, the Ruben and Finklestein houses in Minneapolis and St. Paul; the Rowland and Clark houses in Pittsburgh; the Turner and Dahnken circuit, the Butterfield houses through Michigan, and similar circuits in various sections.

"Torchy" Comedies are being released monthly, and three of these have been completed, the second having just been released. The initial one bore simply the name "Torchy" and was accorded a warm reception at the Strand theatres in New York and Brooklyn, but was not released elsewhere until the distribution of the comedies was taken over by Educational Exchanges. "Torchy Comes Through," is the second, and will be followed by "Torchy In High." Production activities are well advanced on the fourth of the series, all of which are being made in New York.

In its advices to exhibitors Educational is pointing out many strong points in selling the pictures to the public. In the first place the Sewell Ford stories have been appearing in leading newspapers of the country for nearly ten years and eight volumes of the stories have been issued. Seven of these have not been published in popular editions by Grosset and Dunlap, and this company has arranged an unusual tie up through dealers which has been started by the distribution of 15,000 window display cards announcing that "Torchy is in the movies" and inviting the public to see these pictures at their theatres.

Because of the fact that these comedies will appear monthly, the book-dealers are not taking the chance of having a number of volumes on their hands, as has been so often the case in connection with features, and the instructions that Educational is giving through its exchanges provides a working plan which is said to be founded solely on good business. In fact, it is said that the plan has appeared so inviting to book dealers that a number of them, including some in New York City, have actually made the displays before the release date.

In addition to the book tie up the "Torchy" stories are now being published in some fifty leading newspapers, many of which, including such papers as the Boston Herald, have accorded full pages to reproducing stills from the comedies.

Several cities have reported that much additional interest in the pictures has been aroused by stating the exact story from which each comedy is made. One leading manager in a mid-western city reported that he believed that every man, woman and child in his section has read the "Torchy" books.

Press books issued by Educational also point out that the red-headed feature is one that will attract unusual attention, not only in large cities where such methods of exploitation are likely to get considerable newspaper space, but also in the smaller cities and neighborhood theatres. In several cities special "Red Head" matinees have been given one morning early in the showing, offering free admission to every youngster with a "Torchy top," and it is said that in every case these announcements have assembled such gatherings that newspaper displays have followed.

Mayo Finishes Production

"Hitchin' Posts" to Be Released by Universal Late in September

FRANK MAYO'S latest picture has just been completed and it is expected to be released the latter part of September. It is "Hitchin' Posts," a story of the early 70's.

In this drama of the south and west Mayo is said to present another of those cleverly drawn character portraits for which he is famous, and which make each of his productions different from any other in which he appears.

"Hitchin' Posts" is the work of the well-known novelist and magazine writer, H. M. Shumate. Jack Ford, who directed Harry Carey in "Marked Men" and Frank Mayo in "The Girl in Number 29" was given the supervision of "Hitchin' Posts" and it is said that he injected in it the same spirit of virile action and breathless suspense that marks all his productions.

Surrounding Mayo are such competent players as Dagmar Godowsky, Beatrice Burnham, J. Farrell McDonald, Joseph Harris, Mark Fenton, Captain Anderson, Duke Lee and Mat Biddulph.

Charles Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Company, left Saturday for Los Angeles after spending ten days in New York consulting with E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., which releases the new two-reel Christie Comedies.

Just before leaving Mr. Christie exhibited a telegram from his brother Al., the director general, which read: "Have just shipped 'A Homespun Hero.' All of us agree that it surpasses 'Petticoats and Pants.'"

Bobby Vernon, who scored such a success in "Petticoats and Pants," is also the featured player in "A Homespun Hero."

Tucker expects to start actual filming on his new production immediately after completing "Ladies Must Live."

Big Drive Planned for "The Riddle: Woman"

Plans for a lavish advertising, exploitation and publicity campaign on "The Riddle: Woman," starring Geraldine Farrar, first production of Associated Exhibitors, to be released through Pathe Exchange, Inc., have been completed by the various Pathe agencies. This drive is to be inaugurated immediately, for the picture has been scheduled to be released on October 3rd.

Every medium for bringing returns to the exhibitor who plays "The Riddle: Woman" will be used by Pathe in its selling-to-the-public campaign, announces that organization. The principal medium will be exceptional newspaper advertising promotion, it is stated, and elaborate bill-boards drawn by some of America's foremost poster artists.

Fox Launches Campaign for "Bride 13"

William Fox has launched an extensive advertising campaign to assist the exhibitors who are contracting for his first serial, "Bride 13." A nation-wide billposting schedule has been adopted. In nine cities of the country a week's newspaper advertising campaign is being planned. The advertising will begin with teaser copy, and as it progresses will unfold all the big points of the serial. Beautiful lobby display photos in rotogravure, 11 inches by 14 inches, have been prepared on each episode. A 36-page plan book, the cover being in two colors, is now being distributed.

"Dynamite" to Precede "Nonsense" on List

Because of some slight delay in receiving some of the accessories, Educational announces that it has shifted the releases of "Nonsense" and "Dynamite," two of the new Mermaid Comedies. "Dynamite," which features Lloyd Hamilton, will go out first and its place on the schedule a month later will be taken by "Nonsense," directed by Jack White and with Jimmie Adams in the leading role.

Lloyd Hamilton scored a great success in "Duck Inn," his first Mermaid, and Educational's production department insists that "Dynamite" is even funnier.

Whittaker Will Write "Kismet" Continuity

Charles Everard Whittaker, Irishman, Fellow of New College, Oxford University, and continuity writer of note, was selected to adapt Edward Knoblock's play of the Orient, "Kismet" in which Otis Skinner will star, by Robertson-Cole. Whittaker's selection was due to his established reputation and his knowledge of matters Oriental.

Extend Runs of "Earthbound"

Goldwyn Picture Will Stay in New York and Chicago

PUBLIC appreciation and support of "Earthbound," Goldwyn's picturization of Basil King's drama of life after death, now finishing its third week at the Astor theatre, New York, and at the Playhouse, Chicago, has caused the engagements of the photoplay at both houses to be extended. The theatres have been packed nightly and comment overheard in the lobbies is said to be enthusiastic, both for the story and the photography.

Exhibitors at large, and particularly foreign exhibitors, will be interested in the comments made on "Earthbound" by the consuls of foreign nations stationed at Los Angeles where a special preview of the picture was given for them.

T. E. Lecayo, consul for Nicaragua wrote: "Gives to the public, to optimists and pessimists alike, the very essence of all that is good, fine and true. I have no doubt but that such a wonderful and instructive picture will be not only admired, but highly appreciated in Latin-American countries."

Dr. Jose S. Saenz, consul for Cuba and Panama, wrote: "'Earthbound,' in my opinion, is an excellent production. Burdened as we are with errors, it gives us hope of attaining perfection, and instead of discouraging, it gives inspiration."

F. J. Zeehandelaar, consul for Holland: "'Earthbound' certainly deserves public patronage, as the characters are of the strongest and the whole play carries with it a moral lesson that must be a strong influence to the general public."

Dr. Luis F. Alvarez, vice-consul for Spain: "A very fine piece of photography, besides being a clever handling of a big subject."

M. F. Rodriguez, consul for Honduras: "I think the production will be a complete success, not only from the photographic standpoint, but from the standpoint of education of the popular masses throughout the world. I also think that it will be a success because it deals with problems which actually are causing unrest throughout the world."

Manuel del Barrio, Judge of the Supreme Court of Cuba: "I must confess that one of the happiest moments I have spent in this wonderful city was when I witnessed the pre-release of your production, 'Earthbound.' In my opinion it is the best picture made by the wonderful producer."

Charles Winsel, vice-consul of Belgium: "We commend highly your wonderful idea to produce pictures that raise the soul of the public to noble thoughts and higher feelings."

C. E. Roberts, consul for Costa Rica: "I think you have finally produced something new and that is, you have combined the acts and thoughts of the people as far as religious matters are concerned."

Industrial Dept. Laying Plans

Universal - Industrial Staff Perfecting Its Program

A STATEMENT received during the week from the industrial department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. informs that the heads of this department are formulating production plans, arranging release schedules and determining on methods of distribution in daily conferences with President Carl Laemmle of Universal, and other chiefs of that organization. As soon as these plans are perfected, a comprehensive announcement, setting forth details of paramount interest, will be published for the trade. The statement from Universal's industrial offices follows:

"With practically the same organization which for the last two years has been responsible for the standard of excellence set by the Industrial Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., this department has outlined a plan of production which should prove of interest to every exhibitor in the country.

"While the plan has not yet been perfected, executives of the Educational and Industrial Departments are conferring daily with Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, and will have a definite policy announcement to make within the near future. Schedules of releases, methods of release and distribution and other details are now being threshed out, and will be explained in full to exhibitors both in America and in foreign countries.

"The Universal Educational Department is producing interesting and entertaining films based upon the most timely industrial features of the day. While many of these productions are of the straight production type, others have been produced for the sole purpose of exhibition in motion picture theatres, and have all the care and pains which go into the making of the larger Universal feature releases.

"The Universal Educational Department has made a new pledge with its clients. It has determined to accept no work which will not be acceptable to any audience in America. This will apply to all future releases, which will mark a new era in the production of these interesting types of films. It has laid its plans on the table for the approval of American industries and manufacturing concerns, and has no doubt but that the attitude will win it the satisfaction of every prospective producer of film.

Along this same line, it will lay a plan on the table for the consideration of motion picture theatre owners and managers all over the country. This plan, which is unique in every respect, is rapidly rounding into shape and will be ready for announcement soon."

Irving Directs Lytell in "Misleading Lady"

Because of the untimely illness of George W. Terwilliger, originally assigned to direct the forthcoming Metro production of "The Misleading Lady," starring Bert Lytell, George Irving has been placed in charge of the picture while Mr. Terwilliger is taking a rest of three weeks or a month in which to recuperate.

Universal City Busy Place

Massive Sets Being Constructed for Big Universal Productions

ACCORDING to a statement from the home offices of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Isadore Bernstein and Irving Thalberg, in accordance with plans laid down by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, previous to his departure for Europe, are very busy supervising a host of details at Universal City. "The building activities now in progress at the Universal studios," says the statement just received, "are remarkable in their scope and variety and indicate that the productions now in the making will be elaborate and complete in every detail."

"For Priscilla Dean's Universal-Jewel feature, 'Outside the Law,' written and directed by Tod Browning, some massive sets are being constructed. There is a San Francisco apartmentt house overlooking the city and the bay, there is a picturesque street in Chinatown and the most magnificient interior setting ever designed. Supporting Miss Dean are Lon Chaney, Wheeler Oakman, E. A. Warren, Ralph Lewis, Wilton Taylor and many others.

"Three acres at Universal City are covered by one massive set representing the Plaza de Monte Carlo, to be used by Von Stroheim in the filming of his current production, 'Foolish Wives,' written by himself, personally directed, and in which he will play the leading heavy role. This set is but one of a score of pretentious backgrounds for the von Stroheim feature erected at Universal City, San Diego, Catalina and other points.

"One of the most interesting sets ever constructed for a motion picture is the voguesque interior designed by Harry Weston for Carmel Myers' current photodrama, "The Gilded Dream," directed by Rollin Sturgeon. Voguesque, as described by Weston, is just a few laps in advance of futuresque, and it aptly fits in with the title of the story."

Ray Picture Has Premiere

"45 Minutes from Broadway" Runs at Strand with Big Presentation

CHARLES RAY is to make his initial appearance in "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," the New York run beginning at the Strand Theatre, Sunday, Aug. 29. Joseph L. Plunkett, general manager of the Strand, has arranged for an elaborate presentation there. He states that the popular melodies of the piece will play an important art in the presentation. In hundreds of theatres in the United States and Canada "So Long Mary," "Mary's a Grand Old Name" and the other songs which contributed to the stage success of the George M. Cohan comedy drama will be heard.

The cost of this single production is said to have been greater than the total of gross receipts of any of Mr. Ray's previous pictures. The presentation will be Mr. Ray's first under his affiliation with Arthur S. Kane and marks Mr. Kane's initial appearance in the role of sponsor. The executive and the star each hailed this union, effected almost immediately after the formation of the Kane enterprise, as the acquisition of a distinct asset to himself, while the industry in general declared it to be a combination of two of its most powerful factors.

"Forty-five Minutes from Broadway" is also Mr. Ray's first independently-produced picture and the first of his works to be released by First National. The production was made in the star's new studios at Hollywood.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Fox Chiefs Praise Feature

Say Shirley Mason's "Merely Mary Ann" Is Best Work Star Has Done

A STATEMENT from the offices of the William Fox Film Corporation announces that "Merely Mary Ann," Shirley Mason's new starring vehicle which is to be released in September, is considered by Fox officials who have seen this picture screened to be the best production yet turned out by this star for William Fox. The statement also advises that a great number of applications have been already made for playing dates on this feature. The Fox statement follows:

"Another 'Her Elephant Man,' is the opinion expressed by many of the exhibitors who already have booked the picture, although Fox officials who recently saw the picture in the projection room are responsible for the statement that 'Merely Mary Ann' will surpass in box office power and artistry Miss Mason's first Fox production.

"Director Edward J. LeSaint, who staged 'Merely Mary Ann,' is said to have done the best work of his long career. Reports from the Fox West Coast studios, where the picture was made, state that Mr. LeSaint spent several weeks in perfecting plans for the staging of the famous Zangwill story before even selecting his cast.

"The story being laid in a section of London, where cheap boarding houses abound, Director LeSaint and his technical expert, David Edwards, combed the market for information concerning the type of these houses.

"That they were successful seems to be the unanimous verdict of the Fox officials at the West Coast studios, who assert that 'Merely Mary Ann' as a screen production should eclipse the record made as a play on the speaking stage when Eleanor Robson appeared as the little boarding house 'slavey'—the role which Shirley Mason enacts in the Fox picture."

Rinehart Picture Is Ready

Goldwyn's "It's a Great Life" Now Available at Exchanges

PRINTS of the latest Goldwyn-Rex Beach Eminent Authors' Production, "It's a great Life," a picturization of Mary Roberts Rinehart's story of boy life at a "prep" school called "The Empire Builders," are now in all twenty-two of the Goldwyn branch exchanges ready to be shown to exhibitors. The first public showing of the picture will be next week at the Capitol theatre, New York, where it opens on Sunday, August 29.

"It's a Great Life" was directed by E. Mason Hopper, the director responsible for the picturization of Both Tarkington's two-reel comedies of boy life known under the collective title of "The Adventures and Emotions of Edgar Pomeroy." In "It's a Great Life" the youths concerned are older by several years than the boys in the Tarkington pictures, but Mr. Hopper has been just as successful in catching the very spirit of youth more occupied with day-dreams of the future—and of girls—than with the every day grind of school life. Exhibitors who found that their patrons liked the Tarkington "Edgar" stories—will, it is said, find the Mary Roberts Rinehart boy story a big money-getter. Goldwyn states that he believes it is the best boy story (concerning boys of "prep" school age) which has ever been translated to the screen.

It is said to be a story which age, maturity, youth and childhood alike will appreciate. It is clean, wholesome fun with the tang and zest of real life to it, expertly and sympathetically directed and produced with every resource that Goldwyn could bring to bear.

Wm. Russell Release Due Late in Aug.

William Russell, the William Fox star, appears in his first production for the new season, "The Man Who Dared," at the end of August. This picture, which has been heralded as something new in western drama, claims Julius G. Furthman as its author. It is described as an absorbing tale of romance and adventure among the California redwoods.

There are bare-fisted fights which make the blood tingle, and strong, virile action dominates the story throughout, according to a statement from the Fox offices. The final climax is thrillingly dramatic, it is stated. William Russell fits naturally into the role of "Big Jim O'Kane," the powerful boss of the lumber camp.

Neal Hart Series Go to First Nat'l Exchange

Announcement was made this week by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit that their Minneapolis exchange had contracted for the entire year's output of Pinnacle Productions, featuring Neal Hart.

J. F. Cubberly, manager of the Minneapolis First National Exchange, closed this deal with Eddy Eckels, general manager of the Independent Films Association, distributors of the Neal Hart Specials.

There will be eight Neal Hart pictures released within the next twelve months—beginning October 1, and continuing at regular six-week intervals thereafter.

Fourth "Edgar" Comedy Now at Exchanges

Goldwyn announces that the fourth picture of the Booth Tarkington "Edgar" series, to be called "Edgar Takes the Cake," is now ready for advance showings in all Goldwyn exchanges. The first New York showing of "Edgar Takes the Cake" was at the Capitol theatre the week of August 22.

"Edgar Takes the Cake" was directed by Mason Litson and Goldwyn officials believe that he has caught the spirit of irresponsible, imaginative, selfish boy nature, so truthfully portrayed by Mr. Tarkington, just as successfully as did E. Mason Hopper who directed the first three Edgar stories.

Publicity Stunt Brings Swarms to Office

A. P. A. for Arrow Film recently sent out the following post-card in connection with a "stunt" for the Arrow release, "Bachelor Apartments"—"Are you looking for an apartment? If so, call at room 403, No. 220 West 42nd St., N. Y. C., and ask to see 'Bachelor Apartments.'"

The dispatch of this to real estate agents as well as state-right buyers caused the Arrow offices to be swamped by "home-hunters," it is stated. A good many failed to see the "joke" when explanations were made. The Arrow agent responsible for the plan was reprimanded for exceeding his orders.

Pathe Acquires New Releases

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., announces three important acquisitions to its list of releases. The first of these is a series of fifteen two-reeler of the Western type, starring Tom Santschi and produced by Cyrus J. Williams. The second is a big Robert Brunton feature, titled "The Devil to Pay." Pathe has also taken over for distribution Jesse D. Hampton's special, "Half a Chance."

Commenting on the acquisition of the short-length Santschi Westerns, Pathe says:

"To fulfill a great popular demand for short-subjects of Western calibre, Pathe Exchange, Inc., has just contracted through Arthur S. Kane, to release fifteen two-reel pictures produced by Cyrus J. Williams and starring Tom Santschi, one of the most popular players appearing on the screen today. Moulded along the lines of the finest Western dramas of full feature length, the Santschi pictures will afford the finest class of vigorous, red-blood, pictorial entertainment. They will be maintained on a high plane and made with all the care and attention to story and general production that would be paid to photoplays of greater length.

"'Beyond the Trail' is to be the first of the series. This production, along with two others, the titles of which are as yet unannounced, has been completed, and was recently reviewed by the Pathe sales committee. In distributing the Young Buffalo Series this Summer, Pathe found an insistent demand for short subject Westerns. Exhibitors everywhere have reaped big box office returns with these attractions and Pathe gives assurance that the Santschi subjects will prove even greater drawing cards.

"In starring Tom Santschi as a Western hero, Cyrus J. Williams selected an ideal type, for there is no player in motion pictures more capable of enacting Western roles than Santschi. For more than six years, this popular player has been featured in characterizations that demanded both strength and ability. His fight with William Farnum in Rex Beach's, 'The Spoilers' back in 1914, still remains the classic screen fistic engagement. In that production, which opened the Strand theatre in New York, Santschi set a standard for strong-man roles that he has maintained to the present. He could scarcely improve upon his efforts in that great picture.

"The noted player's career dates back to the early days of chapter-plays, when he appeared with Kathlyn Williams in 'The Adventures of Kathlyn.' Since then he has had important parts in such noted productions as 'The Garden of Allah' and 'The Still Alarm.'

"His most recent work was in Goldwyn's version of Rex Beach's, 'The North Wind's Malice,' in which he was the featured player. Goldwyn brought Santschi all the way from Los Angeles to Port Henry, New York, to appear in this production. Besides being an exceptionally splendid Western character, Santschi has won a reputation in pictures of the sea. He is an expert swimmer, which, added to his histrionic ability, created a big demand for him in marine productions.

Tom Santshe, signed by Pathe to appear in series of two-reel Westerners

"Cyrus J. Williams, who is producing the Santschi two-reelers, is a prominent Los Angeles business man. He has been associated for some time with motion pictures, and little more than a year ago branched into the production end of it. His first venture was 'Jacques of the Silver North,' in which Mitchell Lewis was notably successful. Mr. Williams has given motion picture production much serious consideration, and, in evolving his idea for a series of two-reel Westerns, made most salient their entertainment value. He purchased stories that had real literary merit, as well as being readily adapted for screening. In 'Beyond the Trail' he picked a human interest document, which, for an initial production of this class could not have been surpassed. It gives Santschi play for strength of character, as well as muscle, and strong filial affection, tenderness and dawning love.

"Pathe will inaugurate the release of these pictures early in the fall, which gives further strength to the already powerful line-up of short subjects arranged by the great distributing organization."

Pathe has issued the following statement in connection with "The Devil to Pay:"

"With the completion in Los Angeles, of Robert Brunton's big special feature, from the novel by Frances Nimmo Greene, 'The Devil to Pay,' announcement is made that the production will be distributed by Pathe Exchanges, Inc. It will be one of a number of powerful box office specials that Pathe will give to exhibitors during the fall and winter months. The Brunton feature has been in work for nearly four months, and according to information received in New York from the West Coast studio, is typical of the best endeavors of Mr. Brunton, who produced for Pathe the Jack Dempsey serial, 'Daredevil Jack.'

"An all-star cast appears in 'The Devil to Pay,' with Roy Stewart, hero of innumerable Western dramas, Cullen Grant, playing the leading male role, and Fritzie Brunette, one of the best known leading women in motion pictures, opposite him, as Dare Keeling. Robert McKim, one of the screen's best known 'heavies,' is seen as Brent Warren. Others in the cast are George Fisher, as Larry Keeling; Evelyn Selbie, as Mrs. Roan; William Marion, as Potter, the detective; Richard Lapan, as Dick Roan.

"Jack Cunningham, one of the most prolific and successful continuity and original story writers in filmdom, wrote the scenario for "The Devil to Pay." Cunningham is director of the Brunton Studios Scenario Department, and has written for such well-known stars as Charles Hutchinson, Frank Keenan, Jack Dempsey, Bessie Barriscale, Dustin Farnum and J. Warren Kerrigan. During the last three years he has completed eighty original scenarios and adaptations. These include fifty-five five-reelers; nineteen features of six reels or more, and six fifteen-episode serials. He wrote the continuity for the 'Daredevil Jack' serial.

"Ernest Warde, for years one of the most successful directors in the United States, made 'The Devil to Pay' for Brunton. Warde, the son of England's famous tragedian, Frederick Warde, was stage director for Richard Mansfield before he began directing for Thanhouser, and in his long career had produced 'A Man Without a Country,' 'The Bells,' 'A Man in the Open,' 'Three X Gordon,' 'Woman and the Beast,' 'My Country,' 'The Woman in White,' 'More Trouble,' 'Sierra Sixties,' 'One Dollar Bid' and 'A Burglar for a Night.'

"'The Devil to Pay' is considered the biggest picture ever made on the Brunton studio lot in Los Angeles. Work on it was started nearly four months ago, and it was not until the first week in August that the last scene was 'shot,' and the cutting process begun."

Concerning the newly acquired Jesse Hampton production, "Half a Chance," Pathe has this to say:

"Pursuant to its promises to exhibitors, to release during the coming fall only the highest class of box office attractions, Pathe announces the taking over for distribution of Jesse D. Hampton's big special 'Half a Chance.' This production was made by Robert Thornby, and surpasses in every respect, the many great contributions this noted director has made to the silent drama. The play is an adaptation of Frederick S. Isham's novel by the same name. This author is one of America's popular novelists with more than a score of best sellers to his creditt.

"Mahlon Hamilton and Lillian Rich are the players featured. Mr. Hamilton for several years has rated with the best leading men in motion pictures. His work with Blanche Sweet in 'The Deadlier Sex' won warm praise for him from Jesse D. Hampton, who, almost immediately, engaged him for the principal male role in 'Half a Chance.'

"Lillian Rich, while virtually a new comer to the screen, has had a most successful career. Her work with H. B. Warner in 'One Hour Before Dawn' and 'Felix O'Day' more than justified the faith placed in her by Mr. Hampton.

Two tense scenes from the William Fox special, "While New York Sleeps"

Miller Picture Proves Hot Weather Hit

Chicago gave a ready welcome to "The Law of the Yukon," the Charles Miller drama of the snow trails, which was presented at the Boston theatre last week for its initial public showing. Lured by the prospect of losing itself in the frosty wilderness of Alaska and by the enthusiastic praise conferred upon the picture by local press critics, perspiring Chicago, en masse, hit the trail for the Boston, filling the theatre to capacity during the entire week of the film's engagement.

Dorothy Dalton Release Set for August 22nd

Only one picture is on the Paramount release schedule for August 22, Dorothy Dalton in "Guilty of Love," but unusual interest attaches to this feature because of the fact that it is Miss Dalton's first production to be released by Paramount since she signed a contract with that organization after severing connec- Knoles directed.

"Guilty of Love" was adapted tions with Thomas H. Ince. Harley from Avery Hopwood's stage play, "This Woman—This Man," which ran on Broadway in 1908.

Ann Forrest Cast for "The Faith Healer"

A shift in casting at the Lasky studio, it has just been announced, results in Ann Forrest, who was scheduled to play a leading part in Cecil B. DeMille's current production, being assigned to the principal feminine role in George Melford's forthcoming production for Paramount. "The Faith Healer," while for Mr. DeMille's Paramount special another actress will be chosen to supply the vacancy.

Tom Mix in "The Untamed," which opened at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, on Sunday, August 22, for a seven-day run, has been playing to tremendous business, according to a statement from the Fox Film office. This is the first Mix picture which William Fox has released in the metropolis which has not had its first run on the Fox circuit of theatres."

Public Greets Fox Special

"While New York Sleeps" Given First Public Run at the Lyric

"WHILE NEW YORK SLEEPS," the William Fox special production which was hailed enthusiastically after the recent advance showing at the Palace theatre on Broadway, is now having its first public run, succeeding William Farnum in "If I Were King," at the Lyric theatre, New York.

In theme and treatment, "While New York Sleeps" offers a striking contrast to "If I Were King." The latter is a romantic drama of the old world and the olden time, while the former is a melodrama of the modern metropolis. The fact that "While New York Sleeps," has been so warmly welcomed proves the wide range of popular taste, so far as theme is concerned, and shows, moreover, that period and subject matter not at all so long as there is a good story well told and well acted.

A rattling good story about brave knights and fair ladies is exactly equal in popular appeal to a rattling good story about Broadway, the Bronx and the East Side.

There are three stories in "While New York Sleeps." They are not episodes, but distinct stories, with distinct sets of characters and altogether different settings. The threads that hold them together are the New York skyline and the fact that the same three players, Estelle Taylor, Marc MacDermott and Harry Sothern, play the principal roles in each.

The first story is one of suburban life. It is described as a gripping domestic drama ending with a great surprise. The second story introduces the audience to Broadway and the Follies with a quick change later to the Palais Royal. The last story has for its locale the lower East Side with crime, passion, mystery and adventure rampant against the background of the Brooklyn Bridge and the East River wharves.

Fall Will Be Busy Season

Present Signs of Great Activity in Hollywood When Autumn Opens

THE arrival in the near future of several prominent English authors at Hollywood, the presence of from ten to fifteen busy directors at the Lasky studios this fall and the prospective activities on big specials of Cecil DeMille, William DeMille and George Melford leads to the conclusion that Famous Players-Lasky's big West Coast producing grounds will be as active as the traditional bee-hive along about the time the autumn season sets in. The statement that follows gives indications of what is in store.

"Cecil B. DeMille is hard at work on one of his most important dramas to date. It has not been named, but it is said that it contains a suspenseful plot, and certainly the cast is an extraordinarily powerful one.

"William DeMille is doing "His Friend and His Wife," scenario by Olga Printzlau from Cosmo Hamilton's story, and when this is completed will immediately begin work on another important story.

"George Melford has completed his production of 'The Jucklins' and will next do 'The Faith Healer.'

"Wallace Reid, directed by James Cruze, will soon complete 'Always Audacious' and then start on 'Free Air,' with the same director.

"Thomas Meighan begins at once on his new starring vehicle 'Easy Street,' directed by Tom Forman.

"Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle is doing 'Brewster's Millions' and when that is completed will have a new and important comedy to do. Joseph Henabery is his director.

"With the various improvements, the perfection of each department, and the other features which make for the best picture production, the Lasky studio evidences the advantages of an organization that is as near perfect as it is possible to make an institution of this kind."

Singerman Heads Universal Department

Important changes in the personnel at the Universal Home Office have just been announced, the principal one of which is the appointment of Sydney Singerman as the head of the Program and Film Editing Department. He takes the place made vacant by Edward M. Roskam, who recently resigned to become the Film Editor, title writer and head of the program department of the Fine Arts Pictures, Inc.

Another recent acquisition in the Universal Home Office is that of a Manager of Supplies. The appointee is F. W. Talbert, who formerly was Universal's Traveling Auditor for Foreign Exchanges.

J. F. Goss Has Franchise for Ogden, Utah

J. F. Goss, manager of the Orpheum theatre, has taken the sub-franchise of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for the Ogden, Utah, territory and for the purpose of showing the pictures is to abandon vaudeville for the first four nights of every week at the theatre. The last three nights will still be devoted to vaudeville programs, but beginning Sunday night the First National attractions will be shown exclusive of any vaudeville for four days' runs.

Pathe Comedian a Box-Office Rescu r

Harold Lloyd is the lifesaver of the box office, according to Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Hamilton Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Ever since Lloyd inaugurated his two-reel comedy specials, Mr. Meyer has been billing him heavily. Two weeks ago the Hamilton Theatre Manager "played the most expensive, most widely advertised picture that we have ever had since the house opened," to use Mr. Meyer's words. It failed to stand up. Mr. Meyer had to bring back "Haunted Spooks" to the Hamilton. The rescue stunt lasted three more days, and the box office was buoyed up sufficiently.

Buck Jones Appears in "Firebrand Trevison"

William Fox reports that Buck Jones's first picture for the new season is a strong one. It is "Firebrand Trevison" from the pen of Charles Alden Seltzer, well known as a contributor to Fox entertainments. Buck Jones appears to have rolled the thrills and daring stunts of western thrillers into this production, which starts off with action and a punch, and ends with a smashing, crashing stunt and a most sensational and realistic fight scene.

Britisher Gives Boost to U. S. Exhibitors

Here's what Frederick Martin, advertising manager for the Famous Players-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., thinks of the American exhibitor:

"A thing that particularly impressed me during my recent tour of America was the enthusiasm of the up-to-date exhibitor. To him the purveying of motion pictures is no mere side line, easy money venture or bridge to carry him over to something better. I found him glad to be in the business and bent upon giving it some sort of an attractive turn which would make his name familiar to all the other exhibitors in the United States."

Oklahoma City Holds Universal Week

The moving picture theatres in Oklahoma City recently held a Universal Picture Week in which Universal-Jewel Productions, features comedies, Western, and other short stuff made up the bulk of their programs for practically every day in the week.

The Special Week was arranged by Sam Benjamin, Universal's local Exchange Manager, who had hearty cooperation from Morris Lowenstein of the Majestic, Bob Hutchison, of the Folly, Tom Boland, of the Empress, and the manager of the other theatres. The week was hearalded by a large ad in the local papers containing the program and announcement of all the theatres.

Exchanges Report Big Demand

Paramount Week Has Raised Bookings to High Mark

A STATEMENT issued from the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation describes the elaborate preparations being made at its laboratories and exchanges to meet the extraordinary demand for Paramount productions that the corporation anticipates will arise during the coming "Paramount Week," from September 5th to the 11th inclusive. According to Al Lichtman, general-manager of the department of distribution, every print of Paramount pictures available in the clearing-house laboratories and exchanges will be used for exhibition during this third annual Paramount Week. The statement follows:

"Some semblance of the record, which it is reasonably certain will be established, can be estimated from the fact that the Famous Players-Lasky laboratories have been working day and night shifts to complete enough prints to accommodate all exhibitors during this week. Even the printing of these additional current pictures, however, will be unable to meet the demand and as a result exchanges are reporting the booking of pictures several months old on the part of exhibitors who are anxious to participate in the record breaking advertising and publicity coincident with a National Paramount Week.

"That the wastage of available Paramount productions can be entirely eliminated this year, there has been established a film clearing department by which exchanges having any surplus pictures available for this week will report the prints to the home office which in turn will arrange to place, them at the disposal of an exchange having an excess demand for those particular Paramount productions.

"Exhibitors who failed to arrange for Paramount productions during the early stages of the campaign but who desire the benefits of Paramount week are in many instances re-booking productions previously shown at their houses, in order to reap the profit from the newspaper space to be devoted to Paramount theatres.

"An example illustrative of the shortage of film developing at the exchanges is instanced in the case of W. F. Smith, district manager at the Philadelphia exchange, who sent in a wire to the home office for 12 additional films from the laboratory which he was previously unable to supply to exhibitors.

"A notable feature of the campaign is the tendency of exhibitors this year to celebrate Paramount week with all-Paramount programs. Instead of using simply a Paramount feature, as was noticeable in the bookings in previous years, theatres are demanding Paramount short subjects such as the Paramount Magazine, Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, Paramount - Mack Sennett Comedies, Paramount - Arbuckle Comedies, Paramount - Burlingham adventure Pictures and Paramount-Carter DeHaven Comedies.

"Owing to the heavy bookings and the pressure of work in compiling records it will be several weeks after the completion of the campaign before the prize winning exchanges can be announced. Records received up to the present week show that San Francisco still holds the lead for the first prize. Other exchanges stand in the following order: Seattle, Philadelphia and Los Angeles. A noteworthy newcomer among the leaders is the New Haven Exchange which, in the past week, has jumped from fifteenth place to fifth."

Big Houses Engage Serials

First-Run Theatres in Texas Bill Chapter-Pictures Issued by Pathe

EVIDENCE of the increasing demand for chapter-pictures by first-run houses in the United States is contained in the statement just issued by the Pathe, Incorporated, home-office, in which it is announced that the George B. Seitz serial, "Pirate Gold," has been booked by James Quinn for his Rialto theatre in El Paso; while "Pirate Gold" and "The Third Eye" have been engaged for the "Hippodrome at Dallas, Tex., and for the Princess at San Antonio, Tex. The Pathe statement is submitted as follows:

"The pretentious serial program to which Pathe has committed itself for the year of 1920-1921 has been started off in auspicious manner with the release on August 15 of 'Pirate Gold.' This ten episode serial, starring George B. Seitz with Marguerite Courtot has gained bookings in many of the foremost theatres of the country, as evidenced recently by the announcement of James C. Quinn, owner-manager of several theatres, that 'Pirate Gold' would play his Rialto theatre in El Paso, widely reputed the finest house in Texas and generally classed among the best motion picture theatres in the United States.

"In the same territory 'Pirate Gold' and 'The Third Eye' have been announced as the attraction by the Hippodrome, Dallas, Tex., for a three-day run, and the Princess theatre, San Antonio, Tex., for three days. These two houses of the Southern Enterprise, are of the first-run, big feature type. In both serials are appearing on the programs for the first time.

Six Pictures in Production

Bahr Comedy, "The Concert," Begun; "The Great Lover" Is Completed

SIX new pictures are this week in production at the Culver City studios of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.. Victor Schertzinger has been assigned to make an all star production of Herman Bahr's famous spoken-comedy, "The Concert," in which Leo Ditrichstein starred for several seasons under the management of David Belasco. Mr. Schertzinger was available for this production because Mabel Normand, all of whose Goldwyn pictures he has directed, has gone East for a vacation, her latest picture, "Head Over Heels," from Mitzi Hajos' successful musical comedy, having been completed last week.

Director Frank Lloyd has just completed an all-star production of "The Great Lover" by Leo Ditrichstein and Frederick and Fanny Lock Hatton. His work on it is believed at the studio to equal, and in some respects surpass his sympathetic and imaginative direction of "Madame X" with Pauline Frederick in the stellar role.

Sydney Ainsworth, who gave such a graphic portrayal of the wastrel blackmailer in support of Pauline Frederick in "Madame X," has been added to the cast of "Canavan" which will serve as the genial Tom Moore's next stellar vehicle. E. Mason Hopper, who has been directing the Booth Tarkington two-reel Edgar comedies, has been assigned to direct Moore in this picture.

"Excellent progress" is reported from San Francisco on Will Rogers' "The Guile of Women." Mason Litson is "shooting" jungle scenes for "An African Interlude," one of the Tarkington "Edgar Series." "Bunty Pulls the String" will be Reginald Barker's next contribution. Rupert Hughes has arrived at the Goldwyn Coast studios to confer with the continuity writers regarding the screen adaptation of his latest original story for the screen.

New "Set" System Started

Metro Inaugurates Scientific Methods in New York Studios

A NEW system of handling sets at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street has been installed by Maxwell Karker, director general in charge of all production there. The system consists of a centralization of method in which the technical art director, Lester G. Vermilyea, works directly in accord with Arthur J. Zellner, Mr. Karger's assistant, from the time the idea is completed in scenario form to its projection upon plan sheets that indicate the scenes of the story.

All theory and conjecture are said to be eliminated in this new system of handling sets in the Metro studios and the whole business of building sets reduced, so far as the working plans are concerned, to an exact science.

This system has been found in recent cases to work out excellently with the productions now under preparation at the studios, including "Polly With a Past," the Belasco stage success by George Middleton and Guy Bolton, in which Ina Claire is the star, and "The Misleading Lady" starring Bert Lytell. In both instances the new and improved method of handling the sets from the time of the completion of the 'script was found to yield most excellent results, and will be a part of the Metro system at the New York studios from this time on.

Randolph Lewis Does Story

Author of "Forbidden Valley" Made by Blackton for Release by Pathe

RANDOLPH LEWIS, who for more than two years has directed the publicity of Pathe Exchange, Inc., comes to the front again as author of a big photo-dramatic production, in J. Stuart Blackton's "Forbidden Valley." This play has just been scheduled by Pathe, as an October release. It is a story of the Kentucky Hills, starring Bruce Gordon, and May McAvoy, together with Warren Chandler and Eulalie Jensen.

Until he assumed the duties of publicity manager of Pathe, which demanded his entire attention, Mr. Lewis was regarded as one of the most capable authors and continuity-writers in motion picture circles. Entering the industry from a long and varied experience in the newspaper field, Mr. Lewis went to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry as its first publicity director and did notable work in the national campaign against censorship. He was director of national publicity for Fox, and in addition, gave to that concern these four conspicuous screen creations: "Miss U. S. A.," starring June Caprice; "The Kid is Clever," starring George Walsh; "A Rich Man's Plaything," a vehicle for Valeska Suratt; and "The Soul of Satan," a picture in which Gladys Brockwell scored her greatest hit, and which had to be re-issued.

The continuity of Willard Mack's "The Hell Cat," a Geraldine Farrar production, was the work of Mr. Lewis, and at the Goldwyn studios he was the literary co-oworker of Mr. Mack. He also wrote the scenario for George Scarborough's "Hoagland, Secret Service."

Randolph Lewis is one of the pioneer newspapermen scenario writers who made good. His long experience in the Fourth Estate particularly qualified him for motion picture writing. He was for years Sunday editor of the New York Herald when that newspaper was at the heighth of its power and selected its best fiction, including Jack London's "Burning Daylight," recently given to the screen and notable works of Rider Haggard, Joseph Conrad, Maurice Hewlett and other distinguished writers with whom Mr. Lewis enjoys personal friendship. Later he was one of the feature writers of the Newspaper Feature Service known the world over. He also won fame with his recent book, "Look Up," which Thomas Dixon described as "a genuine contribution to the literature of inspiration."

"Iris" Nearing Completion

Pinero Drama, Starring Pauline Frederick, Said to Have Big Sets

Pauline Frederick, starring in "Iris," Robertson-Cole

THE screen adaptation of "Iris," Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's celebrated play illustrating the magnificence of a true woman's love, with Pauline Frederick in the leading role, is nearing completion, according to word received at the Robertson-Cole home office from the West Coast studios this week.

Selected because of the importance of its principal role, "Iris," when ready for distribution, is expected by Robertson-Cole to furnish the exhibitor an attraction which will rank with the best offerings of the season. Showings of the footage already taken display the fact that Miss Frederick has captured for the screen all of the fine shadings of emotions demanded.

The producers, realizing the possibilities of the scenic effects of "Iris," state that they left no stone unturned to make the story as vivid and as realistic as possible by including in the photo-play every detail which Pinero thought absolutely essential to the effectiveness of his story. Three of the sets specially constructed for "Iris" have called forth the admiration of everyone who has seen them, a statement from the studio reads: "The most magnificent in point of beauty, is that which shows an Italian villa in the heart of the Alps. Director Otto, finding that a villa of the sort described in the Pinero script was unobtainable immediately proceeded to have one built according to the description.

Albert S. Kidder in New York

Charles Ray Executive Here for Conference With Arthur Kane

ALBERT S. KIDDER, JR., assistant general-manager of the Charles Ray Productions, Inc., has arrived in New York from the Coast and will remain in the city for several days during which time he will confer with Arthur S. Kane, president of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation. Following his arrival in the metropolis, Mr. Kidder issued a lengthy statement setting forth his opinions on the advances already realized by the motion-picture and the still further progress to be made by the picture in response to demands of a more exacting public.

"The future is bright with promise, but it is fraught also with with tremendous responsibilities," said Mr. Kidder. "A wonderful opportunity is ahead for everyone who is engaged in making big pictures—big not only in a financial outlay and elaborateness of production, but, more particularly, in the careful selection of the material from which such productions shall be made, and the giving of adequate and earnest consideration to its proper adaptation for the screen, or, to put it tersely—story values.

"I want to stress that idea of story value, because in my belief, it is of tremendous importance. The plain fact is that the picture-loving public has been educated to the point where it is demanding only the best—the best artists in picturizations of the best literary works—and it is about to make that demand felt, with far-reaching consequences.

"With the weeding-out of the inferior, there will remain ample room at the top of the ladder for the top-notch product. Many of the unworthy—producers, players, pictures—will be forced from the industry. The very fact that the public will tolerate only the best speaks volumes for the spirit of progress and advancement.

"It would be difficult to say which has done the more to elevate the standard—the pictures or the public. Naturally, the more and better the pictures shown, the greater has been the popular clamor for others of the same character.

"Again, the old slapstick, rough-house, so-called picture, is losing vogue rapidly. The motion picture theatre has become the American family's club-house. No clean-minded man would any more think of taking his children to see a film on which the vulgar, the suggestive, even the merely unwholesome is featured, than of placing a degrading literary work on his library table.

"The motion picture has come to be recognized as an educator of the masses, which is another reason for the demand that it present what is true—what is good and wholesome, in other words. As to its possibilities as an instructor in the schoolroom, in the medical college, in the laboratory, the surface has merely been scratched. I am speaking only of the picture shown in the theatre and I repeat that there is no more gratifying sign of the times than this spontaneous public demand for the very best obtainable."

Metro Has Tourneur Picture

"The Great Redeemer" Has Important Place on Fall Schedule

METRO Pictures Corporation announces as among the most important of its early releases the Maurice Tourneur super feature, "The Great Redeemer" a six-part special production enacted by a distinguished cast that includes House Peters and Marjorie Daw. This production, according to the view of Metro officials, should prove a strong attraction for the coming season.

"The Great Redeemer," conceived and written in story form by H. H. Van Loan, author of "The Virgin of Stamboul," for Priscilla Dean, "The New Moon," for Norma Talmadge, "Vive la France" for Dorothy Dalton, and other noteworthy screen successes, is said to be a drama that breathes the spirit of the rugged west; but running through it is a striking allegorical counterplot which tells in poignant fashion of the regeneration of a desperado and "stick-up" man and his love for a beautiful innocent girl.

Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, was so impressed by the picture at the private showing which resulted in Metro taking over the distribution of the Tourneur Production, he expressed his firm conviction that it will be one of the biggest money-makers ever handled by the Metro organization.

"That is one of the year's outstandingly great productions," said the Metro chief executive. "We can offer it to exhibitors with the confident assurance that it will not only fill their houses, but will make them new friends and patrons. Intensely dramatic and sweeping in its climaxes, 'The Great Redeemer' carries a vital message as well. It is a picture that persons of all ages and conditions of life may well see with profit to themselves. It has the greatest 'punch' I have noticed in a picture for many a day."

Not only Mr. Rowland, but every other Metro official and all of the company's exchange managers and district managers passed commendatory verdicts on "The Great Redeemer." It was shown privately on the screen at the Hotel Astor during the annual convention of the Metro district and branch managers and evoked the liveliest enthusiasm.

House Peters, the idol of countless film followers, has the rugged role of Dan Malloy, the bandit. Marjorie Daw appears as the girl. The sheriff is played by Jack MacDonald and Joseph Singleton contributes a powerful characterization as a condemned murderer whom Dan meets during his improvement.

Jack Gilbert and Jules Furthman put Mr. Van Loan's original story into continuity form. The production was directed by Clarence Brown under the personal supervision of Maurice Tourneur. It was photographed by Charles J. Van Enger, with special scenic effects by Floyd Mueller. The production is said to be distinguished by a number of remarkable motion camera "shots" with unusual lighting effects and double exposures.

Release of "The Great Redeemer" is tentatively set for the early part of October.

R.S. Shrader Sees Prosperity

Pathe District Manager Expects Flourishing Year for Exhibitors

R. S. SHRADER, Central West District Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., on his recent visit to the Pathe Home Office in New York, confirmed the reports from all parts of the country that the motion picture exhibitor continues to enjoy an era of prosperity and that all signs point to a bigger and more flourishing period the coming year than has ever been known in the film business.

The branches in Mr. Shrader's territory are Indianapolis, Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines, Milwaukee and Detroit. He has been a member of the Pathe organization for the last four years. Before becoming district manager, Mr. Shrader was manager of the Pittsburgh branch.

"The motion picture theatre," said Mr. Shrader, "is one of the very few business institutions in this country that has not suffered a depression recently. The general let-down in the majority of business lines has not been felt in any way by the exhibitors of the Central West.

"Plans, initiated early in the year, are being carried forward and theatres are building at an unprecedented rate. The new houses are all of a very pretentious sort. They are being constructed with a view to accommodate more people, and the equipment is all ultra-modern. While, from a standpoint of comfort, they represent a big advance over the average theatre of even a year ago.

Good Cast in "Roman Candles"

J. Frank Glendon Cast for Lead; Release Due in October

A FORMIDABLE array of talent is reported to have been engaged by Master Pictures, Inc., to support J. Frank Glendon in "Roman Candles," his first starring vehicle for the new company. The following statement has been issued by Master Pictures regarding its initial production:

"After a varied career on the legitimate stage, playing in grand opera, dramatic productions and vaudeville, Mr. Glendon entered pictures with the old Lubin company of Philadelphia. His first big feature was 'The Salamander,' a B. S. Moss production. Later he was with Kalem, Metro, Gaumont and Fox and played opposite the best known stars of those companies. For several years he was one of Vitagraph's leading players and was co-starred with Hedda Nova in 'By the World Forgot,' 'The Changing Woman' and 'The Woman in the Web,' and with Gladys Leslie in 'The Wooing of Princess Pat.' His most recent successes were opposite Clara Kimball Young in 'For the Soul of Raphael,' 'The Mid Channel' and Miss Young's last picture the title of which has not been announced.

"Jack Pratt, who is directing 'Roman Candles' as well as playing the heavy, is in point of service one of the oldest directors of feature photoplays in the business.

"Mr. Platt, before his picture debut, also had a long stage-experience and has a record of 11 consecutive years, playing leads on Broadway with such well-known stars as Eddie Foy, Louise Gunning, Raymond Hitchcock, Trixie Friganza, Sam Bernard, Blanche Ring, and McIntyre and Heath. He played his first part before the camera in the U. S. Navy's big production of 'Victory,' which was filmed in Cuba. Later he played important roles in Imp and Reliance, two-reelers, after which he became first assistant to Augustus Thomas with the All-Star Feature Company. He was soon promoted to director and put in charge of production of that company's original screen versions of 'Arizona,' 'Soldiers of Fortune,' 'Shore Acres' and 'Paid in Full.'

"Mr. Pratt then organized the E. K. Lincoln players and directed Lincoln in 'The Fighting Chance' 'The Girl from Alaska' and 'Brother's Love.' He next was engaged by Lubin as director for VSLE features, starring his wife, Betty Price and Richard Buehler.

"Hector Sarno who portrays the principal character part will be especially remembered for his splendid acting in 'The Right to Happiness' with Dorothy Phillips, Rex Beach's 'The Silver Horde' and Edwin Carewe's 'Rio Grande.'

"The juvenile lead is well taken care of by Sydney D'albrook, who began his picture career under D. W. Griffith and has played with many prominent stars including Mitchell Lewis, Viola Dana, Elsie Ferguson, Marguerite Clark and Harry Morey, besides being featured in Vitagraph's 'The Mightier Strength.'

"Opposite Mr. Glendon in the leading female role is Miss Phalba Morgan, a newcomer to the screen, but a girl of remarkable beauty and one who is destined to meet with strong public favor.

"Others in the cast are Mechtilde Price, Lola Smith, Wm. Connant, Jack Waldermeyer and Teddy the world-famous canine who possesses uncanny human instincts and materially adds to any picture in which he appears.

"'Roman Candles' is nearing completion and will be released about the first of October."

Bessie Love in Suitable Role

THE announcement recently made by Federated Film Exchanges to the effect that that organization had secured for distribution the Andrew J. Callaghan productions starring Bessie Love, has been augmented by several additional reports published by the Federated offices during the current week. These supplementary statements confirm the early report of Federated's distribution on Miss Love's series of stellar vehicles for Andrew J. Callaghan and add further illuminating details regarding the initial production of this series, which is titled "Bonnie May."

"'Bonnie May' the first picture in which Miss Love appears for the Federated Film Exchanges," says one of these statements from the Federated's offices, "might have been written to order for this charming little star. Although this was not the case, the story having been taken from the novel of the same name by Louis Dodge, it is extremely doubtful if it would have been possible to secure a story better fitted to the piquant charm and vivid personality of this dainty little actress. 'Bonnie May' is the story of a little girl who has been brought up on the atmosphere of the theatre, never having known a parent's care. Her father and mother were actors, and while she was still a baby, they were killed in a railroad wreck. Bonnie May was raised in the theatre and was therefore a peculiar combination of wholesome unspoiled girlhood bubbling over with youth and good spirits and a worldly wisdom acquired through having to fight life's battles for herself ever since she could remember. It is said by those who have seen 'Bonnie May' that this is without a doubt the greatest part Miss Love has ever had in her career as an actress, and that is saying a great deal.

"In a letter received from the author of 'Bonnie May' he expressed his pleasure in the selection of Miss Love for the part of Bonnie May, stating that when he wrote the novel he did not have any particular person in mind but that Bonnie May was simply the creation of his mind. In writing her into the book he painted the picture of a girl who was inherently good, full of the joy of living and to whom life was a game in spite of its often bitter struggle for existence which is inevitably the lot of one who has to earn her own living from her earliest days in the precarious field of theatricals."

A paragraph from Mr. Dodge's letter, as submitted by Federated Film Exchanges, follows:

"It seems to be an entirely happy

Bessie Love, in a scene from her first Federated production, "Bonnie May" inspiration which brought Miss Bessie Love and Bonnie May together. While I had never seen the beautiful and intelligent work of Miss Love at the time I wrote my book, it might almost seem that she had supplied the model for my study. I predict that when Miss Love portrays the character, she will—to paraphrase an old anecdote —not merely enact, but actually be, Bonnie May. It will very certainly be a triumph for Bonnie May. I hope also it will be a triumph for Bessie Love."

Federated Film Exchanges has the following to say about the underlying policy of the Andrew J. Callaghan Producing Company in selecting vehicles for Miss Love:

"The policy of the Andrew J. Callaghan Producing Company who is making the Bessie Love pictures which are released by the Federated Exchanges is to supply their star with stories by well known authors. It is also their belief that these stories should have first appeared novelized and this is the plan that is being followed out in making all of the Bessie Love pictures.

"As an instance of this, the first two pictures in which Miss Love stars may be cited. 'Bonnie May' Miss Love's first vehicle is from the pen of Louis Dodge and was published by Chas. Scribner's Sons and her second production was made from 'The Midlanders' a novel by Chas. Tenney Jackson, published by Bobbs-Merrill Company.

"Mr. Callaghan and his associates are at present going over a number of novels for the purpose of selecting Miss Love's third vehicle, and it is promised that she will be given a story from the pen of a well known author."

Has Unusual Photography

Striking Views in "The Invisible Ray" Causes Favorable Comment

REPORTS from state-right buyers bring out new angles of interest, each week, regarding "The Invisible Ray," says the Joan Film Sales Company. The first week interest centered on the gripping plot, which breaks the customary serial rule of diminishing interest. "Another week passed," continues the statement, "and the subject of enthusiasm shifted to the performance of the stars Ruth Clifford and Jack Sherill, both of whom combine dramatic ability with physical bravery and both of whom are the survivors of a staggering number of daring feats."

"And this week's item of approval hinges on the original photography and the camera stunts that have been introduced in this thriller. One of the photographic feats occurs in the fourth episode, when a crystal gazer peers into a glass globe and describes her vision to the spectators. As she tells what she beholds, the vision is illustrated in the crystal ball, and six characters, in miniature, are seen acting in accordance with her prophecy, and moving about in the depths of the crystal. The crystal is one foot in diameter, so that the difficulty of showing six persons clearly in that small space can readily be appreciated.

"Another example of the photographic wizardry appears in the fifth episode, where "The Ferret," a character portrayed remarkably by the famous Sidney Bracy, clutching the key to the 'Invisible Ray' enters a chamber where all the personages of the story are seated, turns off the light and flashes the rays emanating from the key. The result of the utter darkness is that every one in the room appears as a skeleton, and while the characters move about naturally, only their skeleton forms are visible. The effect is weird and electrifying."

Scene from First Episode of "Thunderbolt Jack"—Arrow Film Serial releases

Foreign Contract Closed

Arrow Sells Far East Rights of "Thunderbolt Jack" to Pearson Co.

IN addition to an announcement or the tentaive release date of the serial "Thunderbolt Jack," Arrow announced this week the closing of a big foreign contract.

The Arrow contract for the distribution of "Thunderbolt Jack" in the Far East was closed with J. Pearson & Company of Bombay, India. Some idea of the territories covered in this one contract is noted in the list of countries taken in under the head of the Far East. They are India, Burma, Ceylon, Strait Settlements, Duth East Indies, Federated Malay States, Siam, China, Japan, Philippine Islands, and Mesopotamia.

In addition to this foreign sale the Arrow announcement states that within the past week three other contracts on this serial were closed. Western Missouri and Kansas were sold to the Federated Film Exchanges of Missouri, with headquarters in Kansas City. While in New York this week R. C. Price, of the Hygrade Picture Company of Charlotte, North Carolina, contracted for the serial in North and South Carolina.

"Thunderbolt Jack" is being produced by the Berwilla Film Corporation and is being directed by Murdock MacQuarrie. Joe Brandt is supervising the production. Marin Sais plays opposite Jack Hoxie.

Hart Arrouses Comment

Exhibitors Inquire Concerning "Hell's Oasis," Pinnacle Picture

AS an indication of the interest among theatre men generally concerning the forthcoming release of Neal Hart's first special production for Pinnacle Productions, Inc., letters are pouring into the Chicago offices of the Independent Films Association from exhibitors all over the country.

"Hell's Oasis" is the first release and is scheduled for October 1. The recent news advertising is what accounts for the inquiries from theatres, according to Eddy Eckels, general manager of the Independent Films Association, through which distribution will be handled.

"Of course we do not handle the Neal Hart films direct with the theatres," said Mr. Eckels. "But we are mighty glad to get these exhibitor letters for the reason that we do deal directly with the theatres in the various sections of the country in helping them exploit our product.

"Our business is with important independent dealers in each exchange territory, and these independent exchanges will attend to the booking of theatres and supplying posters, photos and other accessories. Our advertising in the News has been aimed at these dealers. But as I say, we are always glad to hear from the theatre men.

"Their interest in Neal Hart, in my opinion, shows a decided trend of public demand toward the type of star and story they get in "Hell's Oasis." Neal is a great big wholesome he-American, and I do not hesitate to predict that he will be swept into dominating popularity with the release of this first big special.

Stage Prestige Big Factor

Edith Taliaferro's Success on "Legit" Aids "Keep to the Right"

ACCORDING to a statement from the offices of the Equity Pictures Corporation, the reputation of Edith Taliaferro as "a leading Broadway star" is proving of immense value in recommending her starring vehicle, "Keep to the Right," to state-right buyers throughout the country. "From all indications," says the statement from the Equity's headquarters, "it seems that the fame of a leading feminine light of the Gay White Way echoes to the remotest corners of the country. Probably Edith Taliaferro herself does not suspect the far-reaching reputation she has acquired in the course of her many years as an actress of the legitimate stage. The numerous inquiries that are received from all parts at the Equity offices would surprise her.

"Probably the reputation of this sterling actress, which is nation-wide, is due to the extensive travels she has made in repertoire—her tours covering the continent. Edith Taliaferro, it has been estimated, is one of the most-widely travelled performers of the stage today, her career being a succession of triumphs. Her last success as the leading lady in 'Please Get Married' is in itself enough to establish her national popularity. This point was emphasized by several states-rights men, and is one that is likely to be overlooked.

"The personal appearance of a screen star in a legitimate play leaves an impression and a demand with local 'fans' that can be turned into dollars and cents by the states-rights buyer. There is practically no state in the union in which Edith Taliaferro has not appeared at some time and carried away a lingering reputation.

"It is therefore natural to expect that her screen appearance will be hailed throughout the country by local admirers who remember her appearance in their home cities."

High Salaries Are Defended

Sherrill States Star's Salary Is Governed by Law of Business

SINCE the announcement in the public press of the acquisition of Lillian Gish as a star, by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, and of the salary paid her in excess of $500,000 a year, William L. Sherrill, president of that company, has received a mass of letters from film fans throughout the United States, most of them expressing surprise, and some of them complaint at the fact that any motion picture star, regardless of her popularity should receive for her services the extraordinary sum of a half million dollars a year.

Mr. Sherill answered by saying that the value to be placed upon the services of a motion picture star is governed by the same principle in effect controlling the value to be placed upon any individual who commands a particular following in his line. If a salesman can bring to his house or firm an assured clientele, he would receive remuneration in proportion to the trade that he commands; so too with a motion picture star.

Miss Gish is said to have a certain defined following of motion picture patrons, who are admirers of her art, and will patronize the theatres if a production in which she is appearing is announced, regardless of the production itself. This, of course, is based upon two primary elements: first, that she has appeared only in worth-while attractions, and second, that her ability as a motion picture actress is unique, able and satisfying.

Plan Prologues for Serial

Pictorial Synopsis of Preceding High-Spots for "Tarzan" Picture

IN a statement from the offices of David P. Howells the announcement is made that an innovation in the way of prologues will be seen when the big special serial, "The Son of Tarzan," now being produced by The National Film Corporation, by Harry Revier, reaches the screen, it is stated.

Each episode or release of the serial will be introduced by a pictorial synopsis of the important development in the preceding chapters. This, it is claimed, will make it possible for a person who has not witnessed the beginning of the serial to pick up the story without difficulty and enjoy episode three or five or nine as thoroughly as though he or she had followed "The Son of Tarzan" from the beginning.

The photodrama, by Roy Somerville, is from the book of the same name, by Edgar Rice Burroughs, who is also author of "Tarzan of the Apes," "The Return of Tarzan," and other well-known adventure stories. It has a cast, headed by Karla Schramm and Manilla Martan, expensive interiors, unusual sets and attractive outdoor locations.

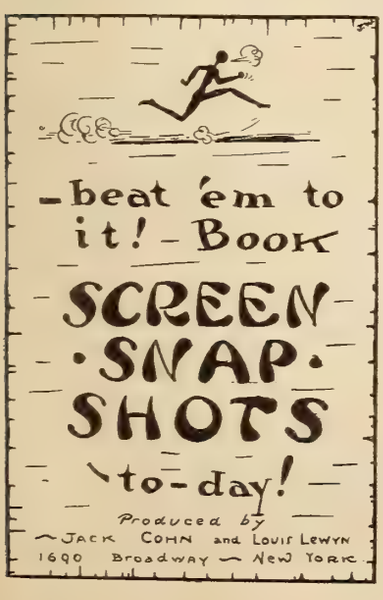
Harry Revier is working for the realization of two aims in the production of "The Son of Tarzan," it is stated. The first is to have it a distinct success as a serial, and the second, to make it so unusual and so high class in calibre that it will play the first-run houses.

Cameraman's Role One of Importance

It is the opinion of Edward Hemmer, president of the Hemmer Superior Productions, Inc., that the cameraman is just as important as the star in the making of a first-class picture. This opinion was expressed by Mr. Hemmer in discussing the recent work of his cameraman, "Bill" Tuers, one of the game's "vets." Mr. Hemmer said:

"The development of motion picture photography in the last ten years is as marked as the development of the screen artist. The screen artist of today must be a finished artist or the play will be a lamentable failure. The same is also true of the camera man. He must have the soul of an artist and a keen sense of appreciation for real acting."

Western Pictures Will Start Sales Drive



Western Pictures Exploitation Company recently organized by Irving Lesser is shortly to begin a very active campaign for the sale of a number of subjects which will be handled by this organization, the list including "That Something," "The Sins of the World," "The Sentimental Bloke" and the Blanchard Film Productions made by a new rapid process.

The Blanchard company has evolved a distinct novelty and will introduce its new production with a 500 ft. subject titled "The Art of Diving," in which Annette Kellerman gives numerous exhibitions.

Pioneer Opens Exchange in Washington, D. C.

The Pioneer Film Corporation has opened offices in Washington, D. C., at 525 13th street, N. W. Edwin A. Sherwood is in charge as general manager.

Mr. Sherwood is one of the best-known men in that part of the country and at the headquarters of the Pioneer in New York, it was said that the fullest measure of success is expected to mark the efforts of Mr. Sherwood.

Will Star Arthur Donaldson

Julius Timm at Head of Company; Stories Purchased

FROM the offices of Arthur Donaldson Productions, Inc., 220 West Forty-second street, New York City, comes the announcement that a company has been formed to present Arthur Donaldson as star in both stage and screen offerings.

Arthur Donaldson was the original "Prince of Pilsen," which role he played 1,345 times in America and England. His portrayals on the stage as Baron de Grimm in "Madelaine," the Prince of Kharikar in "The Blue Moon," Tom in "Sweet Ann Page," Count Arnheim in "The Bohemian Girl," and his renditions of the titular roles in "Rob Roy," "Brian Boru," "The Norseman," "Yon Yonson" and "The Wanderer" belong to theatrical history.

He was a member of the old Kalem stock company, and was one of the roupe that went to Ireland to appear in that firm's famous Irish photoplay series. He has produced and starred in photoplays of his own creation for the Swedish Biograph Company, and has assumed leading roles in films bearing the trademark of Fox, Vitagraph, Pathe, Metro, and was starred by Charles K. Harris in "Hearts of Men," and "For Sale: A Baby," which were released a few years ago by World Film Corporation.

Arthur Donaldson, star and general manager, Arthur Donaldson Productions, Inc.

Among the plays and scenarios already acquired for production are "Sun Valley," by Chester De Vonde, the well-known film director; "The Tragedy of Love," by Gunnar Heiberg, a Norwegian author who has written a number of successes; "The Victorious Romance," by Templar Saxe; "The Conqueror," a legendary musical play; "The Purgatory of David Drood," by Templar Saxe; "The Eternal Triangle," by Edward Phillips; and "A Romance of the North," by Arthur Donaldson.

The company is now negotiating for a long term lease on a New York property which it proposes to convert into a completely equipped studio, and is now seeking a Broadway house for the purpose of tending ideal presentations to its various offerings.

No announcement as to how the company intends to market its photoplays has as yet been forthcoming, but it is thought that they will be offered to independent buyers on the State-rights basis, notwithstanding the fact that a certain national distributor is said to have made the company a very striking cash offer for each negative starring Arthur Donaldson it completes.

Julius Timm is president and chairman of the board of directors, L. de Lyons, vice-president and treasurer, Eivind Erichsen, secretary and general manager, while S. P. Friedman, of Thomas & Friedman, Attorneys, 2 Rector street, is the company's counsel. Other members of the board of directors are Arthur Donaldson, A. P. Lundin, Edward C. White, Chester De Vonde, and Dr. Axel Lindberg. Willard King Bradley is the director of publicity and advertising.

"Sun Valley" has been selected as the company's first production. It is expected that work on it will start some time in September.

Charles A. Shaw, formerly connected with Henry W. Savage and the Selwyns, has been engaged as general manager of productions.

State-Right Market Booming

So Says M. W. Garsson After Tour of Mid-West States

MURRAY W. GARSSON, president of Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., who has just returned from a tour through the Central States, reports the greatest enthusiasm in the history of the independent distributor regarding the outlook for the coming season.

"The number of good productions released through the state right exchanges during the past year and the greatly increased number announced for the coming season is responsible for the unprecedented demand by the exhibitors for the independent product. The result is that the independent distributor is more prosperous, and more optimistic than ever before.

"A greater number of good productions are slated for distribution through the independent exchanges this year than ever before in the history of the industry. The independent distributor, by virtue of the fact that he released considerable less in number of productions annually, can well afford to spend more time and expense in exploiting the individual productions.

"The national exploitation given the individual picture by the independent distributor almost invariably exceeds that of the individual production released by a corporation handling a greater number of pictures. Then, in addition to the national exploitation, the state right man in the individual territory can well afford to give the exhibitor a greater and more beneficial cooperation from an exploitation and publicity angle.

"A great many of the state right buyers now have their own publicity and exploitation men in the exchanges, cooperating directly with the exhibitor booking his pictures. The unprecedented amount of exploitation material appearing in the trade magazines regarding independent productions proves that these men are getting real results for the exhibitor. The state right exchange man has more incentive in aiding the exhibitor than anyone else because of the fact that if the picture is not a success he is the loser.

"The corporation handling the national distribution also must do everything possible to help make their productions successful. That is the reason for the big national campaigns conducted on recent pictures. Both the exhibitors and the state right buyers in all parts of the country have expressed their gratitude for the cooperation we have given them on the comedy drama "Up In Mary's Attic."

"The national cooperative campaign arranged with the various organizations, who have agents in the larger cities through the country, has proved exceedingly valuable to everyone handling the picture. The fact that we have continued advertising in the trade magazines, even after the territory has been disposed of, has proved exceedingly worth while to the independent exchange man—and the letters received from the state right men indicate that they appreciate our efforts to co operate with them.

"In several instances we have cooperated with exhibitors right on the field, sending publiclty and exploitation men to other cities to make sure that the picture was given the success that it deserves. The results from this kind of exploitation speak for themselves when attention is called to the overflow crowds the picture has played to in Philadelphia and other cities—and the Metropolitan Opera House in Philadelphia, where the picture played, seats more than five thousand people."

Hollywood Barn-Dance Brilliant Success

The second annual barn-dance of the Assistant Directors' Association, held at the Robert Brunton Studios, Hollywood, has been rated as a brilliant success. It is estimated that over 4,500 persons attended the affair. The publicity campaign prefacing the event, included a balloon ascent by Kathyrn Adams and Hank Mann three days before the function. They bombarded Los Angeles and adjacent centers from their pony blimp, loaned by the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, with 10,000 hand-bills and 500 free tickets.

Hollywood's film colonies volunteered their services freely for the affair. Jean Paige, the Vitagraph star, supervised the posting of 300 one-sheets announcing the dance. Others who assisted were the Christie and Sunshine bathing girls, Kathyrn Adams, Colleen Moore, Helen Eddy, Hank Mann, Roscoe Arbuckle, Kathleen Kirkham, Anita Stewart and many other popular screen artists.

Equity Release Shown at Holland Exhibit

It is announced by the Equity offices that "Whispering Devils," Equity's six-reel state's-rights special featuring Conway Tearle and Rosemary Theby, has ben chosen by the authorities, in charge of the motion-picture exhibition to be held in Holland next month, as representative of the finest productions of the world.

Jans State-Rights Its Special

Negotiations Under Way for First Runs of the "Madonnas and Men"

IN an announcement from F. E. Backer, general manager of Jans Pictures, Inc., it is made known that that organization has decided to state-right their big "Madonnas and Men." For some time past, since it's premier showing showing on Broadway, various methods of distribution as regards "Madonnas and Men" have been discussed with the result that Mr. Backer and his associates believe that the picture can get wider distribution and be shown to a greater number of people if it is put out on the state-rights plan.

As was promised "Madonnas and Men" will be put over in the manner that it deserves, says the Jans Pictures, Inc. Negotiations are now under way, it is stated, for first-runs in all the key-cities, and in each case a special and far-reaching exploitation campaign will be inaugurated. Each city will have its separate and distinct campaign so that the territory covered from that city will have the benefit of the extensive advertising and publicity, according to Mr. Backer's statement.

On Mr. Backer's recent trip tentative arrangements were made in several cities, and at the present time contracts are being drawn up at the home-office both for first run-houses in cities covering the entire country and for sales of state-right territory. Within a short time, probably by the time the next issues of the trade publications go to press, a detailed list of buyers of territorial rights together with theatres that will play "Madonnas and Men" for first runs, will be given out.

Interest in territorial rights for this picture is reported to be most active. Buyers representing all parts of the country have been making bids, it is announced, and the competition to get the rights to the picture is very keen.

New Muriel Ostriche Comedy Finished

Another Muriel Ostriche comedy has been completed and has been titled "Betty's Romeo." This is the fourth of the series of twelve high class comedies, which are being distributed by Arrow. The production was directed by Arvid Gillstrom.

"A Fliver Wedding" Is Monty Banks Comedy

The name of the latest Monty Banks comedy produced for Federated is "A Flivver Wedding," according to an announcement from the new distributing organization.

Aywon Film Now Ready to Distribute

"The Woman Above Reproach," the feature soon to be presented by Nathan Hirsh, president of The Aywon Film Corporation, has been completed and prints are now being made ready for distribution. It stars Florence Chase.

Following the release of "The Woman Above Reproach" other big features will be released including the great novelty film "The Evolution of Man," which undertakes to expound the Darwin theory and which features Jack, the ape with human intelligence. "The Woman of Mystery" starring Grace Cunard and Frances Ford is also scheduled for early release as well as several other features to be announced later.

American Cinema Men Back from Vacations

Jas. P. Sheehan, general manager of American Cinema Corporation, has returned to his desk at 411 Fifth avenue, New York, following a month's vacation at Great Kills, Staten Island. James Heenan, of the executive staff of the same corporation, is also back in the office.

A picture as warm hearted, as big, as courageous as the pioneers who blazed the trail is "Lahoma." It is a rugged, healthy story as dramatic in the telling as the careers of the men who made the West.

We are confident that exhibitors will support our opinion in believing that Edgar Lewis in this masterly effort has achieved another striking dramatic success and has again offered the public a production which will register big at the box office.

"THE GIRL IN THE WEB"

(Hampton-Pathe)

A Splendid Production from All Angles

JESSE D. HAMPTON has produced one of the most beautiful pictures the writer has ever seen, as far as production qualities go, in "The Girl in the Web."

It is really a pleasure to sit and watch the screening of a picture of this type where scene after scene is flashed upon the screen showing either beautiful landscape shots or interiors that are up to date in arrangement. The exteriors in this feature stand out because of the fact that they have been taken at the right angle, causing plenty of sunlight to fall upon the faces and forms of the actors which gives a splendid effect. And then again they have been selected with exquisite care.

Careful direction of a good story is another important factor in the making of this feature, for the action is never blurred, but is brought out in such a quiet, natural painstaking way that the sun-titles could be eliminated, so to speak, and yet the action could be understood.

The story has a rather new twist in that, it is an erring daughter and not a son who turns thief and robs the family safe of its valuable jewels in order to pay off old gambling debts. But she repents in the end through the efforts of a young private secretary.

Blanche Sweet in the latter role is convincing at all times and gives a splendid performance. She has to share honors, however, with a good cast among whom are Thomas Jefferson, Adele Farrington, Haywood Mack, Christine Mayo and Negel Barrie.

The picture which is full of incident and dramatic moments has a surprise finish which should interest those who see it.—Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

This Makes It Unanimous

OUR OPINION

A Virile Melodrama Pleasing to All Classes

A strong constructed scenario assisted by capable direction makes this a production that is presentable to all classes of audiences. The story moves along smoothly and consistently, with a strong element of suspense that is well defined and that adds to the picture's appeal and interest. The action of the play extends over a period of only a night and a day and the producers have shown good judgment in keeping it down to the five reels, for there was so much room for introducing unnecessary incidents. It is a society play and the picture is beautifully staged and enhanced by splendid photography. Practically all of the action of the play takes place in the interior of a luxurious home.

WARNER

DAWN

With the two following reviews 100% of the trade papers and 100% of the great newspapers have voted "One Hour Before Dawn" a 100% picture.

"One Hour Before Dawn," on view last week at the Capitol, is a model murder mystery. Of murder mysteries in general one would be inclined to say that there is nothing new under the cinema, but "One Hour Before Dawn" is original and ingenious and wholly different from the cut and dried pistol-in-the-drawer-body-on-the-floor stuff that most mysteries are made of. Moreover, this picture has the merit of beginning at the beginning and ending at the end. Most feature photos are over before the director suspects the truth. In "One Hour Before Dawn" the director knew it first.

EMPRESS THEATRE

GLENN CARVER, Manager

Hastings, Nebr., July 15th, 1920.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Omaha, Nebr.

Dear Sirs:

Last Monday and Tuesday I ran the first episode of the Jack Dempsey Serial "DAREDEVIL JACK" and, say, it sure went over with a bang, despite the fact that the weather was very hot. I am not going to boast of the big crowds that will continue to come but I take this opportunity to tell you that it pleased my patrons and I thoroughly believe it will be a business builder. I consider "DAREDEVIL JACK" one of the few great and successful serials of the year. All my former attendance records for serials were knocked cookoo last Monday at this theatre and of course I will have to place it in the foreground. Along with Dempsey "The Winner" "DAREDEVIL JACK" is one also.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) GLENN CARVER, Mgr.

Men, you can't go wrong with a proven winner!

ABOUT PLAYERS

MARION DAVIES, Cosmopolitan star, is already reporting at the Brunton studios, Los Angeles, where, under the direction of Frank Borzage, "The Love Piker," a recent Cosmopolitan story, is being filmed, in which Miss Davies, it is said, is cast to her decided advantage.

Ellen Cassidy, recently finished work in a Goldwyn production and has been engaged to play opposite Eugene O'Brien in his nevt starring vehicle to be directed by Robert Ellis.

Hugh Huntley expects to be another one of those busy boys who has no time for play except upon the screen and stag, having been selected for the juvenile role in the Chatham Picture Corporation's production in which Vera Gordon, of "Humoresque" fame will enact another important characterization. Paula Shay, it is announced, will also be among the carefully selected support.

Monte Blue has been spending his idle hours about the Famous Player's 56th street studio, awaiting orders to leave for Kentucky locations where exteriods for the first photoplay in which he will be starred are to be shot.

James W. Morrisoi has finished his work in the Anita Stewart picture, and has been engaged to play with H. B. Warner in "When We Were Twenty-One," being assigned a comedy role; the well remembered part of the imp.

The juvenile lead in "Bunty Pulls the Strings," a Goldwyn special under the direction of Reginald Barker, will be played by Cullen Landis, who has been seen recently in several other Goldwyn productions.

Outside of playing in the George Fitzmaurice Famous Players production, and rehearsing at night in a William A. Brady offering for the legitimate stage, Rod LaRoque has nothing to do. When he gets time he should tell the world that Mr. Brady has paid him a rare compliment. Not only are the rehearsals called at night, for the benefit of Mr. La Roque, but Mr. Brady has arranged an out-of-town route so that the risin gyoung player may keep up his work in the picture and appear in the theatre, all in the same day.

OUR own representatives gather every item appearing in this department. They aim, first, to secure news that is adaptable to the use of photoplay editors; and, secondly, material that will liven the exhibitor's program. Full permission is given to editors and managers to reprint from these pages. In addition, the Studio Department staff, under the direction of Miss Lillian R. Gale, is always at the service of newspapers and theatres to prepare any special material that may be desired.

The Studio Department serves as a connecting link, presenting the ideals, personalities and achievements of players and directors to the exhibitors and newspaper editors of the country, and, through them, to the public.

The Associated First National Pictures, Inc., paid a fitting tribute to Norma and Constance Talmadge, as a farewell gift to the talented First National stars, when the sisters sailed for their first vacation abroard on the "Imperator." In addition to many personal gifts from individual execltives of First National, the cinema stars found their staterooms beautifully decorated with flowers and plants, their every need anticipated. The popular stars will join their mother, and sister Natalie, in Paris.

Frank Norcross, who left for Los Angeles to be in the supporting cast for Charles Ray's third independent release, "Nineteen and Phyliss," will be remembered as a Vitagraph player, appearing in a number of the O'Henry stories and other Vitagraph productions of recent months. Included in the cast, also, are Clara Horton, George Nicholls and Lincoln Stedman, under the direction of Joseph DeGrasse.

Robert Gordon, featured player in the initial Cayuga production which has been filmed under the working title of "Three Women Loved Him," will soon announce plans regarding his future screen work. He has already stated that he expects to be in Ithaca, N. Y., a sufficient part of the time to warrant his having purchased a home in that city. It would seem, therefore, that Mr. Gordon anticipates no idle moments in the dear future.

EDWARD SLOMAN was "craved" by the Metro star, May Allison, for her director. He was, therefore, welcomed with a flattering enthusiasm which bubbled harmoniously until Mr. Sloman's first instructions. It was on the first location trip. May was to be set adrift on a mountain stream in a canoe and swept over the falls. When Director Sloman described the action he desired as she approached the watery decline, pounding for realism, his popularity suddenly waned. What can a poor director-man do? Sub leading women are decidedly passe!

Conway Tearle and Rosemary Theby in Equity's State Rights release, "Whispering Devils"

HOWARD HICKMAN has become director for Ben Hampton. His first story will be "The Killer," by Steward Edward White.

DIRECTOR GEORGE MELFORD has borrowed from Cecil B. deMille, Miss Anne Forest, who will play an emotional role in William Vaughan Moody's play "The Faith Healer."

And from a director of the fair sex:

"It is driven home to the observer more and more," declares Ida May Park, the famous woman director, "that in the ranks of the motion picture actors and actreses the 'type' is much more in favor than the artist. That is to say, a casting director, so long as he can secure a person to look the part, is satisfied, whether that person be an actor of high merit or the merest novice from a horde of extras.

"The great question is, does this materially aid the advancement of the motion picture, which is as much of an institution, presumably, for the pursuit of art in drama as is the speaking stage? Does not the word 'actor' imply a person who is capable of portraying characters utterly at variance with his own? Where does the acting come in if the character cast for a part is in all essentials the very character that is to be portrayed? The few differences are easily polished off by a clever director's use of the megaphone.

"This flood of amateurs has not yet spread so far that it cannot be checked, but it has become a definite menace to the progress of the screen toward the ultimate goal of perfection. Let all of us who have a pride in what we have already achieved protect the cinema from rubber stamp producing which will inevitably result if the use of these puppet types is persisted in.

ALLEN HOLUBAR has declined the chair of Motion Picture Arts offered him by an Eastern University. While commending the plans of the big educational institution to train men for executive work in connection with making pictures, Holubar answered that he could not get by on a college professor's salary even if he could get out of his contract.

After a few days' fishing off the California coast Lloyd Ingraham, director of the Carter de Havens in "Twin Beds," declares that hereafter the camera reel shall be preferred to the fishing reel, and that he shall do his baiting with the megaphone instead of the hook.

GEORGE LLOYD SARGENT, despite rumors to the contrary, will remain with Vitagraph and is already busily preparing to "shoot" on another Vitagraph production.

"To Be First" Her Constant Aim

"BORN of ambition is the desire to be 'first,'" the explanation Clara Kimball Young gives for the manifestation presenting itself early in one's childhood and which, though invisible, she believes, remains to the end.

"No matter how large,—how small the family, nor in what walk of life" observed Miss Young, "I believe there is that secret desire in the heart of each child to be 'first.' 'First' to be served at the table, 'first' to ride a bicycle in the neighborhood, 'first' to wear her dresses long and her hair 'up'—or if a boy, 'first to appear in long trousers.'"

The discussion was one of conversational nature and presented itself when speaking of Miss Young as having been the first motion picture actress to have formed her own producing company.

"Must have made you feel like 'first lady of the land?'" was asked the famous star.

"Yes, it did, but more than that it gratified the desire to be 'first' in something, which desire, as I said, is born of ambition. I was playing in stock in Philadelphia and was earning $100 a week when J. Stuart Blackton induced me to forsake the spoken drama for the screen. He offered only $25 per week, which meant considerable sacrifice for me. But I think I was the 'first' among feminine leads to recognize the tremendous possibilities of the motion picture industry and some way, I visualized the future, as a director visualizes the outcome of a screen play he is about to make."

Her step, indeed, was not a fatal one, and reminiscing it is easy to recall what her decision brought about and how many times it has made her "first."

Clara Kimball Young was:

A member of the first organized motion picture producing company.

The first moving picture actress to have her name in electric lights on Broadway, Criterion theatre, where she was the star of a photo-drama.

The first star to form her own producing company.

Speaking of the star's first release of the current year, which was "The Eyes of Youth," offers an interesting comment. Miss Young declares she enjoyed her work in that production immensely for a peculiar reason. It is the hardest she can recall ever having done. And yet, being obliged to play four distinct roles within one photoplay, each of which required an entirely different characterization, she admitted the novelty attached a new interest in her work, although that she does not take the art of acting for the screen lightly, is illustrated in the knowledge she has gained through constant study of lighting effects, the camera, architectural designing, the effect of certain coloring under the photographic lens and the art, too, of direction. It has been said by directors who have made pictures starring Miss Young, that in the event of his disability, he could have one consolation, that of Miss Young's ability to go ahead with his work and complete the direction of a picture, unaided.

She has spent several weeks in and near New York away from the studio, but anticipates a long, busy fall and winter, for within the year, she expects to play the leading feminine role in eight photoplays, and then, if all goes as well as her ambitions crave, she will be the "first motion picture actress to go around the world—in an aeroplane." And that would be her second trip—around the world.

Educational Comedies in Competition

EDUCATIONAL points out that its comedies are making the same record for competitive showing in other cities as they have made at the leading New York houses.

Last week "Duck Inn," second of the Mermaid Comedies played the Euclid theatre, Cleveland, O., in competition with the second Chester Comedy, "An Overall Hero" at the Alhambra.

At Loew's Palace theatre, Washington "An Overall Hero" supplied the comedy while Tom Moore's Rialto picked "Duck Inn" for the laughs.

St. Louis made up for lost time in not seeing "A Fresh Start," the initial Mermaid Comedy, on its release schedule by having it at two of the leading theatres, the Pershing and the West End Lyric.

Tooker in Gordon Features

William H. Tooker has been engaged for a prominent part in the Vera Gordon feature on which work has started under the supervision of Harry Rapf at the Solax studios, Fort Lee. Tooker, who is one of the best known actors on the screen, and one identified with films since their early days, has a strong part in the special.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Robertson Directs Special

"Sentimental Tommy" to Introduce J. Robertson as Featured Director

John S. Robertson, director of Specials for Paramount

JOHN S. ROBERTSON, director of John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," has been granted, by Jesse L. Lasky, the privilege of directing his first special production for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The vehicle chosen to place Mr. Robertson before the public as a featured director is "Sentimental Tommy," the already famous story by Sir James M. Barrie. The scenario has been completed by Josephine Lovett. Her adaptation was made from a combination of all the books of "Sentimental Tommy" and will follow the escapades of Tommy as a boy and ending when he has reached maturity. His escapades have amused and endeared him in the hearts of both young and old of Britain and America for years.

Mr. Robertson has sent a copy of the adaptation to Sir James for his criticism and hopes to hear from him before commencing the production. Thrums, about which the action in the books takes place is, of course, a fictitious name, but it is in reality the home and birthplace of Sir James, Kerrie Muir. Mr. Robertson hopes that Sir James will send him photographs of the country in and around Kerrie Muir which may be used to guide the art and decoration department in their construction of sets.

With regard to the selection of cast Mr. Robertson is proceeding with the utmost care. The two leading characters, that of Tommy and Grizel, the girl, offer unusual opportunities to those selected to play them. A great deal depends upon the selection of the characters as described by Barrie and it is by no means an easy task. Mr. Robertson is determined to make this a masterpiece and is allowing no opportunity to slip by.

Companies Need Actors Says Robertson

Pioneer Film Has Twelve More

NEGOTIATIONS have been completed whereby the Pioneer Film Corporation has taken over the product of the American Cinema Corporation, comprising about twelve productions for the following territories: New York City and State, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky, Illinois and Indiana, Wisconsin, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska.

The American Cinema Corporation has produced a number of successful pictures and has at its head Walter Nicbuhr, said one of the ablest producers in the industry. M. H. Hoffman, general manager of Pioneer, was instrumental in consummating this deal.

The first three productions which Pioneer will distribute are ready and will shortly be released. They are: "The Inner Voice," with E. K. Lincoln in the leading role, "His Brother's Keeper," with Martha Mansfield, Rogers Lytton and Gladden James, and "Stolen Moments," starring Margaret Namara.

Several other productions are now being discussed and are awaiting Pioneer's approval so far as the story, direction, cast and other details are concerned. It was said recently at Pioneer headquarters, that all of the American Cinema productions will be based upon successful plays or books of famous authors.

Hayes Hunter, Director of "Earthbound"

T. Hayes Hunter, director of "Earthbound"

PRESS and public, despite difference of opinion as to the meaning, the aim and varied qualities combined in the production of "Earthbound," agree that it is a milestone. In film circles it is one of the most prevalent subjects of conversation, argument and general discussion. It has supplied food for thought, then, together with its entertaining qualities, and has centered the "spot," as it were, upon the director, T. Hayes Hunter.

Mr. Hunter, far from new to the motion picture industry, has directed a number of creditable productions. "Earthbound," however, has taken him from a class of "directors" and made him "the director of Earthbound," which explains his identity immediately.

In addition, Mr. Hunter has taken an important step toward revolutionizing a condition heretofore believed unavoidable, that of subsidizing a director to departments of a producing company, rather than establishing the director as the unit, placing the departments at his disposal.

In speaking of the difficulties in filming Basil King's widely read story, Mr. Hunter imparted some of the most interesting data, and after hearing him describe the mastering of timing the double exposures, one began to form a vague idea of his unlimited patience.

"Had I been subjected to the usual 'red tape' method of getting what I needed and what I knew to be imperative in order to secure the results expected of me, rather than having carte blanche, it would not have been possible for me to have made 'Earthbound' a production in which I feel a certain paternal pride. I gladly share the credit with my faithful cameramen, and the patient artists who never hesitated to assist in every way in making the production a credit to us all. But, having been made the unit, having shouldered the responsibility of portraying 'Earthbound' on the screen, with permission to exercise my authority, I felt doubly responsible, for I knew that it was an unusual thing for a producing company to do, and I felt duty bound to prove it worthy of the experiment.

"It has always seemed to me" said Mr. Hunter, "that the director of a motion picture, especially one requiring an expenditure such as the one I have recently finished, should be selected with great care. The fact that he has been assigned the work and is conceded as competent, should, I think, insure his ability to act as the unit from the start. His reputation is at stake and if shouldering the responsibility, it is logical that he will surround himself with the kind of assistance he needs. It saves a great deal of irritation to be able to draw upon the supplies of departments at will, rather than be delayed or interfered with at a crucial moment because of lack of authority.

"To the harmony existing throughout the procedure, I owe, in a great measure, the success of 'Earthbound.' It was one of those absorbing subjects a director visualizes from the time he has read his script until the picture is finished, and the irritation of unnecessary delays, being obliged to wait for the head of a department to decide to act, might seriously have affected the work.

"During the weeks I was engaged in the making the screen version of Mr. King's book I lived it. Not for a moment could I have shaken it from me. Even after it was finished, it remained the essence of my thought, and has scarcely disappeared even now."

Beseiged with questioning interviewers, and other interrogatively inclined listeners who surrounded Mr. Hunter during his stay in New York, it is no wonder that the spirit of the masterpiece still hovers about him. He doesn't have an opportunity to forget it. And, in proving the worth of making the director the operating unit, it is safe to say that he reached his goal.

Novel Lighting Is Secured

Vignola Said to Have Introduced New Effects in Latest Production

ROBERT G. VIGNOLA, whose predilections for proper screen lighting are well known throughout the industry, announces a novel departure in motion-picture lighting effects for "The Manifestation of Henry Ort," his third special Vignola Production made for Cosmopolitan and released by Paramount. His idea is said to be absolutely new and never to have been tried before. Vignola carried on many experiments, assisted by Al Liguori, his cameraman, before he felt sufficiently satisfied with it to use it in his productions, it is stated. He has now brought it to such a state of perfection that he feels it is ready to use, and "The Manifestation of Henry Ort," will be, according to him, the first production ever lighted up in the new and more artistic way.

Those who have been privileged to see some of the experiments Director Vignola has carried on, are authority for the statement that there has never been such admirable lighting on the screen before. Vignola's new system of lighting, while it is kept secret, is said to produce the same effect on the spectators that colors in paintings do. In other words the lighting conveys the mood of the scene, it is stated, much in the same way that colors convey the mood of a painting. Instead of sharply defined low-lights and high-lights, Vignola's method enables him to produce a blending characteristic of the spirit of the scene, and he claims for it that it adds as much to the effectiveness of the actors' work as the settings and the costuming.

"The Manifestation of Henry Ort," is a drama of underlying emotions, a theme of internal rather than external conflict, and Director Vignola chose it as his third special production because it gives him unlimited opportunities to do the sort of work in which he has always excelled on the screen, the portrayal of mental, spiritual, and emotional stress.

FOX

THE William Fox plant presents a most busy appearance because of the filming of the big special "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" under the direction of Emit J. Flynn and the preparations being made for the big spectacular costume play which is to be directed by J. Gordon Edwards. The Flynn organization has numerous sets which take up all the space in the dramatic section of the plant and the Edwards sets are being erected on what is termed the comedy or eastern lot.

THE Goldwyn organization now has six producing units at work, two additional organizations starting this week. Victor Shertzinger has been selected to direct the making of the film version of the Leo Dietrichstein play "The Concert" which is centered about a great musician. The May Allison company of twelve players and Director Edward Sloman have returned from Brents Mountain Craigs after filming exteriors for the "Marriage of William Ashe" and the remainder of the story will be filmed at the studio.

Victory Bateman who twenty years ago was considered one of the most beautiful women of the American stage was this week engaged by Metro to play an important character role in "Cinderella's Twin" starring Viola Dana.

Metro is shortly to introduce a new style of art title which has been created by D. Anthony Tauszky head of the art title department. He has provided a series of backgrounds in colors and this will be used first in production of "White Ashes" now being directed by Phil Rosen from the story by Luther Reed.

W. E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Corporation is spending a week at the coast studios while on a tour of all of the Metro Exchanges. ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

PLANS for the making of the first Associated Producers release by Allan Dwan have been completed and he is now at work on the filming of "The Forbidden Thing" at the Jasper Hollywood studio where he has leased quarters for himself and company and stage space. The cast for this initial Associated Producers release includes James Kirkwood, Helen Jerome Eddy, Marcia Manon, King Baggott, Gertrude Claire, Arthur Thalasso, Jack Rosaleigh and others. The story concerns the spiritual side of human nature and its triumph over the physical. The locale is the fishing villages near Boston.

Robert B. McIntyre has been engaged as manager for the Maurice Tourneur studios succeeding Sam Myer who will be coast manager for the Brulator film interests.

Lillian Hall has been engaged by Maurice Tourneur to play one of the prominent roles in "The Last of the Mohicans" this producer's first Associated Producers release.

Omar Whitehead playing the part of Hawkeye in Tourneur's "Mohicans" has been forced to give up the part because of a fall in which the bones of his arm were broken. The part has been given to Harry Loraine.

New Vitagraph Chicago Exchange Building

A new department has been added to the Tourneur studios which consists of foreigners translating articles and securing ideas from their native lands for the producers. The first engaged is Senor de la Cabaldo of Spain, who will handle correspondence for Spain, South America, Philippines and Mexico. Other foreign languages will shortly be represented and in this manner Tourneur believes he can learn the wants and desires of each nationality and thus efficiently internationalize his film plays.

INCE

THERE has been a general revival of producing activities at the Thomas H. Ince studios at Culver City following a lull of more than a month and this week two companies began work on new Ince subjects.

"The Bronze Bell" by Louis Joseph Vance has been put in the making. Courtney Foote has been engaged to play leading role and other members of the cast are being assembled by Horace Williams, new Ince casting director. Continuity for the film subject is being written by Louis Stevens in collaboration with Author Vance, himself, who has been at the studio for some time.

The next vehicle starring Douglas MacLean will be the Fred Jackson play "One a Minute." This play is being prepared for the screen by Franklin Poland and it is to be directed by Jack Nelson. The story gives MacLean the role of a young druggist who becomes fabulously rich by the sale of a patent cure all medicine, the sales of which continue despite the acts of his various rivals, pure food officers, etc. MacLean has just finished work in "When Johnny Comes Marching Home."

It is announced at the Ince studio that both "One a Minute" and "The Bronze Bell" will be released as Paramount Artcraft subjects and that the latter will be the last contribution of Producer Ince to Famous Players-Lasky.

Production work is scheduled to commence next week on an Ince special all-star production "The Magic Life" from a serial novel by May Edington. Bradley King recently added to the Ince scenario staff is writing the screen play from this novel and John G. Wray is to direct.

Change in title of the Enid Bennett picture for Paramount Artcraft program originally known as "I Wonder If —" has been announced. This subject will be known as "Silk Hosiery."

The exploitation department of the Ince organization has completed national arrangements for the release of a three reel picture known as "A Trip Through the World's Greatest Film Studio." This is to be handled as a tie-up with newspapers, leading dailies handling the subject in the various cities. The picture is scheduled for early showing at Graumans theatre, Los Angeles.

Horace Williams who has been identified with several west coast studios as casting director has been engaged by Thomas H. Ince to succeed Freddy Fralick, who recently resigned.

In making the last scenes for the Douglas MacLean-Ince subject "When Johnny Comes Marching Home" Director Jack Nelson staged a genuine county fair at Pleasanton, California, for he needed every seat in the big grandstand filled and he got 6,000 people there while the town only has a population of half that number. This was accomplished by importing a troupe of vaudeville entertainers from San Francisco, chartering two aeroplanes, offering prizes for a cowboy's rodeo, employing the village band and one-sheeting the event for miles around. The 6,000 extras worked without pay and had the time of their lives.

HERE AND THERE

C. A. (DOC) WILLAT is on his way to New York with the first sample print and negative of the initial Irvin Willat Productions "Down Home" from the rural drama from the F. N. Westcott play, brother of the author of "David Harum." A preview of the subject was given before it was taken to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. This was held at the Alvarado theatre and the audience gave the subject a warm welcome.

Producer Irvin Willat is now preparing continuity for his next production and he has gone to a mountain resort for this work. No announcement is made of the nature of the subject.

The first Monroe Salisbury Players subject "The Barbarian" is to be shown to the public for the first time this week at a Venice, California theatre, where it is believed a most cosmopolitan as well as metropolitan audience will see the film.

Robert Brunton and Roy Stewart are at work on the first Roy Stewart production story and continuity is now in preparation. It is understood the series of Stewart films will give this player an opportunity to appear in both out-of-door and indoor parts.

Progress is being made by Renco Film Company in preparing for the filming of their first west coast made subject "Lavendar and Old Lace." President H. J. Reynolds has engaged Lloyd Ingraham to direct this subject and Ingraham and Lee Royal are preparing the screen version and continuity. George Crone and Robert McGowan have been engaged as assistant directors and Ross Fischer will do the camera work. The Renco Company has leased space at the Mayer studio and plan to begin production August 23rd.

F. P.-Lasky Leases the Talmadge Studio

Arrangements have been completed by Arthur V. Smith, general manager of the Eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to lease the Talmadge studio at 418 East 48th street. This additional floor space of two stages of 75 x 100 feet each was necessary to accommodate Billie Burke's next production, "The Education of Elizabeth," work on which will be commenced shortly.

The activities of the Corporation's Eastern studios are now confined to the Fifty-sixth street studio, which is the headquarters and the remodelled Amsterdam Opera House at Ninth avenue and 44th street.

Victor Smith predicts that the new Long Island City studio will be in full operation by October 1. It will, however, be occupied by the studio staff and some pictures will be under way there before that time.

Hodkinson Reports Big Deal With Author

From the home-office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation advice has been received that a big story is shortly to "break" regarding the first screening of the novels of one of the foremost figures in the world of American literature today. The Hodkinson statement describes the author to be a man who has refrained from giving his books for picturization because he was not in accord with the methods employed by many of the present day producers.

Close Contract for One Reel Comedy Series

That the one-reel comedy is not to be forgotten in the shuffle to launch more longer comedies, is seen in the announcement that the Christie Film Company has just closed contracts for the making of a one-reel comedy every week, to be released through Educational Film exchanges, the same medium of exchange which now distributes all of the special two-reel Christie Comedies.

Says Paramount Made Success Possible

After comleting a tour of inspection of the Lasky studio at Hollywood, W. J. Siller, president of the Theatre Owners' Association of Southern California and Arizona, issued a statement of endorsement of the Paramount product which is quoted by the Famous Players-Lasky organization as follows:

"What I have seen here at the studio simply augments my judgment of past years; that Paramount Pictures lead the field. The great care and attention to detail shown as you make your pictures, scene by scene, is reflected in the uniformly excellent quality of the product. Paramount has made it possible for me to succeed in my district because the pictures bearing that brand have proven what my public want and like!"

Walsh Takes Exteriors in Mining Country

George Walsh, who is now working on "Dynamite Allen," is on location in Milford, Pa., the lead mining country of that state, where exteriors are being made. Dell Henderson is directing the picture, which is from an original story by Thomas F. Fallon.

George Walsh, who has never been with any other company but Fox, originally planned to be a lawyer, having studied law at Fordham University and Georgetown University, but he left college and enlisted under the Fox banner.

Paul Cazeneuve, appointed chief of William Fox's Western scenario department

Cazeneuve New Head of Fox Scenario Dept.

Paul Cazeneuve, who is busy at Fox's Hollywood studios making Buck Jones' pictures, "Sunset Sprague," has been appointed to succeed Denison Clift as head of the Fox Scenario Department in the West. Clift vacated his post to go abroad in search of new material for future stories and scenarios.

The new chief of the Scenario Department, Paul Cazeneuve, was born in France. After a successful professional career in Europe, Cazeneuve came to the United States. He appeared in support of such well known stars as Mme. Rhea, Sarah Bernhardt, and Salvini, and was starred in a repertoire of romantic plays in the United States and Canada by Charles Frohman.

" Gentlemen:

We beg to advise that we have had two of your DeLuxe Motiograph Machines in constant use for almost two years, and they have given entire satisfaction in every respect.

Having used other makes of machines in our operating booth our operator was a little skeptical as to them being a superior machine to those that we were already operating. But now that he has run them, he states that they are the best machine on the market, being surprised at the speed same may be run, and at the same time keep up the high standard of picture on the screen.

Wishing you continuous success, we are,

Very truly yours,

Far Eastern Architecture to be Followed in New Hollywood Theatre

To be Finished Throughout in Circassion Walnut and Mohogany

Plans have been completed this week for the new Hollywood theatre, which is to be erected on Hollywood Boulevard, east of Cahuenga avenue, in Hollywood, California, for the Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser. A. B. Rosenthal is the architect. Contracts have already been given for the excavation and foundation work, and the site, known as the old Stern property, is being cleared for the building. For the ground-breaking ceremonies a host of First National stars were present to assist in chopping down the celebrated orange grove which formerly adjoined the property.

The new building will be a Class A four-story reinforced concrete structure, 118 by 200 feet. In style, the building follows the architecture of the Far East. The exterior will be finished in glazed terra cotta in polychrome colors, while the interior will be decorated in Circassian walnut and mahogany with tile floors and marble wainscoting. The cost of the building will be approximately $575,000, and it is stated by Mr. Lesser and the Gore Brothers that with the organ, furnishings and other equipment, the total expenditure will exceed $1,000,000. A large lobby with vaulted ceiling leads into a grand foyer, from which access to the mezzanine floor and promenade is gained. The waiting rooms and balcony will be gained from the mezzanine.

Ultra-modern electrical devices will be included in the equipment of the building, and unusual lighting effects will be obtained through an indirect system. The ceiling of the main auditorium will be beautifully decoratetd and lighted. The width of the stage will be 118 feet, with the proscenium opening 50 feet in width. The entire front of the building will be illuminated. The columns which are embodied in the front are five feet in diameter at the base and rise to a height of sixty-five feet. The domes of these columns will be gilded, and upon them will play prismatic color searchlights. While the house is to be used for picture presentation, the large stage will be used for atmospheric prologues of the same class that prevail in the leading downtown theatres.

In addition to the new Hollywood theatre, plans are rapidly nearing completion for the $3,000,000 First National theatre, the site of which will be announced within thirty days. It is claimed by Lesser and the Gore Brothers that this will be the finest theatre in America from a standpoint of comfort and beauty. Many of the leading figures associated with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit will be financially interested in this theatre, and some of the brainiest and cleverest exhibitors in America arae offering their aid in the forming of plans for unique and original advantages that no other motion picture theatre in America affords. Among some of the ideas that will be incorporated into the new shrine of silent drama will be some gorgeous promenades located on the roof of the building. The finest horticulturists in California have been consulted, and it has been found that it will be possible to have an orange grove thrive on the roof of the building, so that tourists may have the opportunity of visiting the roof and picking oranges while they are waiting for seats in the theatre. The plans also call for some beautiful fountains to be interspersed among the orange grove, and for a Japanese Tea Garden to be placed in one corner of the garden. In the foyer and mezzanine promenade, as well as on the walls of the roof, will be found historic scenes of early California, which will be enclosed in glass so that they can be illuminated in various color effects. The building will also include a ball room, and all of the usual rest rooms, children's nursery, both on the mezzanine floor and on the roof, sweet shops, etc.

Further plans and announcements concerning this theatre will be issued by Mr. Lesser and the Gore Brothers very shortly.

Two more theatres were added to the ever-growing chain last week when negotiations were closed for the Rosebud and New Central theatres. Both of these houses are located in Los Angeles, on Central avenue, and are numbered among the leading community houses.

Ralph Grunauer, who recently conducted the Lyric theatre in Stockton, Cal., will act as general manager of this pair of houses. Both houses will be re-decorated.

When the new First National Palace and the New Hollywood theatres are completed, Sol Lesser and the Gore Brothers will have fourteen Los Angeles theatres in their chain. The others are the Kinema, Alhambra, Burbank, Lyceum, Rosebud, New Central, Casino, Regent, Optic, Hollywood, Windsor and Apollo.

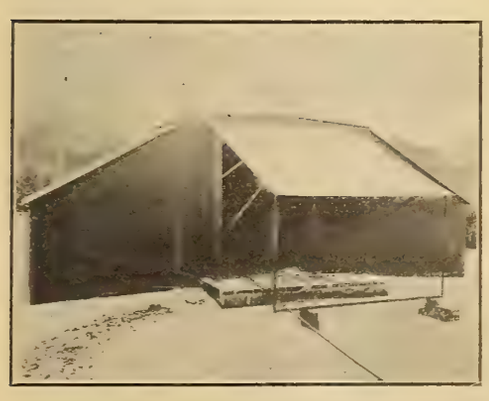
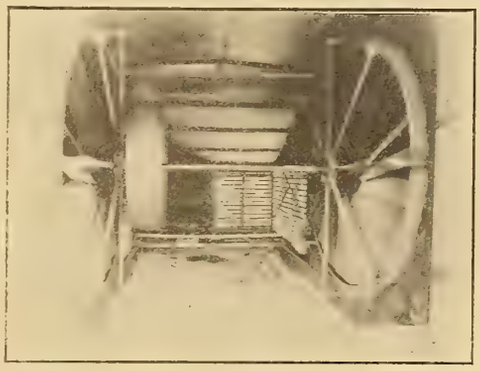
New Jersey Exhibitor Gains Success by Attending Wants of His Patrons

Typhoon Cooling System, Garden Theatre, Latest Added Improvement



JACOB FABIAN, the well known New Jersey exhibitor who owns and operates several of the best theatres in Newark, Paterson and Passaic places the principle reason for his success as a theatre manager as due, in no little part, to his faithful attention to the wants and desires of his movie patrons.

Mr. Fabian knows from past experience that it is impossible to expect a good all year round business unless there is something unusual to offer patrons, and it is because of this fact he is continually on the lookout for improvement to his many houses; adding here and there some innovation to please and make his patrons happy.



The proscenium arch through which the air enters theatre

One of his latest additions has been the installation of a Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System in his Garden theatre, Paterson, early in the summer. The Garden is one of the most popular in Paterson containing 1,000 seats in the orchestra and 350 seats in the balcony. Considerable money was spent by Mr. Fabian in remodelling the house earlier in the year and the work was completed upon the installation of the Typhoons.

Pent House on roof containing fan which furnishes air to the main floor of the theatre

Interior of Pent House showing installation of Typhoon Fan

To properly cool and ventilate the Garden required the installation of an eight-foot Typhoon Twin set installed on the roof directly over the proscenium arch. These two huge Typhoons take the clean fresh air from high above the street and force it directly into the theatre through openings in the roof and ceiling. The air in large quantities passes over the entire orchestra and out through the exit doors and other openings at the farthest end of the house.

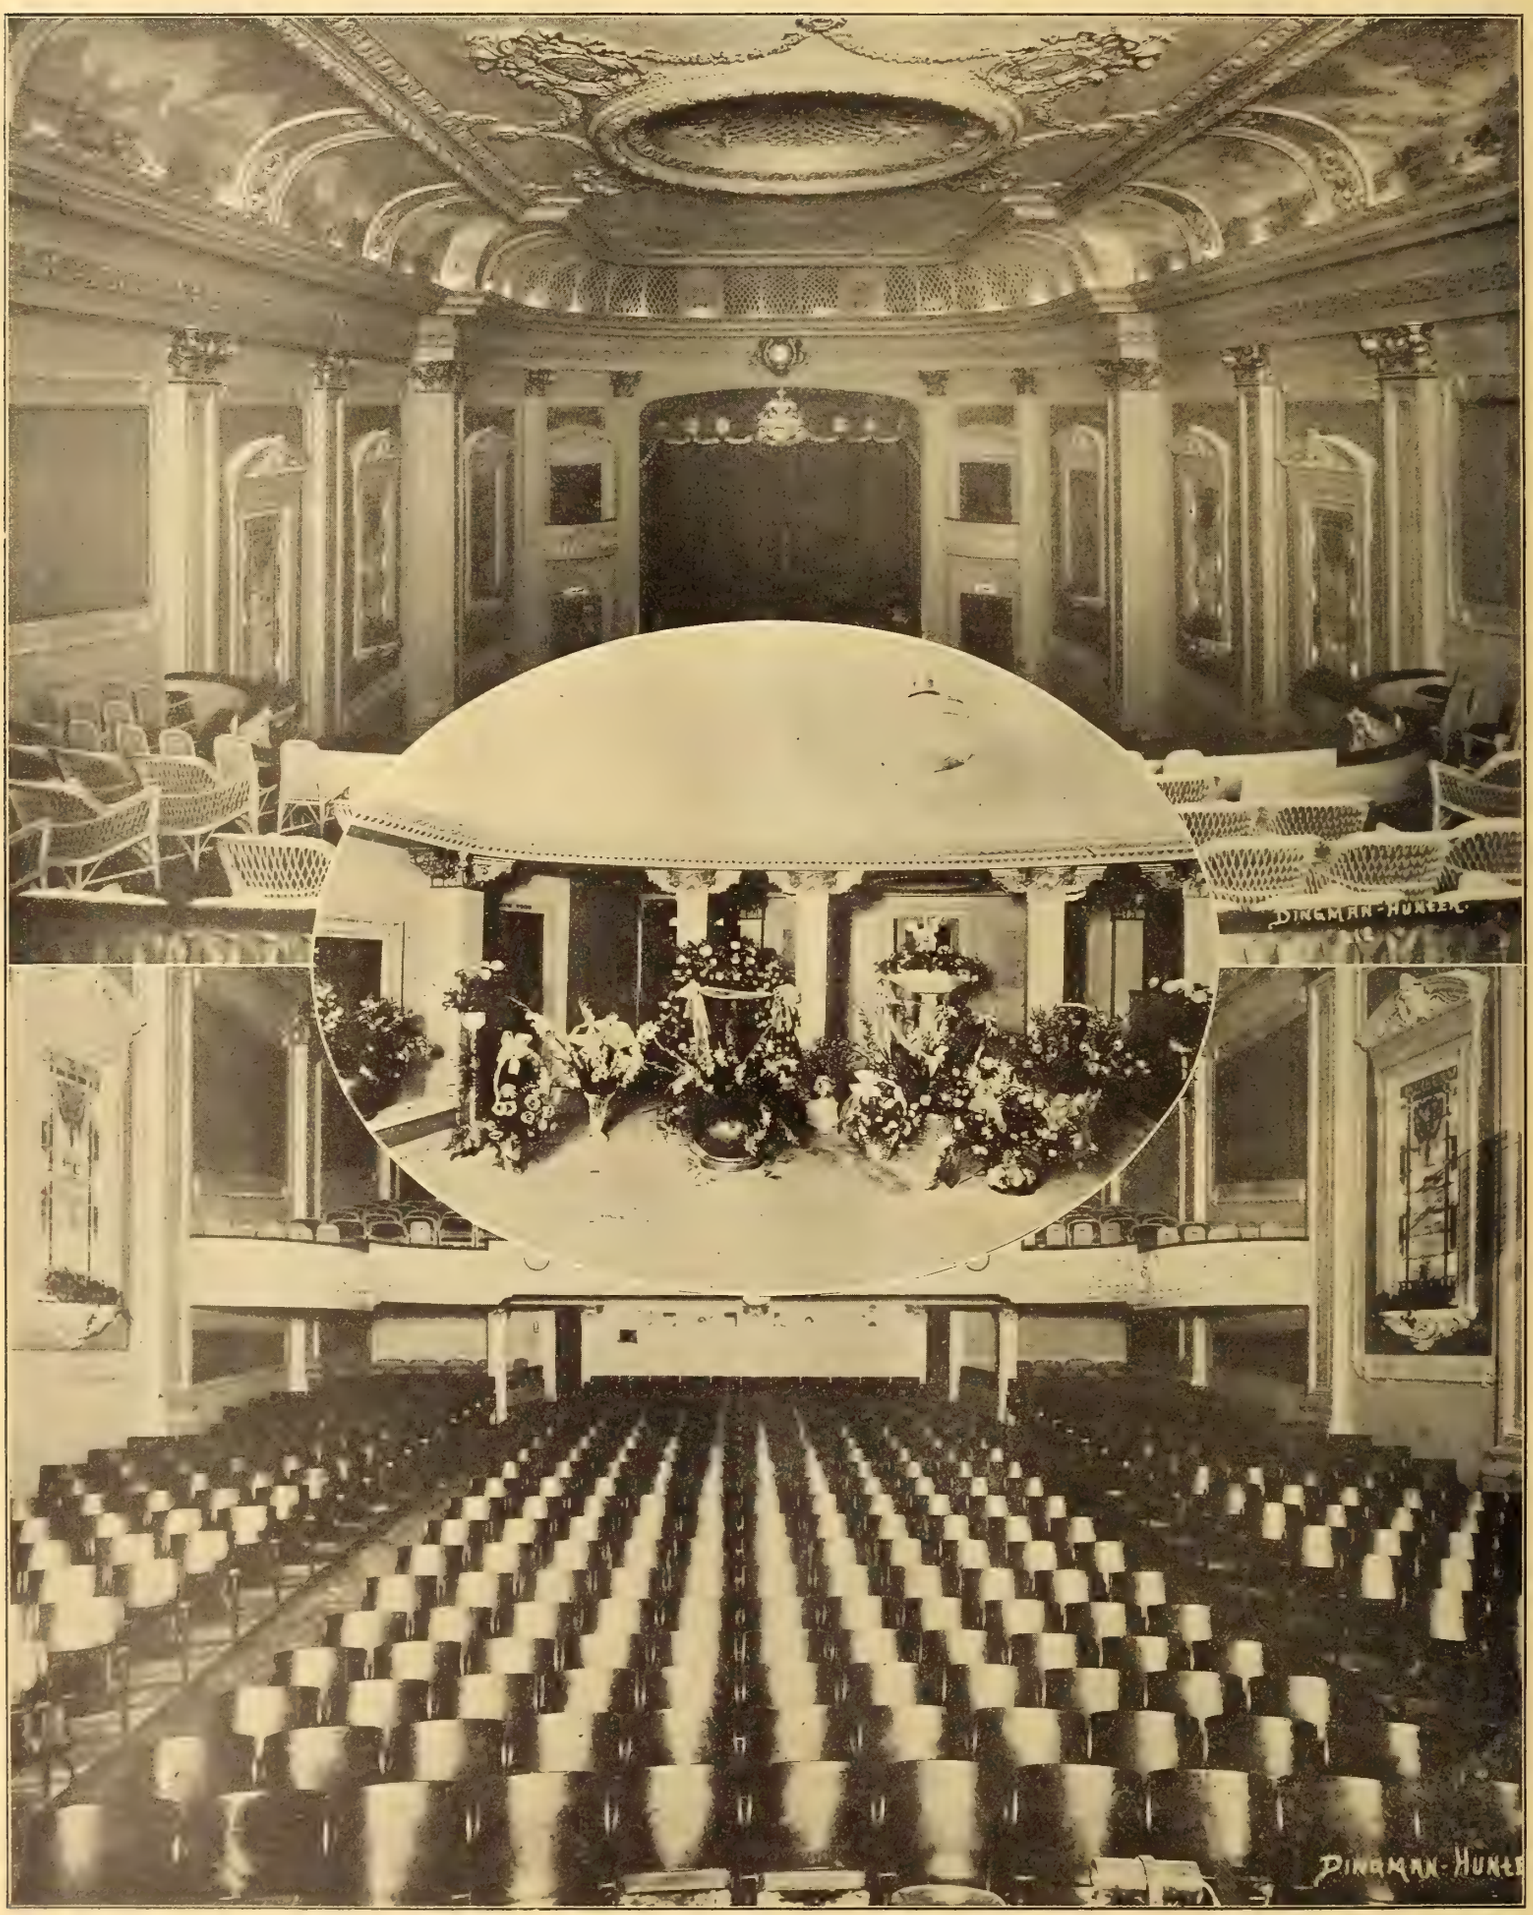
To take care of the balcony a second set of five-foot Typhoons were installed on the roof directly over the first few rows of seats in the balcony. The air from the Typhoons being forced over the entire balcony and out through openings in the rear wall. The secret of the success of the Typhoon System lies in the fact, that while large quanties of air are forced into the theatre, because of the low velocity, there are no draughts. A complete change of atmosphere take place in the Garden theatre once every minute or sixty times an hour.

An additional Pent House furnishes air for the balcony

For ventilating purposes during the winter months, the Typhoons are reversed in their operation and run at lower speed thus drawing out the foul air instead of forcing the air in as is done for cooling purposes. Because of the Typhoons the summer business at the Garden theatre has continued right along as good if not better than winter business.

Building Laws for Pennsylvania

Specifications to architects and builders regarding the construction, alteration or repairing of buildings in which public entertainments are given were issued today by Clifford B. Connelley, Commissioner of Labor and Industry for the State of Pennsylvania. They are drafted from the provisions of the State laws and apply to theatres, motion picture houses, auditoriums or any public halls where stage scenery is used.



It is provided by the specifications that the location must be suitable for the purpose and that no steps will be allowed at the entrance or exits other than one of eight inches rise because of weather conditions. All other differences in elevation between the floor and ground levels must be overcome by means of inclines which cannot exceed one foot rise in ten feet. If side and rear courts are necessary they must be not less than five feet wide in the clear and they must lead to a street or alley. All doors opening into courts must be made to swing flush within the wall.

Exits cannot be less than five feet in width or more than six feet wide in the clear. They must have out-swinging, double doors, equipped with approved panic locks. The colored illuminated "exit" sign must be placed at each door. All aisles having seats on both sides must be not less than four feet wide in the clear and wall aisles must be at least three feet six inches wide. It is provided that there shall not be more than six seats between any one seat and an aisle and not more than fourteen seats between any two aisles. Seats must be 18 inches between the arms and 30 inches from back to back of rows. They must be fastened securely to the floor and the front rows cannot be closer than 12 feet to the screen and the rear seats five feet from the foyer wall.

The specifications provide that picture booths be built to conform with the motion picture act of 1919, and that wiring must be done in accordance with the electrical code and rules of the Underwriters' Association, while the stage must conform with the fire and panic act of 1909. Galleries must be constructed according to general requirements and in buildings hereafter erected means of egress must be within the walls of the building. Plans for these buildings must be submitted in duplicate to the Department of Labor and Industry for approval.

Theatres seating less than 251 persons shall, in addition to these requirements, have two five-foot exits in front and two of the same size in the rear. Houses seating less than 501 and more than 250 shall have three five-foot exits in front and two six-foot exits in the rear. Theatres seating less than 1,001 and more than 500 shall have three five-foot exits in front and 20 inches additional for each 100 or fraction of 100 persons over 500, two six-foot exits in the rear and two five-foot exits placed one on each side of the theatre.

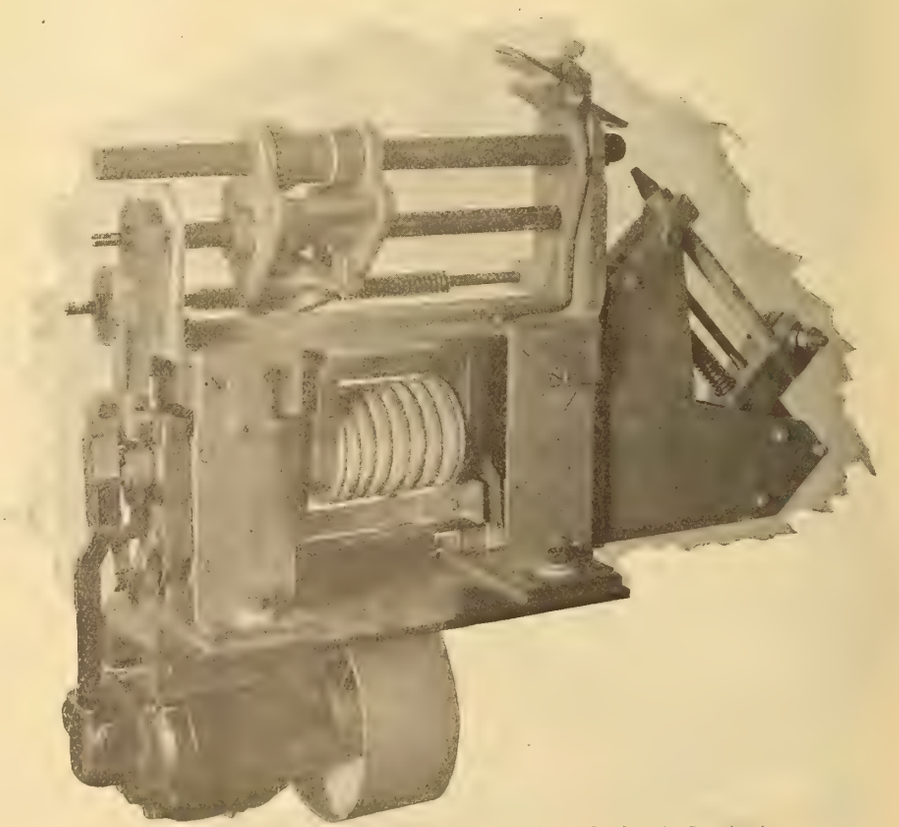
Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

A Concentrated Arc Type Automatic Lamp for Projection

A Description reprinted by permission from the Sperryscope

THE motion picture industry is one of the foremost in the United States, but, as we all know, it is only within recent years that it has grown to be such an important institution. It was only about twenty years ago that Edison and Jenkins invented the first successful motion picture machine, and for a number of years after its appearance, the films were very short, the portrayal was crude, and only the most common of every-day events were displayed. The earlier moving picture attracted crowds, not because of the interest of the subject, but simply for the reason that it showed picture images in motion. For several years a five-minute picture showing a fire-engine rushing down the street, or a locomotive speeding by a way-station was exhibited continuously. But after a short time the novelty of the motion picture as a moving picture wore off and finally degenerated into a "chaser" or "tailpiece" in vaudeville shows, whose only purpose was to warn the audience politely that the show had ended.



The producers soon realized that something had to be done to re-awaken public interest in this kind of amusement. The first attempt that led to the modern story picture was the production of a "comic," in which a small boy and a garden hose were the principal characters. This met with public approval, and more and more complete story "comics" were produced, until finally a stage has been reached where the works of our great authors and playwrights have been picturized and can be seen on the screen at any of our numerous motion picture theatres. Studios have been built with complete theatre equipment, where actors from the legitimate stage are employed.

Motion picture photography has made wonderful progress within the last decade. New chemical processes and methods of making the negative and developing the films have been discovered. Beautifully tinted films are very often seen, and color photography is rapidly coming to the front. The camera has been improved from time to time till it is now a most wonderfully perfect instrument.

The original Edison kinetoscope, or motion picture machine, did not project a picture on a screen, but exhibited it directly through a magnifying glass arranged in a peep hole in the side of a cabinet containing the mechanism. The film ran continuously. The shutter consisted of a disc with a solid sector, and ran in opposite direction to that of the film, making one complete revolution during the time taken in passing one picture over the field. The film and shutter moved in fixed relation. By passing a film through this mechanism at a great enough speed, pictures appeared in a life-like manner to the wondering spectator. But as the pictures were not very clear and the show was very short, they did not arouse much enthusiasm. Later a kinetoscope was produced which actually projected a picture on a screen placed at a distance from the machine. This machine employed an intermittent film-feeding mechanism and shutter, much on the same order as the ones used in modern machines. The optical system and electric arc lamp were like the ones used today; but the pictures projected were very unsteady due to imperfections in the intermittent movement, and the jumping and fluttering had a very disagreeable effect on the eyes of the spectators.

One by one the defects of these earlier machines have been corrected, and we now have wonderfully steady and "flickerless" projection, but while great efforts have been put forth to perfect the "projection head," as it is called, the lamp has been overlooked. Only recently have the more progressive projectionists begun to realize the need for much more light than that ordinarily obtained with the pure carbon arc lamps. They have awakened

Screen Illumination and Elements of Condenser Design

A Paper by Dr. H. P. Gage, of the Corning Glass Works

Operation of Optical System

If instead of using the corrugated condenser, as previously illustrated, it is desired to use the ordinary plano-convex condensers, a separation between the front of the condenser and the aperture plate of much more than the 6½ in. previously referred to is required. With the incandescent projection lamp even illumination can hardly be secured with a less separation than 12 in., while for operation with an arc lamp, a separation of at least 16 in. is recommended and a separation of as great as 22 in. seems to be required for low amperages. The result of employing two 7½ in. plano-convex condenser lenses with the incandescent lamp, and the large objective, using a separation of 12 in. is shown in Fig. 12. The dark spaces in the condenser image are the result of the dark spaces between the filaments of the lamp. Note that the objective is not entirely filled with light even when looking directly into it (Fig. 12c), and when looking at it from the edge of the picture the space between the edge of the condenser and the objective is increased and part of the area of the condenser is cut off. It is entirely possible to employ the corrugated condenser with a separation of 12 in. and get practically the same results as with the plano-convex condensor system if this greater separation is desired. The result in the case of the large objective is shown in Fig. 10c and d and in the case of the small objective in Fig. 11c and d.

The comparison between different illumination systems can be illustrated photographically, but the engineering data for discriminating between them are not complete until photometric measurements are made to determine the ability of each to illuminate the screen. It is often a difficult matter for the eye to discriminate illumination differences of 10% to 25%, but small differences of this size are by no means insignificant when counting the cost as recorded at the meter. Illumination tests were made by substituting the test plate of a portable photometer for the camera objective used in taking the photographs illustrating this article. In making such photometric tests the actual screen illumination obtained with a given system depends upon so many elements, such as the equivalent focus of the objective, magnification, screen distance, density of film exhibited, exact shutter design, individual lamp used, age and condition of lamp, reflector and line voltage at the time of making measurements, that it is hardly within the scope of the present paper to give detailed measurements of actual screen illuminations, but there are recorded comparative measurements of each system in Figs. 10-12 and in Table 1.

Examination of Table 1 shows us that if the plano-convex condenser system is used with a 6½ in. separation it is impossible to get an evenly illuminated field with either objective. With a 12 in. separation a fairly even field may be obtained, free from streaks, and the intensity at the edge of the picture is at least 70% of that at its center. The intensity is substantially the same as with the corrugated condenser for the same separation. To definitely determine whether with this separation there is any consistent difference between the plano-convex and the corrugated systems would require a much more extended series of measurements than was possible to make at the present time. The table does, however, show definitely two things.

First, with every condenser system a much higher screen illumination is obtained with the large than with the small diameter objective.

Second, with a given objective a much higher illumination results with the corrugated condenser at 6½ in. separation than can be obtained with either condenser at 12 in. separation. The fact that owing to its design the corrugated condenser gives an even screen illumination at 6½ in. separation, whereas the plano-convex condenser gives a decidedly uneven or streaked illumination with a separation substantially less than 12 in., points to the conclusion that for

Study Lessons for the Projectionist

Due to the e. m. f. induced in the metal itself eddy currents are set up which in addition to consuming energy generate a large amount of heat. In order to cut down these eddy currents the cores of the field magnets are laminated.

The losses of a generator may be grouped as follows: Mechanical losses, copper losses, and iron losses.

The mechanical losses are those due to friction and to windage.

The copper losses are those due to the resistance of the windings and may be calculated as I^2R, this should be taken for both the field and the armature windings.

The iron losses include the loss due to the eddy currents of the fields mentioned above and also to that of the armature. The armature core is therefore laminated and while this does not appreciably cut down the effect of the magnetic circuit yet it decreases the local effect of these eddy currents. The thinner the laminations the more effective is this method of cutting down this loss.

As has already been stated the terminal voltage for both a shunt and series generator varies considerably with a change in load. The relation of the change in voltage between no load and full load at a constant speed is known as the regulation of the generator and is given by the following equation.

$$\text{Voltage regulation} = \frac{\text{no load voltage—full load voltage}}{\text{full load voltage}}$$

Generator Characteristics:

Regulation of separately excited generator.

The curve, Fig. 79, which is known as the external characteristics of a generator shows the relation between the terminal voltage and the line current or load. For the separate excited machine driven at a constant speed and with a constant excitation on the terminal voltage falls with an increase of load. This fact is due to the increase in armature reaction and to the copper loss in the armature winding.

Regulation of shunt generator

The curve for a constant speed shunt generator is shown by Fig. 80. In the case of this machine the voltage drops as the current taken from the machine is increased since, the flux is reduced by armature reaction, the copper loss of the armature increases with the load, the field excitation is dependent on the terminal voltage and as this falls off the excitation decreases and with a complete short circuit there is no exciting current flowing in the field circuit so that the terminal voltage is zero.

Regulation of a series generator

In a series generator if it were not for the armature reaction and the resistance of the armature winding, the terminal voltage would increase indefinitely with the load since the load current also excites the fields. Fig. 81 shows the regulation curve for such a generator.

This type of generator is sometimes used as a constant current generator for the operation of arc lamps in series. For this work an automatic regulator is connected in the circuit in order to control voltage for any variation of current.

Regulation of a compound generator

A compound generator combines the features of a shunt and series type of machine. Although the magnetic field set up by the shunt winding may decrease the additional lines set up by series winding will hold the total number of lines practically constant.

Fig. 82 shows the variation of the terminal voltage with the load. If the effect of the series winding is such that the terminal voltage increases when additional load is added and thus maintains a higher voltage at full load than at no load, the generator is said to be over compounded.

When a compound generator is so wound that the voltage at full load is the same as that at no load the generator is said to be flat compounded.

to the fact that they are not able to properly bring out the artistic effects on the screen which the director and camera man at the studio so skillfully managed to reproduce on the sensitive film. In the interest of definition and depth of focus the camera man very carefully adjusts his lens opening and employs the artificial illumination which most nearly approximates that of daylight in quality and intensity. In order that this same picture may be faithfully reproduced on the screen the same quality of light with the proper intensity should be used in the projection. In ordinary photography the color values of the objects in the picture are recorded in corresponding values of black and white, and it has been found that certain qualities of light are better suited than others for giving the true interpretation of these shadings on the screen. In the projection of colored motion pictures the need of light rich in blue and violet is too apparent to escape the notice of even the casual observer.

Many efforts have been made to increase the intensity of the reflected light from the screen. Some have increased the current of the arc, but this causes unsteadiness and an enormous waste of power. The use of so-called right-angled arcs has been advocated where the negative carbon is at right angles to the positive. An increase of 30% is claimed for this arrangement because of the positive crater being more completely exposed to the condensers, but this arc is really only a modification of the ones most generally used. We find the same undesirable yellowish light and the 30% increase of intensity cannot be detected on the screen without the use of a photometer. Others have sought to improve their show by using various kinds of screens of high reflecting qualities, but as can readily be seen, this gives rise to uneven illumination of the picture as viewed from parts of the auditorium other than the center.

Light on a "Vague Question?

FROM our contributing friend, G. W. Bennewitz of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, comes several suggestions that may be of assistance to G. H. Robbins who told in a letter published in the July 24th issue some troubles he was having with his machine.

Bennewitz's letter reads:

"A Vague Question," I wish to submit the following suggestions which I think will help Mr. George H. Robbins.

First.—I would suggest that he go over all the wiring and make sure that all connections are clean and tight, cut off lamp leads, clean carbon jaws and see that there are no grounds in the lamp or circuit. The Ampere Meter may register 52 Amperes and through some of the above faults he only gets 35 Amperes at the arc.

Second.—If he has not the following condensor combination he should get it at once. For 50 Amperes D. C. Plano Convex Condensors get a 6½ and 7½, Meniscus Bi-Convex get a 6½ and 8½, spaced as close as possible without touching. Never space the condensors more than 1/16 inch apart. With the Plano combination the center of the combination should be 16½ inches from the aperture. With the Meniscus combination the center of the combination should be 18¾ inches from the aperture.

Third.—Be sure that you have the positive wire on the upper carbon jaw. A simple test is to strike an arc and break it after burning a few seconds. The positive carbon will stay red longer than the negative, if you have the positive on the lower carbon jaw reverse the wires. Always carry a well formed crater on the positive carbon at an angle of 55 degrees.

A Real Automatic Arc Control

The Peerless Automatic Arc Control is made for use on all projectors having direct current at the arc. The device is so sensitive that less then one sixty-fourth of an inch increase in gap will start the motor and bring the carbon back to the proper position. Operation is so slow and delicate that the carbon movement is not noticeable to the eye.

Practically frees the operator from giving any attention to the arc, and enables him to attend to other duties. Durably made of best materials. Can be adjusted to maintain any desired arc gap.

ONE EXHIBITOR'S MISTAKE

One of the most beautiful houses on the Hudson, recently opened, which cost about $100,000, had every known equipment WITH ONE exception, WHICH WAS THE SCREEN. The manager admitted that he was not limited to any amount of money for equipment and yet he had a canvas screen, and then wondered why he could not get a decent picture. Of course he came to us, and we are going to remedy his trouble with MIRROROID.

THERE ARE MANY EXHIBITORS MAKING THE SAME MISTAKE. THEY HAVE SPENT MONEY FOR EVERY CONCEIVABLE DEVICE FOR MAKING PERFECT PROJECTION AND YET THEY ARE PROJECTING ON CANVAS, WITH HALF OF THE LIGHT BEING LOST THROUGH THE BACK AND THE OTHER HALF LYING "DEAD" ON THE SURFACE.

TO ANY EXHIBITOR WHO WISHES HELP IN PROJECTION OUR ENGINEERING AND PROJECTION DEPT. WILL BE GLAD TO ADVISE YOU FREE OF ALL CHARGE AND WE WILL GUARANTEE YOU PERFECT PROJECTION.

Condenser Design

highest illumination efficiency the corrugated condenser used at 6½ in. separation is the most desirable condenser to use in connection with the Mazda projection lamp.

Conclusions

From the foregoing experiments as illustrated by diagrams, measurements and photographs it is apparent when using the incandescent lamp as an illuminant that:

First, a relatively large diameter is to be preferred.

Second, a short separation between the condenser and aperture plate, suited of course to the diameter and focus of the objective, is advantageous.

Third, the great advantage of the corrugated condenser is that an even screen illumination can be secured with a shorter separation between the condenser and the aperture than is possible with the plano-convex condenser system, thereby securing the greatest possible brightness of the picture.

Fourth, to get the greatest screen illumination when using the incandescent lamp the combination of all the optical elements working at their greatest efficiency is required, including good quality reflector, proper adjustment, large diameter objective, and corrugated condenser used at the separation of 6½ in. from the aperture plate for which it was designed.

THIS picture is being projected through a POWERS CAMERAGRAPH. The same machines are used by CAPITOL ENTERTAINMENTS in our other theatres, and also in the BEST theatres in Halifax. That is one reason WHY

CAPITOL ENTERTAINMENTS ARE THE BEST

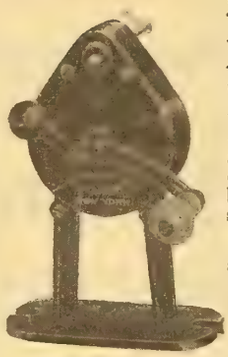
The printed matter above, thrown on the screen by means of a Radio-Mat-Slide, is used by A. M. Crowell of the Capital Entertainments, Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, to interest his patrons in the projection room, and his method of showing successful pictures.

Mr. Crowell believes that the success of his house depends upon the quality of work performed by the projector, and accordingly uses this way of telling the public of one of his means to success.

There is a growing tendency on the part of the exhibitor to realize the importance of the projection equipment, and to make added improvements to better his entertainments. The added cost of new equipment will always be offset by increased satisfaction to the manager, operator and patrons of the theatre.



Mr. Crowell has shown what he thinks of his projector but he is also using much effort to see that his patrons are pleased in every possible way.

With Explanations of the Various Systems Now in Use

THREE-WIRE GENERATORS. The single unit three-wire generator is simply a modification of the two-wire generator in which certain internal connections, together with balanced coils mounted externally or internally, produce a neutral point, which, with the main generator terminals, gives a double voltage or a three-wire system. The commercial three-wire generator is built to take care of from 10 to 20 per cent. unbalanced condition, which means that one side of the three-wire system may be loaded 10 to 20 per cent. more than the other side without involving difficulties. In studios where the load is being constantly shifted as the lamps are plugged in on various circuits, it is practically impossible to keep the unbalance within the limits required by three-wire generator design, due to the rapidly varying conditions which must be met by the studio electrician. In view of the foregoing statements, the ordinary commercial type of three-wire generator is not suitable for studio application where the unbalanced condition will often run as high as 30 to 40 per cent. While some may argue that such a condition is unwarranted and could be prevented by proper care in plugging in the lamps to maintain a better balanced condition of load, we must remember that time is a most valuable asset in film productions.

3 Wire Gen. 3 Wire System

TWO-WIRE GENERATORS WITH BALANCER SET. In larger installations, using a three-wire system, it is practical to employ a two-wire generator of double the required voltage and produce the neutral or third wire by means of a balancer set. This balancer set consists of two compound-wound generators direct connected on the same shaft and mounted on a common base, mechanically. Electrically, they are interconnected across the leads of the two-wire machine and the electrical connection between the two units of the balancer set form the neutral or third wire. When one side of the system becomes loaded more than the other side, the fields of these two machines are interconnected in such a manner that the generator on the side with the lightest load becomes a motor and drives the other generator as a booster. In the event that both sides of the system are balanced both units of the balancer "float" on the line. The unbalance is limited to the capacity of the balancer unit used.

TWO TWO-WIRE MACHINES CONNECTED PERMANENTLY IN SERIES. The three-unit motor-generator set, as the name implies, consists of one motor direct-connected to two generators, one on either side, all being mounted on a common base. The generators are permanently connected in series. The neutral is brought out from the connection between the two generators. It can readily be seen that with such combination, each generator can be loaded to its capacity, independent of the other, thereby giving the set a maximum unbalance up to 50 per cent. of its capacity. There are two other excellent advantages of this type over a straight three-wire generator. First, for any direct-current generator, for the basis of electrical comparison, it is a fundamental of design that the product of the KW. and the revolutions per minute is a constant. It is therefore evident that if instead of one large single generator, we could use two generators each of half the capacity that we could double our speed and still obtain about the same results as far as electrical performance and maintenance are concerned. The cost of the higher speed set is less than the cost of the lower speed set of the same capacity. Second, paralleling two two-wire machines operating as a three-wire system is less complicated than paralleling three-wire rotaries or three-wire generators.

Ways of Announcing Your Music Venture

By Charles D. Isaacson

(Author, " Face to Face with Great Musicians ")

LAST week I stated the main principles which should be kept in mind in preparing the general publicity and advertising behind your musical activities. I wish, if you missed that article, that you would refer to your copy of MOTION PICTURE NEWS before you read the present installment; and if it happens to have gotten out of your hands entirely that you might write the publishers for it. Thus you may have all the facts before you.

Your appeal is to the growing crowd of those who want to hear good music and who haven't the opportunity except as you give it to them; it is also to the students of music and their parents; it is also to the people who might be frightened away with a regular grand opera and symphony entire but who would be glad to take a sample sandwiched between pictures, such as you can present the music.

Last week I gave several hundred sentences and phrases which could be used in stories, advertisements and on posters and lobby displays—as headlines or in the body of the announcements. I feel that if your press man gets the viewpoint he himself will be able to get out real campaigns which will count in dollars. The viewpoint is the thing.

Now to some more specialized appeals.

Each musical instrument has always its followers. For instance, the announcement of several violin solos will always attract the violin public. You can ascertain this by your own tests—by having the artist play only at certain of the shows, and featuring him for those shows and then see the rise or fall of attendance occasioned thereby.

To the violin public (which in your city may be up to several thousand people) anything of a fine violin character is the best kind of bait. In announcing your violin feature, I would surround the publicity with facts and romantic bits about the instrument and great interpreters of it. For instance, an advertisement might be prepared showing old Stradivarius, the founder of the modern violin and its greatest master; pictures of the famous violinists of history—such as Paganini, Heifetz, Elman, Kreisler, etc. Then play up the history of your violinist, making him appear to be the best violinist you can—using bits from his past—the story of the violin he uses. Something very romantic. Then what he is going to play—something which appeals to the violin public—some popular classic like the Romance of Wieniawski or the Caprice Basque or the Gypsy Airs of Sarasate or a part of Mendelssohn's concerto, etc. Of course if you engage somebody for a special affair, or if you catch some artist on tour, you can get the concert public by and large right into your theatre.

If You Want Some Suggestions for Newspaper Stories About Music—

just ask Mr. Isaacson to send along his ideas to you. He'll be glad to help; and he's at your service under the auspices of the News.

PUT YOUR MUSIC PROBLEMS UP TO ISAACSON

To give you the kind of directions I mean I will quote from my book " Face to Face with Great Musicians."

" The other day I heard a great violinist. He is noted for his marvelous tone, for the rich, sensuous beauty of his music; for the deep-reaching resonance of each golden note. Thousands congregate wherever he is booked to play—and as he stands alone before the multitude he brings out of his violin lovely melodies, which rouse fiery emotions in the breast of all who listen.

" After the concert we were together in his home, and the violinist played again for me. How lovingly he handled the instrument, gently taking off the silken wrappings, inspecting the violin from all sides, slightly adjusting the bridge, tuning the strings, and bringing the rest under his chin. Scarcely had the bow touched the string when the notes rang out, so that it seemed as if the violin itself and not the artist were the intelligence. Out of the little thing of wood and gut came messages of heavenly beauty, lifting the prostrate soul to ecstacies more divine than ever are touched by earthly beings.

" 'Inspired artist,' I murmured.

" 'Marvelous violin,' he answered, and he gave it into my hands, as a mother would intrust her child to a dear friend. 'Look at it, what a symphony of color and grace it is.'

" I clasped it in my fingers, held it to the light and read the label inside—there written in a scrawly hand was 'Antonius Stradivarius Cremonensis Fecit, Anno 1724.'

" 'A Stradivarius,' I cried with delight.

" 'Yes an Antonio Stradivarius of his best period,' the artist answered.

" Just then came a message calling him away. 'And if you will pardon me for a moment, I will leave you with my Strad for a little tete-a-tete.'

" I tried the instrument under my chin, ran my fingers up and down the strings to feel the sensation of the neck under my hand—brought the bow down and essayed a chord or two. I held it at arms' length, trying to devour it with my eyes. An Antonio Stradivarius of old Cremona!

" And then it seemed as though I must have closed my eyes, or something happened; for I was no longer where I thought, but walking along the quaintest street you ever saw. I looked up at the signs to learn where I had lost myself, and I read, 'Antonio Stradivarius, His Workshop.' Cremona, Italy! Old-fashioned people all about me, and I dressed in the garb of long ago.

" I will enter the shop—Antonio?—upstairs, signor. I mount a flight of wooden steps, and walk into the room. A pretty senora courtseys and begs for my message. 'I would like to buy a violin,' I answer. 'I will call father.' 'Please do not disturb him,' I ask. 'Let me go into the shop and talk with him there.'

" 'Yes, signor.'

" Then into a large room with open sunlit windows all around. The ceiling has raw beams, and about the walls, suspended from nails, are violins, parts of violins, lutes, 'cellos, basses, violas da gamba. In the corner stand basses, and at half a dozen benches are young and old men bent over their work. In the very center of the room is a large table, and on the bench nearby is seated a very old man. He is tall and gaunt; he wears an apron and on his head a woolen cap.

" The old man takes me about the room, and inspects the work of his assistants Now, Francesco, that will never do, you must smooth that much finer, much more slender at the ends. And, Omobono, my boy, you better leave the sound post to me, before it goes; I will adjust that. Ah, here is my good assistant, Joseph; you have my ideas very well. You see the inside of this violin. That little post under the bridge—that is the soul of the violin; it holds the vibrations of all the parts into one harmonious rhythm. The violinist draws his bow, my friend; what do you suppose happens? The strings vibrate, the black finger board here vibrates, the belly and the back vibrate, the sides vibrate, the air inside the violin vibrates—and the little slender piece of wood is the controller. Look, I move it a bit; listen, what a difference; I move it the other way—oh, not good, but the right place; that will do.

" 'Here is the wood for the sides, and here is the wood for the back, and here is pine wood for the belly. It comes from the lower parts of the Alps, and all of it is cut only from the southern sides of the trees. Here is sycamore for the back, the neck and the sides. The wood must be nursed and cured and kept just so, until it is alive for me. Some stuff is cold and lethargic, other kinds are responsive and obey the violinist.

"'You see these curves at the side, I remodeled them; you see these f-holes at the top—I made them straighter and more slender, for the air current to come out with more delicacy. In the violin are fifty-eight to seventy-two parts, and every part is so important I cannot slight one.'

"While this dialogue was going on a long-haired gentleman came in; and all arose to bow to him.

"'Ah, Signor Corelli,' Stradivarius called out, 'I have the violin for you now to play for me. Listen,' and the maker went into another room and brought forth an instrument, which he handed to Corelli. 'I want to have you particularly listen to the purity of the highest harmoniques on the E string; I want you to listen to the lowest and fullest open note on the G string. Try it'—and Corelli lifts the instrument to his chin, and performs one of his difficult sonatas.

"'Splendid, Antonio,' he cries with delight, and the violin maker rubs his hands violently as he listens to the child of his hands in the glorious care of a master musician. 'Now, please, Corelli, handle with greatest care—wrap well at nights and on damp days in woolen cloths; when it is cold keep the violin in a warm place—not too hot, you know. Choose the strings with absolute taste—better let me furnish you when you need them. Let not unskilled hands profane the finger board, and bring it back to me every once in a while that I may look it over, and correct any trouble.'

"It seemed to me that with the exit of the instrument the old gentleman sighed as if he were parting with a dear, dear friend.

"'Another gentleman,' Gina called.

"'Have him come in, my dear,' and a young dandy entered.

"'What do you charge for a violin, Signor Stradivarius?" the customer asks.

"'Well, I will tell you. Woods are high these days, and labor is going up in price, besides I personally will cut and inspect the making of the violin, and in it will go my signed labels, as I do with all my finest customers. It will be very stylish—it will make you very much admired to own a violin of mine. There are only a little over two thousand in the world.

"'The price, Signor Stradivarius?'

"'Yes, oh, yes, to you, sir, $24.'

"'Is that the best you can do?' the buyer haggles.

"'Yes, that is my price, and I never go below it—'

"I feel a violent tug at my shoulders, and flop, all Cremona, Stradivarius, and his shop are gone. Over me the artist is standing—my great violin friend. 'Did you have a good tete-a-tete with the violin? What do you think of my Strad.? Has n't it a glorious tone? I had lots of trouble getting it. Strads are getting terribly scarce now—not more than two hundred on record. Do you think it is worth the $24,000 I paid for it?'"*

Along the same lines as this bit about Stradivarius. You can see the appeal in this extract taken from the same volume:

"The auditorium is crowded. The stage is dark, save for a little line of light which falls on an advancing figure. He moves up to the front, and the whole audience seem to stiffen up with a mingled sense of horror and wonder. The light catches his face, and graves yawn and ghosts shriek. White as a ghoul in the yellow moonlight, gaunt and shrunken and hollowed. His eyes, large and green and ancient, tell of sad, wild tales.

"His figure, long and thin, is curved like a snake about to spring.

"He does not walk—he undulates and jumps with wierd little motions—his arms and shoulders are in continual activity—like a Uriah Heep. "'T is the devil's son,' whispers an awe-stricken woman at our side, 'every one says so. At night, when he's all alone, the Evil One enters his room and embraces him, and he tells him how to go forth and deliver his message. He's a wicked one—I'm sure he's brought me here against my will.'

"And then comes the answer of her companion: 'And such a miser. He steals into one's city—lures all the good folk to his wicked music, robs them of their money, and then steals away. He's worth more than kings and nobles. But he'd never spend a sou—lives on devil's food. He's a vampire, sucks our money. Look how he moves—like a crawfish. It's terrible. There are Paganini waltzes, rondos, caps, hats, books, dishes. It's awful to make a figure of such a devil. Did you hear of Lyser's painting him? He said: "The devil guided my hand while I did it," and I believe it's true.'

"Now the sound of a plaintive note silences the vicious voices that whisper superstitons and lies. It rises like a cry in the night, and echoes and re-echoes across the moor his music pictures. And the slow-drawn melody gives way to a wild, dramatic strain. Malicious and frenzied grave sprites whirl in a dervish dance.

"See that shaking, straining, maddened figure of the violinist! He smashes his bow upon the strings, and in a passage of terrific speed runs from the lowest G to the uppermost half-note on the E. In arpeggios and thirds, and chords; in chromatic succession, the notes pile up, beneath those wiry, bony fingers, which seem more automatic than human.

"If the audience believes Paganini devil or of the flesh of the Evil One, then now truly they acknowledge themselves under the spell of Hell! Never did a crowd of musicgoers become so mad—shrieking and yelling themselves hoarse. They fear Paganini, but they cannot escape his music.

"Recall after recall will not suffice, and Paganini bows in his clumsy, circular motion. Someone whistles and calls him lobster! Others take it up. They are determined to let him know that they believe him to be of a sinful breed.

"'Paganini—Nicolo Paganini,' he says to himself, 'will you let this insult pass? I will fix them.' So, raising his violin to his chin, as if to play, he gets their silence, then very dramatically he says: 'I will give you imitations of birds and other animals.' Sure enough come the voices of nightingales and parrots and dogs and cats. Then, bringing his bow right over the bridge, he produces a peculiar sound: 'Hee-haw.' Shouting out, Paganini cries, 'That is the voice of the donkey who laughed,' and again he plays, 'Hee-haw.'

"Well, the concert is over—the people pass out, but we are fortunately able to meet Paganini in his own rooms.

"We find him—he is practicing again. His loved violin is hardly ever out of his hands. It is told of this violin, that once Paganini had to choose between it and a woman he loved—and he gave up the woman.

"'My sweetheart,' he whispers to the instrument—he can hardly talk above a whisper—and no Romeo ever put more passion into his love-making, 'my sweetheart, once I almost lost you. It was when I was very young. I had just tasted the joy of triumph—the world was at my feet. I was seeing new cities, travel was in my blood. I thirsted for romance and adventure. I began to gamble and I lost—lost heavily. But I would never give up. I believed in my lucky fate. Despite losses and defeats, I always knew something would come to my rescue. One night, all my money was gone, all that I earned in my big concert of the day. I had nothing for my hotel, for my travel to the next city where I was to play the following night. Some one dared me to put up my violin. I was desperate—I played—and lost. Gone, my sweetheart, they took you from me. I cried, I wept, I shrieked, I was going to drown myself in the river. And then came a friend—he bought you back for me. That cured me, my beloved. Never did I risk you again, and never did I approach the gaming table from that day forth. You are everything to me.'"

Next week I will show you how I would develop the piano public.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"A London Bobby"

(One-Reel Rolin Comedy Featuring "Snub" Pollard—Released Through Pathe)

THIS is one of "Snub" Pollard's best and should amuse wherever it is played. It's principal features lies in the fact that the story or idea is a good one and is developed in a humorous way.

Pollard injects a lot of action into his part and is ably assisted by the supporting cast.

The opening scene shows a "wild fight" taking place between the inhabitants of "tough town" and the star who plays the role of a London bobby is called upon to quiet the disturbance.

When he arrives upon the scene one look tells him that it is no fit place for a lone cop to be found. As he looks the fight over from a distance, he is surprised to see a big burly ruffian enter the affray and knock out all the combatants. This done, the "burly one" dissappears and Pollard sneaks out from his hiding place, blows his whistle, and is posing in the act of a conqueror when his superior arrives.

For his supposed good work, "Snub" is promoted to the job of "traffic cop" and is told to be pleasant to the horses. He follows orders and is getting along nicely, especially with the ladies when he is called in to subdue a "woman beater."

In his anxiety, however, he selects the wrong man and in a very funny comedy situation in which acrobatics play an important part, "puts him away."

When the real offender appears and "Snub" finds him to be the "knockout champion," he takes to his heels with the bully in hot pursuit.

The scenes which follow are full of pep, action and original ideas and should keep an audience in a humorous state until the finish.

FRANK LEONARD.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

"Mary's Little Lobster"

(Fox Sunshine Comedy—Two Reels)

A NUMBER of the old Sunshine favorites are in this picture. They include Slim Sommerville, Bobby Dunn and Gus Pixley, and the troupe of Sunshine girls. Hampton del Ruth supervised the production, and Edward Clune was the director. Sommerville's height provides opportunities for comedy that have not been neglected. We think the best laugh is where he rescues a girl from a leaky boat by wading out to her, politely doffing his hat, and carrying her in. His deadly seriousness adds to the comedy.

There is hardly any story, but the picture opens in a young ladies seminary with a mechanical contraption for bouncing the pupils out of their beds, down a chute-the-chutes into a swimming pool. They take their mathematics lesson by galloping about the beach. Sommerville and his pal enter the school and attempt to make away with the safe. After a chase it is revealed that the safe only contains a monkey, which ends the picture.

There are some funny scenes at a summer resort—especially when the cross-eyed man tries to hit the protruding head with a baseball. We consider it well up to Mr. Del Ruth's standard, filled with humorous types who are made to bring forth all the laughs that are afforded by their own peculiarities.

MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Hot Dog"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—One Reel—Fox)

THIS latest cartoon is taken up mostly with the old stuff of a dog being made into frankfurters and still retaining his doggishness, so to speak. Jeff makes friends with a stray mutt (meaning a dog) and the best spot in the reel is here, when the animal's friendly advances and display of his loving disposition are very naturally drawn. The dog is captured and turned into "hot dogs." They still recognize their old friend and follow him about. The vendor tries to recapture them and there is quite a long chase. But they escape and live happily with Jeff forever after. Mutt plays an unimportant part in the picture.

MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Ruth of the Rockies"

(15-Episode Serial—Pathe)

FROM the opening episode of this serial, with Ruth Roland starring, there is good promise of plenty of Western action and good modernized thrills. An aeroplane makes its appearance in the opening episode. There is also evidences of forthcoming mystery. One character acts in a very unusual fashion and is called "The Unknown". Another, an aviator, is a mysterious friend of the heroine, and manages to keep his face from being seen.

The story does not take long to get going. There is a gang of evildoers known as "The Inner Circle". One of their pastimes is smuggling. Ruth Roland plays a waitress in a Broadway restaurant who unwittingly becomes mixed up in their villianous enterprises. She agrees to aid the detective in rounding them up and the story shifts to the West, where the first episode ends with a hold-up and a leap from an aeroplane.

Ruth Roland should continue to be as popular with the serial fans as ever in this. In the cast are Herbert H. Heyes, Thomas Lingham, Jack Rollens, Fred Burns, William Gillis and Gilbert Holmes. The story is from the novel "Broadway Bab," by Johnston McCully. George Marshall was the director and Al Cawood turned the crank.

—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Don't Weaken"

(Mack Sennett—Paramount Comedy)

CHARLES MURRAY, Ford Sterling, Jim Finlayson, "Baldy" Belmont and Harriett Hammonds are the principals in supplying the comedy contained in good measure in Mack Sennett's latest comedy offering, "Don't Weaken", directed by Mal St. Claire under the supervision of Mack Sennett. To say that Charley Murray is just as funny as ever is saying the largest "mouth full" that we can possibly handle at one time and this applies in particular to his entrance into the prize ring. This comedy has its share of laughs and gets away, if that be possible, from the usual. It's funny—that's enough. JOSEPH L. KELLEY.

MEN AND EVENTS IN THE FILM CENTRES

With "News" Correspondents

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

ATLANTA

Perhaps the most interesting bit of news of the past week was of the consolidation of the Southeastern Pictures Corporation and the Criterion Film Service; by which the Southeastern is to release all subjects formerly handled by Criterion in this territory. This will include Clara Kimball Young subjects, and other Equity pictures, Pioneer, Premier, and Special Pictures. Adolph Samuels, president of Southeastern, and M. A. Lightman, president of Criterion, signed the consolidation papers on the 18th.

Associated Producers, the Atlanta office of which is headed by Frank Hudson, formerly branch manager of the Atlanta office of Pathe, expect to move into their new building, corner of Bartow and Walton streets, on September 1. This building, by the way, is owned by the Southeastern Pictures Corporation, and will house besides Associated Producers, at least half a dozen other important concerns.

September 1st will be "Moving Day" for the film exchanges of Atlanta. Among the "movers" will be the Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, now at 73 Walton street, who will take Southeastern's old building at 61 Walton.

BUFFALO

The Rivoli, Buffalo's newest neighborhood house, opened to the public on Sunday, August 22, with Clara Kimball Young in "For the Soul of Rafael," and a big program of special subjects. The Rivoli, which is on Broadway, near Fillmore avenue, was erected by Joseph Kozanowski at a cost of $250,000. The house has a seating capacity of 1,700 of the first floor, balcony and gallery. A ten-piece orchestra accompanies the pictures. Harry T. Dixon is the manager. The theatre is constructed of red tapestry brick with white terra cotta trimmings. Prices week days are 11, 22 and 28 cents, and 11, 25 and 33 cents on Sunday. The interior is elaborately decorated.

Dan Savage opens the local branch of Educational Films, Inc., on September 1 in the Palace theatre building, 327 Main street. Mr. Savage will handle the Chester, Christie, Mermaid and Torchy comedies, the Chester Screenics and the Bruce Scenics.

Shea's Criterion, which is being operated by the Shea Amusement company in association with the Paramount organization, will open Monday, September 6, with "Something to Think About." The house, which is the old Star, has been completely rebuilt at a cost of $65,000. Harold B. Franklin will supervise the presentations. Harry Wallace, president of the Musicians' Association of Buffalo, will conduct the orchestra and Jack Sawyer, former chief projectionist of Shea's Hippodrome, will be house manager. Al. R. Sherry will be stage manager. The super-productions of Famous Players-Lasky will be shown almost exclusively and the runs will be for two weeks.

George Cook, formerly with Vitagraph, has been engaged by Bob Murphy, Pioneer manager, as a member of the latter's sales staff. "Buck" Taylor, former Pioneer manager, was in town the week of August 16. He expects to re-enter the game in Buffalo this fall.

Harold B. Franklin presented an elaborate program at Shea's Hippodrome the week of August 22 in celebration of the institution's sixth anniversary. A special stage setting, floral displays, a noted soloist from New York and a big film bill, were features of the week.

Buffalo newspaper men were the guests of Hugh Rennie, manager of the First National office, at a private screening of "Go and Get It," in Shea's Hippodrome, Monday evening, August 23. Mr. Rennie and Eddie Hayes, sales manager, had a conference with the sales staff Sunday and Monday, August 22 and 23.

Samuel Carver, former manager of the Family theatre, has leased the Empire for a number of years and will open the house Monday, August 30, with popular vaudeville and pictures. The Empire is the former Garden burlesque house and was at one time the home of Shea's vaudeville. The prices will be 25, 35 and 50 cents.

J. S. Woody, general manager for Realart, was in Buffalo Friday, August 20, for a conference with Manager Harry E. Lotz. Mr. Woody is visiting the exchanges in the central district.

F. G. Sliter, Robertson-Cole's district manager, was in Buffalo for ten days recently, during which time he visited exhibitors in the territory with Manager P. H. Smith and had several conferences with the salesmen.

T. W. Brady, Associated Producers' manager, will be ready on September 12 to serve exhibitors in this territory from the new exchange at 145 Franklin street, which Mr. Brady is having elaborately furnished.

Frank Davidson, who has been in charge of projection at the Strand theatre since the opening of that house, will be associated with H. L. (Hub) Taylor, in the operation of the new Buffalo Theatre Supply Company in Franklin street, near Chippewa. The company will act as distributors for the Rialto Theatre Supply Company of Minneapolis.

The Arcadia, now the Star, and under the control of the General Theatres corporation, opened September in a complete new dress.

Holmes and Cowling End Camera Tour

BURTON HOLMES and his chief cinematographer, Herford T. Cowling, arrived from Europe aboard the Aquitania on last Saturday. Mr. Holmes had been abroad for nearly three months, gathering material for the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures. Mr. Cowling has been at work in the field for more than fourteen months.

After the two travelers met in Paris during June of this year, they set forth on their expedition going first to Egypt. From Cairo they worked into Palestine terminating this phase of their trip at Jerusalem. Their next stopping place was Constantinople, and from here they proceeded to the Italian Alps where a large amount of scenic material was secured.

Before meeting Mr. Holmes, Mr. Cowling had visited Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Poland. He had also been to Africa, visiting Algiers and Tunis and penetrating, it is said, far into the Sahara. Later he toured Sicily, Italy, the French Riviera and the Pyrenees.

INDIANAPOLIS

Henry K. Burton's summer photoplay season at English's Opera House ended with the week of August 15, to make way for the regular winter legitimate season. The season has been a tremendous financial success as well as a triumph for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, whose films were run exclusively.

"Suds," with special exploitation in the form of a local "Mary Pickford" presiding over a wash tub in front of the theatre, went over big at the Circle last week.

To make way for wrecking operations preparatory to the erection of a $1,000,000 photoplay theatre on the site, guests of the Hotel English has been notified that they must find other lodgings by Nov. 30.

The ninety-nine year lease of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation upon part of the hotel site takes effect January 1. It is expected that the theatre will be completed by next Fall.

Motion pictures were used in the initiation of lodge candidates in Indianapolis for the first time by the Security Benefit Association on August 22.

SAN DIEGO

The Pickwick theatre, for many years in the motion picture field, but more recently the home of musical stock, has been taken over by Dwight L. Hill, who has been connected with film houses for a long time in other cities. Under his direction the Pickwick is being thoroughly renovated and remodeled at an expense of approximately $15,000 by the Winter Construction Company from plans by Architect William H. Wheeler. The New Pickwick will have a seating capacity of 650, and the house is to run Paramount releases. The matinee prices will be 20 cents for any part of the house, with evening prices at 30 cents. The opening date set by Manager Hill was August 22. Girl ushers will be used in the Pickwick.

DETROIT

The Detroit Pathe branch has announced the promotion of Arthur Hoganson from feature salesman to feature sales manager; and the promotion of Eddie Murphy, for five years manager of the Gladwin Park theatre, Detroit, to succeed Hoganson as city salesman.

Marshall Neilan's "Go and Get It" has been booked for the opening week of the new La Salle Garden theatre, which will give its opening performance on Monday, August 30. The theatre's policy will be to give three shows daily, including vaudeville and pictures, and to show continuously on Sundays and holidays. The house has a capacity of 2,500. Bert R. Williams is manager.

A. L. Piker will reopen his Rex theatre, Ironwood, about September 1. The theatre has undergone extensive improvements, including an increase in seating capacity.

Doc Gallup, of Marquette, will open the New Delft theatre some time in September. The new house has cost nearly $200,000, and will seat 1,200 persons, all on one floor. The present Delft theatre will act as the entrance to the new playhouse.

W. S. McNorgan has joined the sales force of the Educational and is making a trip through Michigan.

Will Baker, the Standard salesman for Michigan, has resigned. He will become associated with Joe Optner in the operation of theatres in the State after a short vacation.

Views of Storm at Sea Taken on Dry Land

The big storm scenes shown in Metro's production, "The Mutiny of the Elsinore," were filmed on land not on sea, strange to relate. A ship was originally chartered at San Francisco, and most of the sea-scenes were taken aboard this vessel while cruising in the Pacific. Nature, however, while presenting realistic atmosphere for the storm views, did not provide for adequate lighting facilities, so the storm scenes had to be taken in the Hollywood studio, where an exact reproduction of the deck of the sailing vessel was built on a rocker to give the proper rolling effect. Tons of water were projected across the deck, says Metro, while flashing lights simulated lightning.

"THE GREAT REDEEMER"
(Tourneur-Metro)

Van Loan Contributes Another Winner

H. H. VAN LOAN comes through again—this time with a Western story that has all the thrills of an early Bill Hart picture; the unexpected incidents of a Griffith spectacle; the intermittent touches of tragedy and pathos of "Broken Blossoms" and the climax of "The Man Who Came Back"—all incorporated with dramatic finesse in his latest work, "The Great Redeemer," directed by Clarence Brown, under the supervision of Maurice Tourneur, with House Peters and Marjorie Daw doing the honors in the straight western roles, and Jack Macdonald and Joseph Singleton carrying the parts of the heavy characters.

"The Great Redeemer" is a fine example of cooperation in story, continuity, direction, production, camera work and acting—in short—each and everyone who had a hand in this work is due credit, pro rata, as his or her part relates to the whole. Van Loan gave them a story with which they couldn't go wrong, particularly with Maurice Tourneur sitting on the side lines as coach and Clarence Brown holding the megaphone. To Van Loan goes the major credit for he has taken the Western drama, dressed it with new and original ideas as to incident, sequence and variety of dramatic moments and gives to an audience a picturized version that holds intense interest for young and old, man or woman, and one that will go with equal success in the house of the slums, the neighborhood house or the palatial theatre to which they arrive in limousines. Van Loan has fashioned his message in the language of all—speaking to the underworld, the boulevards of society, the bread lines, the vast stretches of the Western country and even goes into the church with his message, reaching all kinds and all classes. He has much the same talent for dressing old themes in new and attractive raiment, as C. Gardner Sullivan, and does his work with the same consummate skill. Unlike Sullivan, Van Loan has a more defined faculty for variations in his themes as his two late works, "The Virgin of Stamboul" and "The Great Redeemer" will attest—as unlike in theme and plot as daylight and darkness. His "The Great Redeemer" will stand as the best modern Western drama and one of the best Western dramas ever written for the screen. He has reached every class with his message and when all things are considered in estimating the success of a photodrama, this is the big factor.—Length, 6 reels.—Joseph L. Kelley.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The story deals with one Dan Malloy, a highwayman whose daring has aroused the country far and wide. He and his gang stage a train hold-up and following the daring deed, Dan retreats to the mountains to a lonely cabin where the girl who in defending herself, wounds him. The girl admires him for his bravery and they become friends, he promising to go straight. His friends advise him of a shipment of gold, however, and he takes one last chance. It develops that the sheriff has suspected him and "planted" the gold shipment. Dan is captured and sentenced to ten years in prison. While there he sees the error of his ways. His talent for drawing leads him to spend his time in sketching. Across the aisle a condtmned man is imprisoned. Dan draws on the walls of his cell a picture of the crucified Christ. The condemned man is imbued with belief in God and Dan's work is hailed as a masterpiece. When freed he returns to the girl, a worthy mate.

PROGRAM READER

"The Great Redeemer," one of the most unusual Western melodramas filmed during the history of the silent drama, is the work of H. H. Van Loan, who will be remembered as the author of "The Virgin of Stamboul." It carries a story which we all will be the better for having learned. House Peters and Marjorie Daw are in the principal parts. It was directed by Clarence Brown under the supervision of Maurice Tourneur. "The Great Redeemer" is a reformed highwayman who works wonders while spending a sentence of ten years in prison. Jack Macdonald and Joseph Singleton, two of the screen's best character men, are seen in important roles.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the name of H. H. Van Loan. Mr. Van Loan has made a reputation for his vivid writings for the screen, his most recent success being "The Virgin of Stamboul." Also mention prominently the name of the supervising director, Maurice Tourneur, who will be remembered as the director of "The Blue Bird." Mention the names of the cast—all of which are favorably known. Run a short synopsis of the story as it is one that is sure to attract.

CATCH LINES

H. H. Van Loan's latest big success since "The Virgin of Stamboul."

A Maurice Tourneur production.

A reformed bandit works miracles in prison.

The greatest Western drama in years—"The Great Redeemer."

"THE RIGHT TO LOVE'
(Fitzmaurice Production—Paramount)

Worthy Successor to "On with the Dance"

AS a producer and director of society drama, George Fitzmaurice has few, if any, equals on the screen. With that accomplished team of pantomimists, Mae Murray and David Powell, he made a recent big success, "On with the Dance." With this same team he has fashioned from the French play by Pierre Frondaie and Claude Farrere another which bids for the same honors, although wholly unlike the other in every detail. The one deals with life under the White Lights, the other with the unhappy life of an American girl in a Turkish capitol.

Although it is hard to believe that Holmes E. Herbert, as Sir Archibald Falkland, could so entirely ignore the winsome beauty and delicate refinement of Mae Murray, as Lady Falkland, for the cold impassiveness of Alma Tell, as Lady Edith, we console ourselves with the fact that if it were not so, the screen would not have been given this beautiful work of photodramatic art. The story is highly impossible, if not improbable, but since Mr. Fitzmaurice seems to have realized that and to have spent untiring effort toward creating such a splendid production, it is safe to assume that the public will forgive.

Opening with an allegorical prelude that has been staged with all the splendor that its mythical parentage would permit, Director Fitzmaurice has swung into the real dramatic meat of his subject, with every element working at high pitch of perfection. The studio work, meaning the work of the designers and the carpenters, calls for special mention, for it is this part of the late Fitzmaurice picture that contributes a good percentage of the excellence of the work as entertainment. The camera work is also due special mention, stress being laid on the wonderful results obtained from the perfect lighting of Miss Murray and the scattered examples of subdued lighting and its effect.

Numerous incidents in story could be pointed to and branded impossible, but since these faults can be found in a majority of picture dramas, the reviewer would be unduly critical in being specific. Suffice it to say that "The Right to Love" is real entertainment. We saw the picture with a "hard-boiled" operator in the state rights field and it entertained him, which is all the proof needed for the above statement. The cast is one of the best—both collectively and individually—ever assembled. Miss Murray and Mr. Powell do their usual good work, with Miss Murray taking credit for unusual good work in the emotional moments. The youngster, Lawrence Johnston, is destined for bigger work. Ouida Bergere's talented hand is seen in the continuity.—Length, 6 reels.—Joseph L. Kelley.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mae Murray and David Powell, that accomplished team of screen stars whom you remember so vividly in "On With the Dance," are scheduled to appear at the ———— theatre the week beginning ———— in their late success, "The Right to Love," produced and directed by George Fitzmaurice and adapted by Ouida Bergere from the French play by Pierre Frondaie and Claude Farrere, originally titled, "The Man Who Killed." The story is laid in Constantinople, the Turkish Capital, with Lady Falkland (Mae Murray), the unhappy wife of Sir Archibald Falkland (Holmes E. Herbert), an unscrupulous Englishman, high in Turkish political circles. Colonel Loring (David Powell), is assigned as military attache of the American Embassy at Constantinople. He had known and loved Lady Falkland in America before her marriage. He meets her at the Embassy Ball and later learns of her unhappiness and the cruel manner in which Sir Archibald has cast her aside for Lady Edith, an Englishwoman. Sir Archibald with the aid of a worthless friend, compromises Lady Falkland, but not without suffering death at the hands of Colonel Loring, and he is united with the only girl whom he has ever loved and who loves him.

PROGRAM READER

"The Right to Love," the picture in which Mae Murray and David Powell are now appearing, was adapted from the successful French play, "The Man Who Killed," by Pierre Frondaie and Claude Farrere. George Fitzmaurice, who produced Miss Murray and David Powell's last success, "On With the Dance," also directed "The Right to Love." In the cast are seen some of the best known players of the screen, including Alma Tell, Holmes E. Herbert, Marcey Harlam, Frank Losee, Marcia Harris and Lawrence Johnston. The story is laid in Constantinople, the capital of Turkey. One of its most pretentious scenes is that of the Embassy Ball.

SUGGESTIONS

Mae Murray and David Powell—these two have played together in a number of successes. Play up their names with that of the director and producer, George Fitzmaurice. Be sure and mention the names of the supporting cast, as it contains those of well known players. The story is adapted from a famous French play. "The Right to Love" is the second big Fitzmaurice special with Mae Murray and David Powell.

CATCH LINES

Has a wife the right to love?

Strong Cast for Neal Hart

First of Hart Specials, "Hell's Oasis," Shows a Capable Line-Up

THE cast of "Hell's Oasis," the first of the Neal Hart Specials, exhibits one of the strongest groupings ever assembled for a western dramatic feature. Neal Hart's leading lady in "Hell's Oasis" is Betty Brown, who portrays the innocent girl pitched suddenly into the turbulent life of a town where vice and crime reign supreme and the little frame church has a "for rent" sign on it.

Miss Brown is a splendid horse woman and has had three years' film experience. She has previously supported Neal Hart as well as other well known male stars, Lew Cody among them.

The vampire is played by Incz Gomez. She has supported Sessue Hayakawa, Dustin Farnum and other leading stars, and was in Goldwyn's all star cast for "Out of the Storm," as well as Ince's all star cast for "Dangerous Hours."

William Quinn, who plays the heavy in "Hell's Oasis," has supported Warren Kerrigan, Betty Compson, Lew Cody and many others. Mr. Quinn was in legitimate stock over nine years and has played in Lon Chaney and George Larkin productions.

Johnny Tyke, a cowboy who has made good as an actor, is another interesting member of the cast for the Hart picture. Tyke has a national reputation as winner of roping and riding contests and is a professional "Bull-dogger." He has been in pictures eight years and created quite a sensation in the character he portrayed opposite Harry Carey in "Three Mounted Men."

The title of Neal Hart's second production for Pinnacle, now being started at Glendale, California, is "Skyfire." The locale of this story is the Canadian Northwest, and the name of the production carries a reference to the aurora borealis or northern lights. This phenomenon is occasionally visible in the lower latitudes of Canada, and ancient tradition has always connected its appearance with death or calamity of some kind.

The story, "Skyfire," is built around an old Canadian legend—and is said to be not only spectacular scenically but thrill-packed with the mystery suspense movie fans go out of their way to enjoy.

Bud Duncan in Star Series

Starts Series of One-Reelers for Reelcraft; Seeking Beauty Talent

"BUD" DUNCAN, the diminutive comedian of the once-famous "Ham and Bud" team, who is to star in a series of one-reel comedies under the Brand name of "Bud and His Buddies" for the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, has completed his producing organization, and will leave for Hollywood this week, where the pictures are to be made.

Bud Duncan's father will be general manager of the producing company, and has already gone to California to assist Willis Overman, the comedian's personal representative, who has been out on the Coast for the past four weeks engaging the cast, cameraman and other members of the staff and studio.

Bud has remained in New York and is still busy engaging his "Buddies". There is said to be a scarcity of beautiful girls on the Coast, owing to the actions of other producers in contracting for the services of the real beauties, with the result that Bud has determined to take no chances and is planning to engage his good-looking "Buddies" in New York. An attempt has been made to locate the prize winners of recent beauty contests and secure their services.

Federated Increasing Pace

Handling "Nobody's Girl," Monte Banks' Comics; Others Due Soon

THE entrance of Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., as a releasing organization into the motion-picture field marks a step forward in the independent distribution of motion pictures. Federated was formed by a number of progressive and successful independent exchangemen in the United States, who for a long time have been operating independent exchanges in their particular territory. It was decided that by combining their interests it would be possible for them to buy the biggest and best motion pictures produced; that it would be possible for them to conduct national advertising campaigns which is utterly impossible for them to attempt as individuals; that by operating as a unit it would be possible for them to arrange the release of their pictures so that they would be given to the exhibitors in their territory at a specified date. Their theories have already been put into effect, for with this week's announcement the Federated Film Exchanges of America launches an advertising campaign of unusual proportions.

Federated Film Exchanges have already released "Nobody's Girl" a five-reel feature starring Miss Billie Rhodes supported by an all-star cast. They are also distributing a series of eighteen two-reel comedies starring Monte Banks. These comedies are produced by Warner Brothers.

The release date of the first of the four Bessie Love Productions "Bonnie May" will be announced shortly. The second of the Bessie Love series is "The Midlanders" from the novel by Chas. Tenney Jackson, which was published by Bobbs-Merrill.

It was stated by W. E. Shallenberger, general manager of Federated that several other important announcements would be made in the near future. It is the announced intention of the Federated to secure the very best possible productions obtainable, and this new distributing organization offers a market for the producer who is desirous of securing the widest possible distribution for his pictures.

"Tarzan" Campaign Started

Territories Closed for Announced; Inquiries Arrive from All Points

THE selling campaign on the "Son of Tarzan", the big animal jungle serial adapted from the book of the same name by Edgar Rice Burroughs which is being produced by the National Film Corporation for distribution by David P. Howells on the independent market, was instituted last week and started off with a "bang", says David P. Howells.

The folowing territories have been definitely closed, the contracts signed and the first deposit paid: Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, sold to Albert A. Weilland of the Standard Film Exchange of Pittsburgh; Missouri and Kansas to Richards and Flynn of Kansas City; Indiana, to Robert Lieber and Company of the First National Exhibitors Circuit of Indianapolis.

Options have been taken on eastern Pennsylvania, Kentucky and Tennessee, Florida, Georgia, North and South Carolina, Virginia and Alabama by the First National Exchange for those territories. The options are just as a matter of protection until the owners of the exchange can arrive in New York and negotiate the contracts. There is also in the course of negotiation a deal for the entire northwest.

Inquiries and bids have been received from every territory.

"HER HONOR THE MAYOR"
(Fox)

Impossible Story Overacted and Hardly Entertaining

THE producers announce this as a comedy-drama, but it is going to be difficult for any audience to find a laugh in its five reels. There are one or two feeble jokes picturized, but otherwise there is certainly no attempt for humor. It is mostly straight drama—and drama of the heaviest type, crudely executed and tending towards the pathetic. Eileen Percy is the star and is made the youthful mayor of a Middle-West city. As the drama centers chiefly about the people she befriends—a wronged girl, and a repentent fugitive from justice—rather than herself, she has little opportunity to display any emotional ability.

One member of the cast is patently miscast and some others overact. Mere smallness of statue does not give the appearance of youth, and William Fletcher, who plays "Buddy," a high school youth, looks far too old for the part, with the result that some of the scenes, where he romps on the grass and weeps on the star's shoulder, seem to border on the ludicrous. Charles Force, playing the political boss, and Edwin Booth Tilton, as the repentent thief, being forced to go through with outworn dramatic situations, which are neither worked up nor presented in an artistic fashion, are necessarily uninspired in their characterizations. Ramsey Wallace plays opposite the star, but as the romance is neglected to show how the mayoress does good to humanity, he has little to do.

The "types" brought in are overdone. There is the omnipresent musical comedy minister raising his eyes to Heaven, and a suffragette who belongs in burlesque, but never in a picture that is supposed to entertain because it depicts real life.

The story concerns a young girl who is elected mayor out of respect for her dead father. To show that she is a politician she wears bone-ribbed glasses in her office. She sets about cleaning out the political boss, but he holds a threat against "Buddy" over her head. "Buddy" is her adopted brother. However, she finally discovers some dark spot in the politician's past and the matter is cleared up. The story stretches plausability to the utmost when the twenty-year old girl is talked of for the governor's chair. She declines, however, in favor of the man she is to marry.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Eileen Percy, one of the newest and popular of the Fox stars, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— when her latest production, "Her Honor the Mayor," will be shown.

This is a stirring political drama, and is unsually timely in these days when national woman suffrage has become a fact. Miss Percy plays Julia Kennedy, who is elected mayor of a middle sized Western city, out of respect for her dead father, who for years was the leading citizen of the town. She is opposed by Boss McGrath, who fights bitterly against anyone who stands for clean government, and also by the district attorney, who, while greatly admiring Julia personally, does not approve of "petticoat government."

Around these three characters is woven a thoroughly interesting and gripping drama, illustrating the effect of a woman's hand, guided by womanly kindliness and love, as it holds the reins of government. The picture is an adaptation of the Broadway stage success written by Arline Van Ness-Hines and was scenarized by Denison Clift. The direction is the work of Paul Cazeneuve, whose work will be familiar to many moving picture devotees.

Supporting the pretty star are such players as Ramsey Wallace, and Edwin Booth Tilton. Miss Percy will gain many new admirers in this production. There is a pretty romance running through the entire picture, as well as thrilling drama and suspense.

PROGRAM READER

Women in politics, and the good they can do when once they come into office, is the basis of "Her Honor the Mayor," a Fox picture, starring Eileen Percy, which will be the attraction at this theatre on ————. The picture is unusually timely since woman's place in the political world is now undeniably established with the recent adoption of national woman suffrage. Eileen Percy, who has only recently risen to stardom, is fast becoming one of the most popular actresses on the screen.

The story is one that suits her perfectly. It allows her every opportunity, besides bringing up a question that is uppermost in the public's mind today—should women hold political offices? Julia Kennedy, played by the star, believes that they should, and proceeds to convince the rest of the inhabitants of her city, once she has taken office. You should not miss this, for it guarantees a pleasant and thrilling evening's entertainment.

SUGGESTIONS

Considerable interest could be aroused in this picture because it is made timely by woman suffrage. Try to arouse some editorial discussion as to the advisability of women holding political office. If you show this before election, use the teaser "Vote for Kennedy!" Placard this about the town—it will surely arouse interest, and you will have them wondering who "Kennedy" is. Follow this up with further announcements before play date. Get a little story in the paper about the star, if possible. State that she is a typical Irish beauty and has played opposite Fairbanks and Russell.

CATCH LINES

This town elected a woman mayor. Did they regret it? Some did, especially the crooked bosses of the different wards.

Eileen Percy, the Irish beauty, in a stirring play of love and politics.

"HITCHIN' POSTS"
(Universal)

Colorful Story and Splendid Cooperation Make Praiseworthy Picture

UNIVERSAL has provided Frank Mayo with a splendid story, a capable cast and praiseworthy direction in this feature and the result is a picture that should interest in any house regardless of locality.

Romance, thrills, dramatic moments and heart interest are all here and mixed in the correct formula. All of which means that it is a pleasure to witness a production of this kind.

The locale is laid along the Mississippi River and in Texas in the 70's. The former scenes are entrancing, indeed, as we see the old steamboat with its side paddles hove into sight on the lazy river. And then we get a glimpse of its occupants dressed in the costumes of the period, with singing and dancing negros to give the proper atmosphere. The hero is a gambler by profession and it is on these boats that he plies his trade.

The big scenes are laid in Texas at the time when the country was opened. The squatters or boomers, the adventurers and bad men are seen lined up, waiting for the sign to make the "rush." Excitement predominates. And the director has not failed to keep it up. The prairie schooners, with their excited occupants, daring riders, forcing their horses to the limit, others on foot, men, women and children, all running in a wild race and frenzy to seize the land. These scenes are faithfully produced and are worthy of mention.

The picture is strong in love interest and is balanced with dramatic moments in which hero frustrates the villain in his efforts to wrong the heroine.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Universal's latest feature, "Hitchin' Posts," starring Frank Mayo, will appear at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

It is a tale of the old South in the early 70's with the Mississippi River and the Texas oil fields playing prominently in the locale.

Romance, adventure, heart interest and suspense are all here and portrayed in a way that should arouse interest and satisfy the most exacting patrons.

Frank Mayo appears as Jefferson Todd, a southern gentleman who finds himself penniless after the war. The only profession open to him is gambling which he pursues on the steamboats that ply the Mississippi River. And it is on one of these boats that an unfortunate occurrence happens which changes his life, for in winning Colonel Brereton's four race horses, the last of his possessions, the latter commits suicide, leaving behind a beautiful daughter. How the hero makes amends to the young girl and saves her from the clutches of the "bad man" is all told in one of the best pictures Universal has produced to date.

PROGRAM READER

You've seen many pictures in the past whose themes have dealt principally with the great outdoors. Some of them have taken the Great Northwest for their locale, even running as far north as Alaska, while others have brought the scenery and atmosphere of the Hawaiian and Fiji Islands and even China and Japan before us in order to excite and please our imaginations.

But Universal has given us a picture in "Hitchin Posts" with its tale of the old South in the 70's that excells many of the best outdoor pictures ever produced.

It is filled with romance, dramatic moments, thrills and love interest. The hero is a gambler by profession and plies his trade on the old steamboats that dot the Mississippi River.

How he wins the heroine after she has been told that her father committed suicide because he lost all to her lover and how he saves her from the clutches of the villain who has pursued her into a neew country is told in one of the most exciting stories ever written. Frank Mayo is the star and is supported by a wonderful cast.

SUGGESTIONS

Don't be afraid to book this one, Mr. Exhibitor, for it surely has the right ingredients to interest any audience.

Bill Frank Mayo as strongly as you can for he is the main attraction. Tell them that in this feature he excells anything he has ever done before and that he is backed by a story that could not be beaten, as far as interest and excitement goes.

Play up the scenes on the Mississippi River and above all do not forget to exploit the big ones laid in Texas which are splendidly pictured and well worth witnessing.

And do not forget the cast among whom Beatrice Burnham and James Harris do excellent work.

CATCH LINES

See "Hitchin' Posts," a tale of the old South in the 70's where romance lived and intrigue received its just rewards.

She loved him, but then her father had committed suicide because he had lost his all to the young gambler. What did she do? See "Hitchin' Posts."

See "Hitchin' Posts," it is filled with romance, dramatic moments, thrills and heart interest.

Mark Twain made the Mississippi Rivere famous. See "Hitchin' Posts," it has a story that will interest you as strongly as any Twain has written.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the la st twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to April 17, 1920.

"WHISPERING DEVILS"
(Garson-Equity)

A Strong, Well-Acted Drama for a High Class Audience

HARRY GARSSON has taken Henry Arthur Jones' story "Michael and His Lost Angel," found a cast that is capable of handling the dramatic situations it contains, striven mightily, and with good results, to get over the atmosphere of a small fishing-town on the Cornish coast, worked up to a climax swiftly and logically, and so it is that "Whispering Devils" comes to the screen, a drama of the highest order which will be appreciated by an audience of a high order rather than the kind who like serials and Westerns.

The production is a good example of a strong theme handled so artistically that it should not be offensive. The scenes that could have been indecent only impress one as powerful, well-acted steps necessary for the climax. This is partly due to the acting of Conway Tearle and Rosemary Theby, partly to the direction, and somewhat to the sub-titles.

The story is laid in a fishing town on the Cornish coast. Tearle is a stern, ascetic minister who forces a young girl to confess her sin before the entire parish. Esther Ralston, as the girl, does some splendid work. The minister meets a woman and finally realizes his love for her. They are together on a lonely island. This meeting is logically worked out and not improbable. The boatman has left; they must remain until morning and "choose Heaven or hell for both their souls," as the subtitle states. In anguish, he rushes from the house. But he returns and later is forced to confess his sin, as he made the young girl do previously. In the end the dream ending is resorted to, and we see him awakening from his oratory outside the cottage on the island the next morning, his battle won. This dream ending is naturally worked in, but is so subtle that it may be a bit difficult for some to follow.

Conway Tearle is remarkably powerful throughout. The shades of emotion cross his face at will, and there is always that suggestion of reserve power, that has ever marked his acting. Rosemary Theby is also entirely satisfying. If an audience are willing to watch a drama that truthfully depicts a man's inward struggle against evil, instead of an outward struggle against a movie villain, they will be perfectly satisfied.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picturization of Henry Arthur Jones' powerful novel, "Michael and His Lost Angel," will be shown at the ———— theatre on ———— under its screen title of "Whispering Devils." This gripping story loses none of its merit in its translation to the screen, for the principal roles are in the hands of Conway Tearle and Rosemary Theby. Few examples of dramatic acting have reached the screen in recent years which will equal Conway Tearle's characterization of the Welsh minister, who, after meeting a beautiful woman, finds that for the first time in his life the thoughts of a woman and a woman's charm is disturbing the spiritual thoughts of his ascetic life.

The setting of the story is the picturesque Cornish coast, filled with its interesting fishing folk to whom the sea is the giver of life, even though, in his moments of fury, he exacts his toll of a human soul. The atmosphere of this quiet, peaceful country has been well brought out by Harry Garson, who directed the picture. Readers of Mr. Jones' novel will be delighted at the careful portrayal of their beloved characters as well as the careful efforts of the producers to obtain the correct atmosphere of the locale.

Rosemary Theby, one of the most beautiful actresses on the screen, also gives an excellent portrayal of her part. "Whispering Devils" is going to take its place among the strongest and best acted photodramas of the year. It has already elicited great praise from the critics of some of the country's largest newspapers. It will be shown at the ———— for ———— days.

PROGRAM READER

Conway Tearle, one of the most popular leading men of filmdom, who has played with some of the screen's leading actresses, is given the opportunity to star in "Whispering Devils," the powerful drama which in story form was known as "Michael and His Lost Angel," and which is from the pen of Henry Arthur Jones. Playing opposite him is Rosemary Theby. Both these players have a host of followers in every city and village in the land—Miss Theby for her winsome beauty and her faithful characterization of a womanly woman; and Mr. Tearle for the strength and power of his acting, and the vigor and manliness he always displays. "Whispering Devils" is a drama—a drama that depicts with all the artistry and skill which the screen is capable of, the emotions, temptations and struggles of man. It will be the attraction at this theatre on ————.

SUGGESTIONS

You have almost unlimited "hokum" possibilities from the title of this. It also allows opportunities for a stage setting, and a lobby display, but probably its greatest advantage is the possible teaser campaign. Of course, Conway Tearle is not to be neglected because his consistent good work has made him known to a great many fans. Rosemary Theby likewise. Feature these two in the thrilling stills which this picture affords. The third and least important exploitation angle, is the author. He will be known to some, but not a very great many of your patrons.

CATCH LINES

He was a minister—an ascetic—devoting his life to humanity until he met a woman who loved him and whom he loved. Conway Tearle and Rosemary Theby are in this intense drama at the ———— on ————.

"THE UNTAMED"
(Fox)

First Class Western Melodrama, with Star in Likeable Role

THOSE looking for flaws might in all truthfulness say that this is very much made to order melodrama arbitrarily fitted to the star's personality and with a lot of clever tricks of making pictures used to dramatic advantage, but the fact remains that audiences, especially those who like a little action and go to their photoplay fare, will call it first class entertainment and be quite carried away with several of its tense scenes.

Tom Mix portrays a whistling cowboy of the shoot better, ride better and fight harder than any of the other cowpuncher's type, a real blue shirt hero, and by his sincerity in playing, his ability to handle a broncho like a real cowboy that he once was, and his naturalness, whether it be in packing a Colt 45 or making love to wistful eyed little Pauline Stark, who is his leading woman, makes what might have been very much a matinee idol role extremely convincing.

Several of the scenes, where hero meets villain in the struggle of right and love against desire and villainy, carry suspense which will make even the case hardened lean forward in their seats to see which man is the fastest in yanking a gun from its holster. The spectator forgets the obviousness of the story in the way the individual scenes have been done. He is carried away by the rush of events that follow each other in well balanced sequences in which the star does his full share as one of a most competent cast of well-known players.

There is plenty of shooting, plenty of rough riding, any number of good fights and nobody seems afraid of getting mussed up or that a little skin lost from a clinched fist would be considered anything but a part of the day's work. Perhaps the West isn't or never was what this picture portrays it to be, but American audiences like to at least think it was a place where men and women lived and loved, fought and struggled while working out their strange destinies.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Mix, the dare-devil and champion horseman of the screen, is coming to the ———— theatre the week of ———— in William Fox's latest Mix special, "The Untamed," with a supporting cast including Pauline Starke, George Seigmann, P. M. McCullough, James O. Barrows, Charles K. French, Pat Chrisman, Sid Jordan, Major J. A. McGuire, Frank M. Clark and Joe Connelly. This Mix picture is the first of the star's productions to be played as the feature at the new Capitol theatre, New York City, and it represents according to the critics the best work that he has done. The story deals with Whistling Dan (Tom Mix) a Western cow-puncher adopted by a wealthy rancher. The rancher's daughter, Kate, is attracted to Dan, but the old man prohibits her thinking of marrying him giving as a reason that Dan is unworthy. After hearing this news, Dan is given the opportunity to rescue the rancher and his daughter from a band of outlaws and Dan proves worthy of Kate.

PROGRAM READER

"The Untamed," the latest picture in which Tom Mix, the Fox star appears is considered the most thrilling and the best dramatically that the star has done since his career on the screen. In his supporting cast Mr. Mix has Pauline Starke, a star in her own right, as leading woman; George Seigmann, who was seen in D. W. Griffith's "The Hearts of the World," Charles K. French, a well known character man; and some of the best known interpreters of Western types working before the camera. The story deals with a cow-puncher's endeavors to prove himself worthy of the hand of a wealthy ranch owner's daughter who has adopted him.

SUGGESTIONS

Play this Mix picture to the limit. Mention the fact that it played for a full week at the new Capitol theatre, New York city and proved a big success. Give prominence to the names of Mr. Mix's supporting cast, accentuating the name of Pauline Starke who is a star in her own right. Mention the fact that in this picture Mix is shown in his grestest Western role since working before the camera.

CATCH LINES

"THE WHITE CIRCLE"
(Tourneur Production-Paramount)

A Stevenson Novel, Vividly Portrayed by Tourneur

PRODUCERS, and Maurice Tourneur in particular, seem to have, of late, an insatiable passion for storm effects, verified by the fact that no less than four of the current releases, seen within the past two weeks, are punctuated by heavy rains, always accompanied by vivid flashes of lightning. Two of these releases have been Maurice Tourneur productions. But, if there is one director in the field who can stage a realistic storm, rain and lightning effect, it's Maurice Tourneur. In fact, he seems to be a wizard with any kind of effect, as he demonstrated, most thoroughly, in his production of Maurice Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird" and more recently in his production of H. H. Van Loan's Western drama, "The Great Redeemer."

Here, he has taken Robert Louis Stevenson's melodramatic romance, "The Pavilion on the Links," scenarioized under the title, "The White Circle" (a better picture title because it presupposes mystery) and is given, as he would be in most any of the author's works, opportunity to "go the limit" on suggested weirdness and storm effects—all of which he has done to the height of realism. If it's melodrama you want, Mr. Tourneur gives it to you in this offering.

Weirdness and effects, however, may be carried to extreme and in one incident, at least, we think the wizard Tourneur has gone a bit too far, especially for that part of the public who are faint-hearted. We refer to the scene in which he shows a goat gradually swallowed up in a bed of quick-sand. A dummy may have been used, but that doesn't mitigate the unpleasant feeling the sight gives. In the early reels he had occasion to use mob scenes and these have been staged by the expert. The cast needs especial mention, Spottiswoode Aitken doing the honors in a very difficult character part; Harry Northrup, an old and tried villain, is unusually villainous and effective in this work; Jack McDonald, good, Jack Gilbert, who does a fine piece of work, Janise Wilson, pretty and gifted, and Wesley Barry, the freckled-face kid, who does some heavy drama for a change.

"The White Circle" is a typical Tourneur production, with the entertainment element a big factor, the acting supreme, the effects realistic and the story a sizzling melodrama of romance and adventure from the pen of Robert Louis Stevenson—'nough said.—Length, 5 reels.—Joseph L. Kelley.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Robert Louis Stevenson, who has contributed such of his works as "Kidnapped," "Treasure Island" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," to the reading and stage and screen world, comes forth with another of his far-famed works, "The Pavilion on the Links," scenarioized under the title, "The White Circle." It was produced under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, who directed "The Blue Bird" and many other successes for the screen. The story deals with a veteran lawyer who has been entrusted with large sums of money belonging to a secret Italian society. He has gambled the funds and with his daughter and a man who knows the secret, leaves the country to get away from the vengeance of the Italian society. The little party go to a deserted part of the Scottish coast. The Italians find them and rather than take immediate vengeance they bide their time and let the old man suffer a lingering death of fright. In the cast are Spottiswoode Aitken, Janice Wilson, Jack Gilbert, Harry S. Northrup, Jack McDonald and Wesley Barry.

PROGRAM READER

Maurice Tourneur's latest screen production is a screen version of Robert Louis Stevenson's "The Pavilion on the Links," appearing on the screen under the title "The White Circle," with Janice Wilson, Spottiswoode Aitken, Wesley Barry, Jack McDonald, Jack Gilbert, Harry S. Northrup in the principal roles. The production is punctuated by a realistic rain storm, thrilling mob scene and a fire. The story deals with the vengeance of an Italian secret society on an old lawyer with whom funds of the society had been entrusted.

SUGGESTIONS

Robert Louis Stevenson's name as author should be given prominence with Maurice Tourneur's, the director. The original title, "The Pavilion on the Links," should be mentioned as there are many of Stevenson's readers who will not recognize the work as his under its screen title, "The White Circle." Mention the names of the cast. Call attention to the fact that it is a melodrama and a typical Tourneur production.

CATCH LINES

Robert Louis Stevenson's "The Pavilion on the Links," screened under the title of "The White Circle."

The vengeance of the Italian Carbonari.

"THE SERVANT IN THE HOUSE"
(Film Booking Office, Inc.)

Picture Offers Rich Entertainment in Every Department

IT has been some time since Charles Rann Kennedy's spiritual drama, "The Servant in the House," gripped its spectators upon the stage. Those who have seen it in the original version are sure to find in the picturization a work of tremendous import—a subject which maintains its vitality, its forceful message and its powerful characterization, despite the absence of the human voice. For the idea behind it is rich in entertainment values. Rest assured of that. Those who have never seen the original will marvel over a production which carries such a vital theme and will leave the theatre with deep impressions.

It is a perfect adaptation and while it may reveal certain unimportant details which might have been left out for the sake of compression, still the spiritual quality is so strong, the story so vividly told, the interpretation so splendidly real that criticism seems like pernicious fault finding. "The Servant in the House" carries a message which never becomes propaganda because the truth in Kennedy's theme is subtly interwoven with the dramatic contents. He indicts the modern church for its commercial taint, working his message out in the form of symbols. And it cuts deep and will make people think. The action revolves around a Christ-like character who enters a vicar's house to place it in order. The vicar is tormented of soul because he is too weak to find faith. The church in which he preaches is rotten to its foundation, partly due to the drains beneath, partly due to the last resting place of good and bad priests, but mostly due to the corrupt ideas which eminate from its altar.

The servant is the brother of the vicar and the drain man, and when his mission is done truth and faith comes to the curate who has lived a lie and denied sanctuary to the working man. The picture carries a deal of subtitles and the force of its dramatic moments are realized in the fact that the conversation never destroys the interest. The powerful thought and the superb acting by the principals see to that. Jack Curtis, as the drain man, contributes a remarkably human portrayal. Edward Piel as the curate, Jean Hersholt as the servant, and Harvey Clark as the corrupt bishop are equally convincing. The latter's fine sense of humor affords amusing moments. The picture is excellently directed.—Length, 8 reels. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picturization of Charles Rann Kennedy's celebrated play, "The Servant in the House," is coming to the ———— theatre beginning ————. This subject which aroused so much discussion upon the stage, comes to the silversheet with all its spiritual uplift, its fine dramatic quality, its spark of humor, and its vivid characterization. As one will remember, the play brings forth a message in the form of symbols. It is not a preachment. One might call it an indictment of the modern church through its commercial relationship.

The action centers around a Christ-like figure whose mission is to bring the light to the curate and so uplift the real spiritual quality of the church. He is the servant in the house. The curate has lived a lie since he really rose from the gutter through the services of his brother, a drain man. It is the latter who is the only honest character of the household—a man who is not recognized by his brother. The picture is as compact and tense as the play itself and as wonderfully acted by Jack Curtis, Harvey Clark, Edward Piel, Jean Hersholt and others. Lanier Bartlett adapted the play, while Hugh Ryan Conway directed.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ———— takes great pelasure in announcing the appearance of "The Servant in the House" as a picture at the ———— theatre next ————. Many of the ———— patrons will remember this Charles Rann Kennedy play through its vital message, its spiritual quality, its strong drama and vivid characterization. For the benefit of those who are ignorant of its drama we will not go into detail. That would be spoiling the interest. But suffice to say that it offers one of the greatest treats which the ———— has ever shown. "The Servant in the House" is a picture which will make people think. It is superbly acted and directed.

SUGGESTIONS

There is no denying the fact that in this picture you have something valuable. Announce that it is an adaptation of Charles Rann Kennedy's great play which caused a tremendous sensation when it was produced upon the stage. Bring out that it carries a deep and vital message. It has a spiritual quality which must not be overlooked in this day when mankind is groping to be uplifted. It is understood that the company handling it will present it as a road show in some localities and will also release it independently. It is a picture which is unusual and which must not be overlooked if you measure your box-office receipts with an artistic hand. Play up the title, the author, and the message the play carries. Don't overlook a single trick in advertising it. Your time and money will be well spent.

"THE WHISPER MARKET"
(Vitagraph)

Despite Bad Cutting, This Picture Is Thoroughly Interesting

THE idea behind Corinne Griffith's latest Vitagarph feature, "The Whisper Market," is a fairly old one as far as the screen is concerned, but it is so well fortified with the necessary ingredients which build action and suspense that it never fails to score provided it is well interpreted. In speaking of the interpretation, one may truthfully say that it offers the most interesting feature of the picture. Never has Miss Griffith displayed a finer poise and dignity, a more delectable charm and ability to feel her role. Her aristocracy and refinement are plainly evident throughout. The chance was her's as the diplomat's wife to indulge in theatrical outbursts, but by playing with the proper restraint she gives a performance the appeal of which cannot be denied.

"The Whisper Market" is a story of intrigue and deception, with the action placed in the diplomatic circles of a Brazilian city. A small group of smugglers are determined to hoodwink the American consul into giving them the proper passports and the interest is held when their efforts are guided by a policy of blackmail. The pretty wife of the diplomat is drawn into their net and a scandal looms in the offing. However, her resourcefulness, her ability to match her wits successfully, spells disaster for the crooks. And her husband is spared the unhappy fact that she has played with fire.

The mere detailing of this picture does not establish the quota of dramatic highlights which accompany it in the majority of the scenes. The climax is developed easily, surely and vividly. This cannot be said of many of the preceding scenes, for any number of them are loosely connected and bear no relation to one another. The feature seems to have been made with considerable footage and it has troubled the cutting expert in uniting the various episodes with good continuity. He has gone to some length in presenting the star in abundant poses regardless of the dramatic values of the sequences. Yet the offering holds the interest despite its lapses. Miss Griffith sees to that, aided and abetted by the capable acting of George Howard, George MacQuarrie and Eulalie Jensen. The picture is tastefully mounted. Indeed, no criticism can be made of the production, the interpretation and the star's rich wardrobe.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Whisper Market," the Vitagraph production to appear at the ———— next ———— offers Corinne Griffith, the star, with one of the finest acting opportunities of her career. As Erminie North, wife of the American consul in a Brazilian city, she gives a vital, sympathetic performance of a woman who is made the victim of intrigue. Certainly the star is appealing with her delectable charm, her beauty, her admirable poise and dignity and her exquisite wardrobe. She fights bravely to save herself and her husand from dishonor.

Her capable portrayal is only one of many, however. George Howard, George MacQuarrie and Eulalie Jensen provide bits of acting which are thoroughly consistent and convincing. "The Whisper Market" is a story of adventure and intrigue, involving the governments of two continents, and the woman is the center about which the action revolves. Her good intentions act as boomerangs. It is when she is thus at bay, torn by conflicting emotions that the star is at her best. "The Whisper Market" is a gripping tale with a number of suspense-creating scenes. The picture is adapted by Graham Baker from a story by W. E. Scutt. George L. Sargent directed.

PROGRAM READER

A mystery and adventure story based upon intrigue is "The Whisper Market," the Vitagraph feature which comes to the ———— theatre in the near future. with Corinne Griffith as the star. While the narrative is gripping and dramatic, all the events are well within the bounds of possibility. The action pilots the characters through a skein of fast-moving action of the suspense-creating kind. Miss Griffith never looked lovelier, nor has she shown greater histrionic capabilities than in this picture. Hers is a performance which is remarkable for its fine poise, dignity, charm and sympathy. Her wardrobe is certain to appeal to the feminine patrons. Wait for this picture. It is a real treat.

SUGGESTIONS

Book this picture as an entertaining story of mystery and intrigue. Bring out that it offers the star the finest acting opportunities of her career. And follow up with the announcement that she takes advantage of every scene and situation. Make mention of her wardrobe since Miss Griffith is considered one of the best dressed women identified with the screen. Play up the title. You can stimulate interest with it. Show stills of the star and various scenes. Play up the star's beauty. Mention the other players. You can bring out that the action is based upon intrigue as practiced by unscrupulous parties who are determined to make an innocent woman suffer.

CATCH LINES

They were determined to make the consul suffer by casting dishonor upon his wife. What happened? See the beautiful Corinne Griffith in "The Whisper Market."

A vivid story of adventure, mystery and intrigue is "The Whisper Market," which comes here next ———— with the charming Corinne Griffith.

"THE HOPE"
(Metro)

Antiquated Plot Is Given Impressive Production

THERE seems to be no end to the Drury Lane melodramas, and since most of them are identical in plot, characterization and treatment, the spectator is certain in knowing what the contents of the pictures will reveal. On the stage these importations from England appealed through their technical effects. One marveled at some mechanical arrangement which permitted the display of fire, a horse race, a battle scene or what not. But the screen is old in such stuff. And the regulation plot, presenting the orthodox hero, the outraged heroine and the supervillainous heavy, in a conflict for the love-stakes, is not the kind of material which will appeal to the patron with twentieth century ideas.

Nothing is offered in "The Hope" which has not been done five and fifty times before. One is as sure how it will develop as one is that it will come to an end. The impoverished nobleman who is double crossed by his fellow officer, the figure of the trusting heroine who is led to believe that the former is unworthy, the social outcast who is making a bid to enter the realm of aristocracy—these are all cut and dried. The action pilots them from London to India (where a flash of battle is shown and which supplies a few of the melodramatic trimmings that make the production better than the story), and eventually to Italy, with the subsequent righting of the various misdeeds performed by the nefarious villain. This sequence is well timed to fit in with a volcanic explosion which destroys a host of buildings, compels our characters to run for their lives and snuffs out the heavy. A picturesque climax with a big punch. He is saved from a father's vengeance to meet the vengeance of gushing lava.

The finish brings the lovers together on a promontory with the setting sun as a background. "The Hope" is not so wildly improbable as some of its forerunners from Drury Lane. Consequently it does resemble a serial. Metro has spared no expense in giving it an impressive production. Every detail is taken care of perfectly from direction to lighting. It strikes us that such painstaking effort might be applied to more up-to-date material. For after all is said and done, "The Hope" is old stuff. It will probably appeal to those who cater to time-worn melodrama. Frank Elliot as the heavy gives the only convincing performance.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Harold, Lord Ingestre.....Jack Mulhall
Lady Brenda Carlyon.....Marguerite de la Motte
Olive Whitburn.....Ruth Stonehouse
Hector Grant.....Frank Elliot
Countess Ingestre.....Lillian Langdon
Duchess of Remington.....Mayme Kelso
Captain Jamison.....Capt. Arthur Clayton

By Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton.
Adapted by Albert Shelby Le Vino.
Directed by Herbert Blache.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The spectacular melodrama, "The Hope," by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— and ————. Its several impressive scenes include a picturesque volcanic eruption in which the houses of a city in Italy are seen toppling over and a skirmish between British troops and Hindu natives in India, both of which are marvels of realism. A well-proportioned cast of players interprets this classic from Drury Lane with Jack Mulhall, Marguerite de la Motte, Frank Elliot and Ruth Stonehouse carrying out the principal burdens of the story. "The Hope" is a melodrama which carries a full quota of action and suspense. The picture moves with a sweep which is felt by the spectators in terms of breathless expectancy.

The plot revolves around the figure of the young and impoverished nobleman, Lord Ingestre, who is in love with Lady Brenda Carlyon. His regiment is ordered to India where Captain Hector Grant schemes to win Brenda by placing his fellow officer in a wrong light. The captain is betrothed to Olive Whitburn, but he discards her. This fact is sufficient to force the latter to disappear. Ingestre, to clear the stain upon his name, traces her to Italy where he rescues her from the earthquake. And romance comes into its own. The picture was adapted by A. Shelby Le Vino and directed by Herbert Blache.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ———— theatre will be interested in knowing that the picture version of the celebrated Drury Lane melodrama, "The Hope," is coming next ———— and ————. Of all the pictures which have been made from these London importations, "The Hope," may be said to outclass them all in regard to its quota of fast-moving action, suspense and the fine flavor of romance which accompanies it throughout. The picture is endowed with several spectacular scenes among which is a volcanic eruption. This offers a fine thrill. Certainly nothing is lacking here to entertain the spectator. Finely adapted, directed, and acted, "The Hope" is naturally a genuine treat.

SUGGESTIONS

You can bill this picture as the latest Drury Lane melodrama to reach the screen. Make much of the title. And be sure to treat it with plenty of poster space. You can arouse interest by telling that the picture offers several spectacular thrills, naming the battle scene and the volcanic eruption, Treat it as a fast-moving melodrama, Play up the cast and use the principals' names conspicuously. The title can come in handy by catch-line advertising. Your merchants should be willing to co-operate with the merchandise window displays. A few cards with the title incorporated with the merchandise would be sufficient. Teaser paragraphs would provide a good medium.

CATCH LINES

The vivid, vital melodrama, direct from Drury Lane is coming to the ———— next ————. Don't miss "The Hope."

"THE LOVE FLOWER"
(Griffith-United Artists)

Not Griffith's Best, But Has Audience Appeal

THOSE who have come to expect a ceratin distinctiveness in a Griffith production and a departure from the conventional in theme, are apt to be disappointed in "The Love Flower." Frankly the offering is orthodox so far as plot is concerned. For this reason it is possible that it will be received with less acclaim by the so called critics and with more favor by the public, than have some of its predecessors.

However, both critics and public are going to say that it's much too long unless atmosphere, beautiful scenic shots, close-ups of the featured players registering every emotion known to dramatic art, all imbued with the Griffith touch will suffice for the absence of incident or a story of enough detail to require the filming of many more essential scenes.

The production is divided into practically three parts. The first reel is rather commonplace melodrama providing an excuse for shifting the locale to a South Sea island. Following this series of seqeunces, comes some very pleasing tropical scenic stuff used as backgrounds to display the histrionic talents of Richard Barthelmess and Carol Dempster. In this connection it must be admitted that both players come off with high honors, especially Miss Dempster, who proves herself a very talented ingenue, possessing youth, beauty, a screen personality and the ability to put over almost every known dramatic emotion. The picture finishes with about two reels of very good drama.

The story is very simple with an attempted theme, that many crimes attempted or committed in the name of love are justifiable, for the most part missing fire. A man answerable to the law on the charge of murder flees to an uninhabited island, taking with him his young daughter. Here they live in seclusion several years. Finally a detective comes to the island, arrests his man, but is delayed in bringing him to justice by the fact that the daughter sinks the boat in which the detective and Dick Bartholmess, who has become the girl's lover, made the trip. Later a boat comes to rescue the detective. The pursued and pursuer fight a battle under water, the detective coming off the victor. Thinking that his man is drowned he sails away, Dick and Carol also go along to find a person, but will return for the fugitive, having learned that he is alive. —Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

D. W. Griffith, the master director, is sponsor for a new motion picture which comes to the ———— theatre for a ———— day run beginning ————, under the title of "The Love Flower," and distributed by the "Big Four" organization which handles the productions of Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin.

"The Love Flower" is a story of the enforced exile of a man and his charming young daughter on a South Sea Island with the romance supplied by the daughter, a part played by Carol Dempster, a new player, and touted as a real find by Mr. Griffith, and a young sea rover sailing about in his private yacht, a role entrusted to popular Dick Bathelmess.

Most of the scenes take place in a tropical locale and as a scenic background for the drama, some wonderful shots have been secured. "The Love Flower" has action, a well-knit interesting story, a pleasing romance and has been surrounded with the well-known Griffith distinctiveness and artistic touch.

Mr. Griffith personally directed the picture and has left nothing undone to make it an artistic and audience success. Unlike some of Mr. Griffith's pictures, "The Love Flower" has a happy ending, contains nothing morbid and registers as pleasing entertainment.

PROGRAM READER

"The Love Flower," the latest D. W. Griffith production, released through United Artists, distributors for Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin, will be the stellar attraction at the ———— for a ———— days' engagement beginning ———— week.

In producing this picture Mr. Griffith has departed somewhat from his usual plan, not having sought an unusual and even morbid theme with which to display his genius in dramatic construction but has taken a simple, heart interest story of an exile on a South Sea Island and his beautiful young daughter and made a simple romance that ends as we all like to have our pictures end, with the hero, this time handsome talented Dick Barthelmess, marrying the pretty winsome leading lady, in this picture, Carol Dempster, one of Mr. Griffith's latest finds.

The usual Griffith touch, his faculty for details and his skill in making the most commonplace scene artistic, are fully in evidence in "The Love Flower." Beautiful scenic backgrounds have been provided for the offering, and Miss Dempster demonstrates her ability as a swimmer in a way that Annette Kellermann herself might well envy. The balance of the cast is fully as carefully selected as to types and competency for their roles as have been Mr. Barthelmess and Miss Dempster.

CATCH LINES

A story of a romance which began and ended on a South Sea Island in which love for a parent almost caused an innocent young girl to commit a murder.

Exiled on an island a thousand miles from any inhabited land, a beautiful young girl dreamed her dreams of love and marriage alone until one day fate sent a youth roaming about in a motor boat looking for adventure to her isolated home. Then she found her romance and he the adventure he craved.

"LAHOMA"
(Edgar Lewis-Pathe)

A Good Production from All Angles

THAT Edgar Lewis seems to have the Indian sign on pictures dealing with romance and adventure, especially when the heart interest is strong, is no better proven than in his latest production "Lahoma."

He has given John Breckenridge Ellis' story about everything necessary in the way of characterization and atmosphere to make it popular with the patrons, and has faithfully reproduced the West in the early days, in such a manner that one would believe, should he allow his mind to wander, the actual events were taking place before his eyes. This doesn't mean that the picture hasn't its faults, which crop out here and there; one in particular being the length (seven reels) and the other, the ending which is abrupt, one of the principal characters being killed.

If Edgar Lewis or the author had handled the ending more skilfully and built up to it, much more interest could have been aroused. Instead, it seemed to waver and then droop too suddenly.

The plot which is distinctly thrilling deals with pioneer days in Oklahoma before the country was settled and when Indian tribes, adventurers and lawless gangs infested the country.

The heroine, "Lahoma" when a child is about to be shot by one of a band of outlaws when she is brought to their camp. She is rescued by a tender-hearted member of the gang who accomplishes his object by killing one of them and wounding the other. And it is the other who vows vengeance and pursues his assailant until the end, when a pistol duel ends the lives of both.—Length, 7 reels.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Lahoma	Peaches Jackson, Louise Burnham
Henry Gledware	Wade Boteler
Mrs. Gledware	Lurline Lyons
Will Compton	Jack Perrin
"Brick" Willock	Russell Simpson
Bill Atkins	S. B. Phillips
Red Feather	Will Jefferis
Red Fawn	Yvette Mitchell
Red Kimball	H. M. Lindley
Kansas Kimball	John Carlyle

Directed by Edgar Lewis.
Story by John Breckenridge Ellis.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Edgar Lewis' latest production, "Lahoma," for Pathe release, a colorful, vivid, adventurous drama of the early days in Oklahoma, will be presented at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

It is a story of the early days in the territory now known as Oklahoma depicting in a strong manner the adventure and romance of the white settlers on the forbidden land. Edgar Lewis has been very faithful in portraying the life and characters in John Breckenridge Ellis' novel which is only another instance of the way the noted producer has brought his knowledge of the great outdoors to the fore. He will be remembered by patrons for his production of "The Barrier," "The Great Divide" and "The Bar Sinister."

The action of the story revolves around Lahoma and Brick Willock, a member of an outlaw band, who saves the young girl from the hands of the bloodthirsty villains when they are about to take her life.

The cast is a large one and includes, Peaches Jackson, Louise Burnham, Jack Perrin, Russell Simpson, Wade Boteler, Will Jefferis, Yvette Mitchell and H. M. Lindley.

PROGRAM READER

Do you like stories of the West, real colorful, vivid adventurous ones, where danger walks hand in hand with romance? If you do, don't fail to see "Lahoma," Edgar Lewis' latest production for Pathe release, for he has pictured in a most wonderful way, the hazards and hardships of the "boomers," their feuds and fighting; their simple pleasures and lovely sorrows; in fact their very lives are completely re-lived, re-born in "Lahoma."

The plot is distinctly thrilling and revolves around Lahoma and Brick Willock, a member of an outlaw band, who saves the young girl from the hands of the bloodthirsty villains when they are about to take her life.

It is a story of the early days of the territory now known as Oklahoma when the Pioneers, every one of whom was a maker of history, settled the soil and where dangers lurked at every turn, as they blazed the trail to civilization in a country known to them as No Man's Land.

Edgar Lewis, who directed the production, is well known to picture patrons for his thoroughness in putting life and characterization into this type of story. Among his recent pictures are "The Barrier," "The Great Divide" and "The Bar Sinister."

SUGGESTIONS

This production should interest your patrons and give them good entertainment. The hand of Edgar Lewis is seen throughout, which accounts for the splendid way the story is developed.

Bill Edgar Lewis as strongly as you can, mentioning his other productions of note, a few of which are "The Barrier," "The Bar Sinister" and "The Great Divide."

Run as many short stories as you can in your town papers on the plot of the picture, which is an interesting one.

You can dress up your lobby and ushers in the 1880 period, which should give added atmosphere to the picture.

And do not forget to mention the cast, which is a good one.

CATCH LINES

Do you like stories of the old West with their thrilling tales of adventure and romance? If so, do not fail to see "Lahoma."

Her godfather told the young man that he must leave if he found that love was taking hold of him. What did he do? See "Lahoma."

If you care to see a real story of the old West, one that will thrill and grip you, do not fail to see "Lahoma."

Here are a few—only a few—of the critical bursts of enthusiasm:

"Will be even more popular than 'On With the Dance.' For the next few weeks the question, 'Have you seen "The Right to Love?"' will share importance in town talk with 'Did Babe hit one today?'"—N. Y. American.

"A fitting successor to 'Humoresque' and DeMille's 'Why Change Your Wife?'"—N. Y. Eve. World.

Worth Waiting For!

THE public waited six whole months for a new Elsie Ferguson picture. It's been that long since the last one was released.

And now "Lady Rose's Daughter"—the star's best picture. The critical opinions on its opening in New York testify that it was worth waiting for.

Here's what the Tribune said:

> "Even if it had nothing else to commend it, it would be enough to say that Elsie Ferguson's playing makes it a picture worth seeing. The more one sees her the more one appreciates her ability."

Your people are hungry for a new Elsie Ferguson picture. This one will more than satisfy them.

TRADE PAPER REVIEWS PRAISE "THE LOVE FLOWER"

"'The Love Flower' suggests Mr. Griffith in one of his happiest moods. That it will prove one of the year's strongest box-office attractions is a prediction based on careful consideration, and attention must be called to the fact that this photoplay is among the best of the Griffith pictures not strictly confined to the class of 'massive photoplays'. That it is a super-feature, no one will dispute."

Exhibitor's Trade Review.

"It was long ago recognized that Mr. Griffith is an artist of the first rank. That was in the days of his first productions. It is with the release of 'The Love Flower' that he will be acclaimed as a poet—who feels and knows and what is more, understands human beings, to transmute them with vivid intensity to the silver screen."

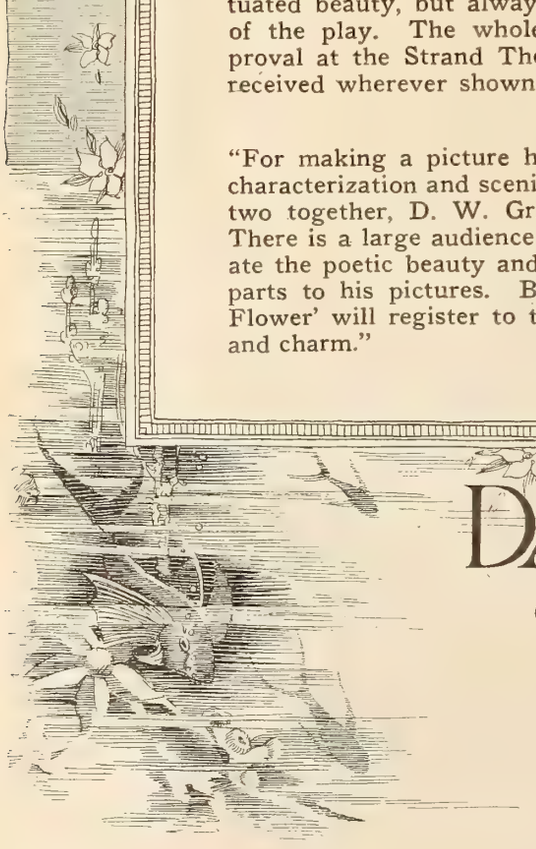
Dramatic Mirror.

"After seeing 'The Love Flower' at the Strand this week we once more understand why D. W. Griffith stands at the head of the directorial profession. It is not mainly be ause his pictures have the advantages of good stories and fine acting, but because they contain that most important characteristic—human touches."

New York Review.

"Without drawing the spectator's attention from the story development of 'The Love Flower', Mr. Griffith has accentuated beauty, but always fitting the setting to the spirit of the play. The whole production met with high approval at the Strand Theatre, and it will probably be so received wherever shown."

Moving Picture World.



"For making a picture hold through the sheer beauty of characterization and scenic investiture and the coupling the two together, D. W. Griffith certainly has no superiors. There is a large audience ever ready and eager to appreciate the poetic beauty and realistic drama that Griffith imparts to his pictures. Before such audiences 'The Love Flower' will register to the fullness of all its rare beauty and charm."

The LEOPARD WOMAN

From the world-known novel by
STEWART EDWARD WHITE
Directed by Wesley Ruggles

The Passion of the Tropics. A Fascinating Enchantress

A story of richness and splendor; a story of the great longing in a woman's heart and the great desire in a man's brain. An opulent romance of conquest, intrigue and mystery played against a panoramic background.

Louise Glaum, as the star, in all of her wonderful power and allure. Surpassing the roles of all of her recent successes, "Sahara," "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," "Sex" and "Love Madness." In "The Leopard Woman" she has the startling role of a woman more beautiful than the passionate tropics; a woman more dangerous than lions; a fascinating enchantress.

In J. Parker Read, Jr.'s remarkable first production for Associated Producers' release you see the great equatorial mirage; you see a man of mighty force matching wits with a magnificent woman to win the support of a barbaric king. You see a palace of ivory and the purple of a savage court.

Always—you can know in advance when a Producer has made a really unusual production by the news that travels ahead of its release. In Los Angeles, so great have been the spectacular features of "The Leopard Woman" that 50,000 people have gone out to the studios to watch it in the making.

Time has been held open for the presentation of "The Leopard Woman" by more than two thousand exhibitors in all the important cities; by first runs from Spokane to Tampa—that's how big exhibitors believe it is. Grosset & Dunlap have issued a special Louise Glaum edition of Stewart Edward White's world-famous novel.

Nationally released: September 26, 1920.

J. Parker Read, Jr., is a Producer who knows "box office." He has never made a picture without those spectacular punches that mean "money on the door" for the exhibitor-showman. His knowledge of the values that assure profits finds further proof in his selection of this great Stewart Edward White story for his first Associated Producers' production.

"The Leopard Woman" was one of the most overwhelming successes ever published in The Saturday Evening Post. In $1.50 novel form it sold more than 600,000 copies and in Grosset & Dunlap lower-priced edition more than 1,000,000 copies have been sold. Book stores of the nation are linking up with the picture with another 500,000 copies of the Louise Glaum edition, illustrated with Miss Glaum's portrait and scenes from the J. Parker Read, Jr., production.

To the Exhibitors of the United States

We do not believe that producers or distributors who fill the trade journals week after week with letters and controversies airing their jealousies and hatreds of each other can be giving the care and attention to production that you, the exhibitors, have a right to expect in return for the rentals you are asked to pay.

We do not believe that back-fence scandal-mongering will in any way be helpful to the state of mind that an organization or producer should have when setting out to make big, profitable pictures for you.

What a pity (and what a disgrace) it is that a really big industry (big in spite of many of the people in it) should appear before the world like a gathering of quarrelsome fish-wives.

We cannot believe that the exhibitors of the country, who make possible the very existence of producers and distributors, are interested in the dirty linen or dirty politics of the industry.

Once again we call your attention to the fact (very striking by contrast) that the Associated Producers are working— not talking.

Here is a powerful, appealing "mother story;" filled with a mother's love and faith, a mother's confidence and final reward. This genuine story contains those elements that make a simple, straightforward heart-drama surpass many of the so-called big spectacles. "Homespun Folks" immediately upon being shown at trade presentations in our twenty branches aroused distinct enthusiasm and recognition of the fine standards to be maintained and exceeded by Associated Producers.

Another Big Scoop

With the eyes of the world focussed on Poland, International News came across last week with the first and exclusive pictures from Warsaw showing the remarkable demonstration that led to the turning of the Russian tide at the very gates of the Polish Capital. Also, the same issue of International News carried thrilling pictures of the great Olympic contests at the gigantic stadium in Antwerp. International cameramen at the games caught the spectacular features of the affair as well as the triumphs of Americans and others.

FIRST NATIONAL GETS FRANCHISE

Will Distribute Neal Hart Specials in Minneapolis and Milwaukee Territory

During the past week two additional franchises have been awarded by Independent Films Association on the Neal Hart series of eight special features produced by Pinnacle Productions, Inc.

The states of Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota were awarded to the First National Exhibitors Circuit, and distribution within that territory will be in the capable hands of J. F. Cubberly, general manager, and will be handled by the two exchanges of First National, one on the fourth floor of the Loeb Arcade Building in Minneapolis, and the other in the Toy Bldg., Milwaukee.

Marcus Lands Philadelphia

The Neal Hart franchise for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey was awarded the Twentieth Century Film Co., of 256 North 13th Street, Philadelphia. Gene Marcus, President of Twentieth Century, is one of the best known film men in the district, is popular with the exhibitors and will back up the Neal Hart Specials with irreproachable service.

"I am proud of the men and the exchanges who will handle the Neal Hart pictures throughout the country," said Eddy Eckels, general manager of Independent Films Association. "This series has appealed to the most discriminating state right buyers in each locality, and the result is that our list of exchanges is a guarantee to exhibitors of high grade responsible service. In some territories we were faced with the most difficult problems imaginable, where two or more exchanges were bidding for the franchise.

Awards Based on Priority

"Our policy in handling such cases was always the same—without altering prices a hair's breadth, or utilizing the competition to obtain a swollen price, we simply awarded the franchise on the basis of priority. This resulted, in several cases, in turning down exchanges of top-notch caliber whom we would have been glad to see handling our productions.

"I can only say to the exchanges that lost out that we have done our utmost to be fair and impartial at all times and we look forward to many opportunities for future business relations on the basis of the high grade productions we shall continue to distribute."

COMEDIES MUST BE MADE JUST RIGHT

An important announcement concerning the forthcoming release of two-reel Pinnacle Comedies is expected as soon as O. W. Moore gets back to Chicago from the Coast.

These new comedies are being produced at the Pinnacle studios in Glendale, Calif., where Neal Hart's pictures are made, and Mr. Moore has been spending long hours at the studio working with artists and directors to bring about the precise effects he wants to secure in the finished output.

The idea back of Pinnacle Comedies is original and distinctive. A big feature of these productions will be the art idea expressed in the costuming and settings. Mr. Moore is expected in Chicago within a week or ten days.

SPECIAL COURIER FOR HART FILM

A special messenger is bringing the negative on "Hell's Oasis" from the studio of Pinnacle Productions, Inc., in Glendale, Calif., to the headquarters of the Independent Films Association in the Consumers Building, Chicago.

Eddy Eckels, general manager of Independent Films, declined to entrust the precious negative to the express company's hands, or take a chance on loss, damage or delay. The special courier was therefore dispatched to the Coast and is expected in Chicago this week with the film.

Printing will begin immediately at the Spoor Thompson Laboratories, and prints of "Hell's Oasis" will soon be ready for shipment to all exchanges for preview.

Peering Ahead

PEERING AHEAD

This column is compiled, with the aid of our best wee-ja board, as a forecast of what will appear in the I. F. A. News for September 11, 1930

Little Mary Pickford-Fairbanks made a delightful "Peggy" in the film version of Frances Marion's famous story, "Not-Yet-Mary," just released. This child, not yet 8 years old, possesses to a remarkable degree the genius of her distinguished parents, Doug and Mary, whose marriage way back in 1920, was an event of world-interest.

Tom Dooley was the host at an elaborate banquet staged at the Palais Royale in New York last week. The occasion was made notable by the serving of some of Mr. Dooley's private stock vintage burgundy which is said to have been in storage prior to 1925, when the eighteenth amendment was repealed. How Tom refrained from using this wine during the dry years of 1920-1924, his friends, who sampled it, cannot understand.

The 3 o'clock edition of Wid's Hourly yesterday carried a rumor that William's Fox had captured Sam's Goldfish in Central Park. This was denied in the 5 o'clock issue. It was Bronx Park.

In view of the twelve solid pages of advertising appearing regularly in the Saturday Evening Post on film attractions distributed by the Independent Films Associations, it is interesting to recall the period just prior to the summer and fall of 1920, when independent exchanges were struggling along without any sort of exploitation worthy the name. Such a state of affairs seems now almost inconceivable. The unprecedented rise to power and affluence of the independent film men dates accurately from the Asociation's release of the well-remembered Neal Hart series of Pinnacle Productions, launched in connection with an advertising campaign of such magnitude that it opened the eyes of the independents to the undreamed of possibilities of their field. The rest is history.

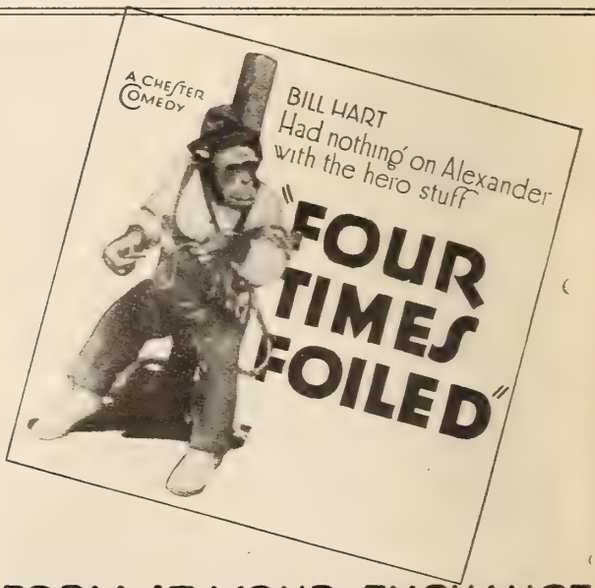
CHESTER Comedies are made especially for those exhibitors who demand that every element of their program shall be of the best. They are made so that they will be a distinct delight to your audiences and a certain, appreciable asset to your box office. They are pictures that will stamp your theatre as standing for the best in camera art.



"FOUR TIMES FOILED"

THEATRES that never mentioned comedies before are giving these a generous share of their newspaper space—for they have found that proper announcement of a Chester Comedy brings increased patronage —that these pictures have broken records for both attendance and length of run.

IT'S WORTH ADVERTISING WITH ALL THE ENERGY YOU EVER PUT BEHIND ANY PICTURE

EVERY exhibitor who has shown "Four Times Foiled" and "An Overall Hero" knows that liberal newspaper display on "The Big Show" will yield big profits to his theatre. Inspired by the brush

JOHN P. McCARTHY, AUTHOR AND DIRECTOR. has here visualized a rhapsody of the plains—played on heartstrings that breathe real emotion into photographed images.

FREDERICK REMINGTON whose brush has immortalized the men and women who braved the frontier's terrors,—here again takes up his palette, inspiring the players—but now he paints in throbbing blood-beats—in prairie passions—in a little child's trundle-bed prayer —in the silver tear-drop of penitence!

THE PLAYERS—A NOTABLE GROUP—

Russell Simpson—A silent, suffering, plendid figure of courage, who trusts and wins.

Little "Pat" Moore — The child artist who captures hearts —opens the flood-gates of emotion—and calls the rainbow through the tear-drops.

Dorca Matthews—Both gifted and accursed, her lady's grace and charm make her beloved even in her awful error.

Robert McKim—A "bad actor"—but a wonderful artist, whose very villainies commend admiration for their skillful portrayal.

THE DUST
of Frederic Remington

THE STORY—So human, so direct, that it will speak for itself long after these pages are discarded. It is the buyer's final guarantee that no exhibitor who sees "OUT OF THE DUST" can possibly fail to desire it for his audience.

A SCENIC TREAT—If "OUT OF THE DUST" were viewed exclusively for its scenic value, its admirers would still be legion. A series of fascinating pictures, admirably photographed—their exquisite charm reproduced by VICTOR MILNER. Their artistic sequence blends perfectly with art-titles in the matchless conceptions of FERDINAND PINNEY EARLE.

AND FINALLY, GENTLEMEN—THE BOX OFFICE! We will present to you the most elegant but practical equipment ever offered an exhibitor. By courtesy of Collier's Weekly you will be enabled to hang a complete art exhibit in your lobby,—the famous Remington paintings from the original plates. This in addition to a great assortment of Ritchey lithographs, photos and other advertising features of a class best described when you see them and say "Oh, Boy!"

Three Classes

In the great mass of things that are produced two classes show prominently amid the general mediocrity with equal distinctness:—the unusually good and the unusually bad!

The RITCHEY poster is unusually good,—and it is not our accustomed policy to comment on the unusually bad. The reason for the excellence of the RITCHEY poster is simple.

Plainly stated it is because the RITCHEY poster is the finished product of the greatest organization of poster advertising experts anywhere existent in the world. In the last analysis these men produce RITCHEY posters with just one object in view. That final objective is ticket selling!

The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. is therefore to be considered merely as the exhibitor's ticket selling agency,—but it should always be remembered that ticket selling furnishes the life blood of the motion picture industry.

With the importance of box-office receipts in mind, posters become the important factor in the booking of a photo-play, and posters, like all things else, fall into one of three classes—unusually good, mediocre, or unusually bad.

If it is unusually good,—it is, perforce, a RITCHEY poster!

VOL. XXII SEPT. 11, 1920 No. XII

Fewer Pictures, But More Units

LAST Spring there was every indication that feature production would decline in volume this year, that it might even get down to the saturation point of this and the foreign market which is about 450 features a year.

Production units had generally decided that about four pictures per unit per year was enough; some even preferred to make not more than two. In almost every instance this was a sharp and decided reduction over past records and policies.

A compilation recently made, however, shows that over 800 features will be released this year, namely the last six months of 1920 and the first six months of 1921. We will, in other words live right up to past records of over-production.

Unit production has decreased and so has the volume of releases of the large, old line companies; but we have more production units. There has been, of course, a marked tendency on the part of directors and stars to become producers—an inevitable development; and then we have the usual increase of new producing concerns from other quarters.

A second compilation shows that the first run centers can only absorb from 414 to 442 features this year—or even less if runs are lengthened as they undoubtedly will be because of this year's larger number of better pictures. At least 400 features, therefore, will have to rely upon second and later run representation and rentals.

A third compilation in which an experienced exhibitor assisted indicates that out of the gross output there should be at least 406 first class pictures suitable for first run representation. No more than one-fourth of them come from any one concern and less than half from any two concerns. So the source of good pictures this year will be wider and the supply for the exhibitor more assured than ever before. They will be of a higher quality and they will come from more sources of creative effort.

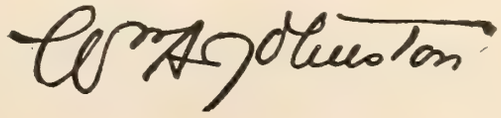
There is much food for thought in the above figures. We are presenting them for just this purpose, and we have little doubt but that the producer, distributor and exhibitor, each from his own angle, will find a sermon in them.

We could write at considerable length on the various lessons the figures present but it seems unnecessary.

We do wish however to lay emphasis on this one self-evident fact that there is no place today for the mediocre feature, the machine made program offering of the past, the picture of mere footage, trite theme and ready-made elements of action, interest and photography.



There is no room in this market for such features—the above figures prove that readily enough; and there is no room in the foreign field. Great Britain in fact is already booked solidly up to 1921.

This is the day—we were going to say of the special picture but we will simply say, of the first class picture. For that is all a special picture is. We shall have, just as we had last year, a very few, big productions. They happen just as each year a few big novels and big dramas arise and stand forth. The so-called special picture is simply one with a sound theme, sincerely, painstakingly, ungrudgingly and intelligently made.

But the point is that we are now in the era of the first class picture. We have got above pandering to the uncritical and up to the level of dramatic, artistic and literary excellence. And we are in the era of the new and beautiful theatre with seats which all the public must fill.

Woe henceforth to the cheap writer, the sloppy editor, the mechanical actor, the incompetent director—and above all to the producer who relies upon such an aggregation or any part of it, who produces for the dollars only, who has no ideals, who looks under and not up to the new kind of dramatic picture, and who blindly believes that the motion picture public of today will pay for and tolerate shoddy goods.

DEALING IN PERSONALITIES

Whenever "PERSONALITIES" makes its appearance you can tell that the white paper situation is easing up a bit. When conditions grow extra stringent "PERSONALITIES" and the cat are put out to live off the neighbors.

Who would be so cruel as to remark that the frequent appearance and disappearance of this page puts YOURS TRULY in the HALLMARK class?

It looks like a good year for the independent dinner hounds. Any average trade paper job will be at a premium if we have any more affairs as enjoyable as that tendered Monday night by CARTER DE HAVEN and FIRST NATIONAL. It was a very select gathering. Aside from the trade press, which can't be helped, those present were ARTHUR KANE, BILL YEARSLEY, EARL HUDSON, HORACE JUDGE, and the furniture demonstrator CARTER DE HAVEN.

The trade press had the speaking parts in the production. LESLEY MASON told of conditions in Europe, GEORGE BLAISDELL and JOE DANNENBERG discoursed on Atlantic City prospects, BILL JOHNSTON tendered a survey of CANAJOHARIE, MARTIN QUIGLEY reported from KILKENNY, and yours truly gave an imitation of a dying traveller just back from Sahara.

The party then adjourned to the Plaza theatre at Fifty-ninth Street to spend two hours laughing at "TWIN BEDS."

Considerable class was added to the party after the theatre by the addition of J. D. WILLIAMS, HARRY SCHWALBE, BILL MORGAN and others of the executive staff of FIRST NATIONAL.

And a pleasant time was had by all.

Just after we get through reading in "SYSTEM" about a clever young business man we have in our ranks in the person of WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, that self same WATTERSON walks down the gang plank. We'll say that "SYSTEM" is a good picker when it looks over the picture field.

Ten dollar top for the opening night of "WAY DOWN EAST!" Sounds more to us like going "WAY DOWN SOUTH." If the original play had opened at those prices the picture rights wouldn't have even reached a $1.75 figure.

For three weeks we have been trying to say a word of good cheer to Walter Hill on his new path—and each week something has happened in the make-up stage. Here goes—the best of luck to the best of fellows, Walt. We're sorry to lose you from trade paper ranks but the rest of the world needs some of the good fellows.

JOE LEE has given up the pursuit of Education and is going to return to the common ordinary variety of picture business.

But what's in a name? After a survey of the Broadway houses in the past few weeks it strikes us that Educational is seeking a corner of the good comedy market. You've got to hand it to this EARL HAMMONS, boys.

Speaking of comedies—some one of these days we expect to hear a newspaper critic somewhere hail CHAPLIN in "The Kid" as "a promising youngster who bids fair to threaten the laurels of HAROLD LLOYD and LARRY SEMON."

Just after reading "DOC" SHALLENBERGER'S glowing view of the independent market outlook we meet FRANK BACKER back in town after a trip with "Madonnas and Men." "It's going to be a great year," says Frank. "The man with a real big picture need have no fear about the open market. The independent exchanges are ready for him."

The Cleveland convention taught us that P. B. DANA, secretary of the Arrow Film Corporation, is one of the regular fellows of the game. So we are glad to hear that he has just had a vacation. And at a place that sounds so ultra-"vacationy" as Lake Maranacook, Maine.

Which item must naturally be followed by the statement that W. RAY JOHNSON, vice-president and general manager of Arrow, shook the dust of the Candler Building on Saturday to start on a two weeks' vacation.

ELMER MCGOVERN is moving so fast these days that it is hard to keep up with him. The other day he stepped on the gas with the result that it was necessary to move from the sixth floor of 130 W. 46th street to larger offices on the 11th floor. Yes, "The Woman Untamed" is somewhat to blame.

Social note: MR. FREDERICK J. BEECROFT and YE EDITOR were at home on Wednesday of this week to MR. PATHE A. PARSONS. A good time was had by all.

HARRY BERMAN is doing the cross country act. After a jaunt that took in Toronto, Cleveland and Chicago, the general manager of Universal Exchange left New York Tuesday for a tour of the central part of the country. He will stop over at the exchanges in Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Kansas City and other points.

Gosh, what a relief! Unless something happens as the next hour approaches pressward we are going to have the first issue in weeks without a thousand word controversial contribution from someone or other calling somebody or anybody a liar and a menace.

There must have been some potent hop at that Atlantic City gathering. Someone tipped a contemporary off to a story about the Beach Front Company fighting the Stanleys that was a bird. The follow-up story ought to be a lallapaloosa of a back step.

C. LANG COBB had a birthday last week, and celebrated it with his wife, AGNES EGAN COBB, and WILL C. SMITH, general manager of Nicholas Power Co. "Much Rare Old and Oily Spanish Wine was disposed of," it is said, it is reported, it is rumored and it is alleged. But it is admitted by all that the occasion was a most delightful one.

Business Note: SAMUEL SNOWDEN CASSARD, of Nicholas Power, had his Exide Batteries charged this week by lunching with FRED BEECROFT.

Oklahoma Exhibitors in Annual Convention

THE Oklahoma Exhibitors' Association opened its annual convention at Oklahoma City, Okla., on the morning of August 30 with a large number of members in attendance. The following officers were elected for the ensuing term: Alex Darry, president, El Reno; M. E. Woolredge, vice-president; H. B. Hall, secretary and treasurer. The Oklahoma City Board of Governors and Grievance Committee comprise George A. Pollard, Guthrie; Frank Miller, Duncan; A. Darry, E. J. Story and J. L. Carr, Kingfisher.

The name of the organization was changed to that of the Associated Exhibitors of Oklahoma. The convention arranged for the handling of paper for subscribers at half-price and for other supplies at actual cost. The slogan, "Injury to One is the Concern of All," was officially adopted, to be used on slides in all theatres and on the organization's stationery. The secretary will draft on members for monthly dues. The next convention will be held in Oklahoma City upon the call of the executive committee.

Calls on Independent Producer to Support Theatre-Owners

James Quinn of El Paso Says Success of Both Is Mutually Dependent

COMMENTING on the editorial of William A. Johnston which appeared in the News issue of August 14, under the caption of "More Work —Less Talk," James C. Quinn, managing-director of the Rialto in El Paso, Texas, follows the News editor to bat and hammers out a verbal Texas leaguer to the right-field fence of the independent-product's lot. To the independent-producer he addresses an earnest plea that no "profiteering" prices be imposed on the independent theatre-owner in view of present circumstances. Moreover, he calls on the independent-producers to support their brother-independents in the exhibiting field, and bids the former to realize "that they have never had at any time in the history of this business, such a wonderful opportunity of lining-up the exhibitor strength of the country solidly behind them." Mr. Quinn's interesting letter is submitted as follows:

"Dear Mr. Johnston:

"In view of the fact that there are many participants in the present exhibitor-producer fracas, who are much better known than I, holding the centre of the stage, your editorial is, I think, the finest compliment I have received during my experience in the theatrical business. I was doubly glad to see the matter given such wide publicity, because I think it is a question which warrants it. There are just as many rogues on one side of the fence as on the other, and the sooner that is admitted the quicker some of the thieves, petty or powerful, will be run out into the open.

"And whenever I hear an exhibitor whining about 'the octopus,' it gives me a headache because we are all little octopuses in the embryo, some greater, some lesser. Anyone who doesn't believe that needs only to follow the line of his daily thoughts and actions; and then if he has the nerve to analyze himself, he will find that his waking hours, unless he be a rare bird, constitute one continual round of 'octopusing.' The only real difference between himself and the fellow he is yelping at is that while he 'octos' in a town called 'Steubenville" or 'Beanville' or some other 'ville,' the other fellow operates in a town called 'United States.' The distinction is merely a matter of size both as to the man and the place.

"Another thing comes to mind at this time and perhaps will seem to you important and worthy of distribution where it will do the most good, as it seems to me. I can see signs amongst the independent producers of attempting to take advantage of the fact that a great deal of supply from the source of previous years will be tied up this season as a consequence of producer-owned theatres. It seems to me from surface indications that some independents are endeavoring to push their prices away above the profiteering stage in the belief that the independent exhibitor will be so hard pushed for service that he will be willing to pay any old price for films, and anyway that he will have to pay it whether he is willing or not. I believe that the realization of this, even more so than the lack of the least semblance of moral support from the independent producers' headquarters, was the determining factor in many cases in this territory where an exhibitor turned a willing ear to the propositions of the big combination of producer-exhibitors.

It is a well-established fact down here that many an exhibitor could have been prevented from turning his holdings over to the combination, had he had the assurance, at the critical time, from an authoritative source that he would have the support of the independent manufacturer in his fight and further that he would not be assassinated, in a business way, by the independents' demand for inflated prices just as soon as he would cast his lot with them. This lack of support from the New York offices, in my opinion, made the exhibitor decide that, so long as he was in for a trimming, he might as well get out with what he could while the 'getting' was not very good, but at least possible.

The independent producers must be made to realize that they have never had at any time in the history of this business such a wonderful opportunity of lining up the exhibitor-strength of the country solidly behind them, and that it is entirely up to them as to whether they have the breadth of vision to visualize the real situation and take advantage of it by developing something the exhibitors have never been treated to, thus far, i. e., a sound business-like administration of their mutual relationship.

"On the other hand, if they should attempt what could only be a temporary advantage of the present chaotic conditions of things, it would prove suicidal to themselves, because it would undoubtedly drive the mass of their own support the independent exhibitors, into the waiting and welcoming arms, or shall we say 'claws' of the 'octopus.' "

Mississippi Exhibitors Hold Convention

A CONVENTION of the motion-picture theatre-owners of Mississippi was held at the Edwards Hotel, Jackson, Miss., on Sunday, August 29th, The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was endorsed, and the independent exhibitors of Mississippi affiliated themselves with the national organization.

Resolutions were adopted against percentage, advance payments in full more than seven days before actual play dates, the producer-exhibitor menace, the present unfair and inequitable contracts, censorship, music tax, activities of F. I. L. M. Clubs.

The quota for the national organization was raised. The following officers elected: S. D. White, president; P. B. St. Clair, vice-president; A. H. Hutchinson, secretary and treasurer.

Exhibitors' Chicago Meet Postponed Until Fall

ALFRED S. BLACK, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, announces that the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America have decided to postpone temporarily the convention to be held at Chicago on Aug. 31 and Sept. 1. Plans are being laid, however, for an active campaign to hold a big convention on clearly defined lines early in the fall. Due announcement will be made very shortly in the trade papers.

Big Exhibit to Be Opened in Atlanta December 6

Arrangements are reported to have been completed for the opening of the Southeastern Motion Picture Exhibition in Atlanta on December 6th. The exhibition will continue during the entire week. Every exchange-manager is said to be giving the movement his ready support. The Auditorium has been secured for the week and selling-booth space will be available for applicants within a few days. From four to ten stars are to be in Atlanta during the week, it is planned, and each evening a ball will be given in honor of some star. The Southern Picture News started the movement last March, and the Atlanta papers are giving the affair liberal publicity.

New Era in Production Imposes New Tests of Showmanship

By J. D. Williams, Manager of Associated First National Pictures

THE right of exhibitors to remain in the business is going to be tested this season as never before. Their ability as showmen will be tried to the utmost. Their natural traits as real business men will be brought into view more clearly than ever.

And the new style of productions, already on first-run screens, will decide, more thoroughly than any previous evolution of the production art, just who are the theatre-owners capable of maintaining their enterprises in step with the great march forward.

For several seasons exhibitors led the producers. They erected larger theatres; they engaged orchestras; evolved and perfected exploitation, lobby displays, elaborate advertising campaigns and ballyhoos. These became the advance-agents for stage settings, prologues and special musical scores—all designed to bid for the patronage of the elite who would not respond to the normal methods of general publicity.

Now comes the great test, with producers for pace setters.

How many exhibitors will continue with the procession?

Personally, I believe that the majority are more than capable, but the new type of picture will strain their showmanship talents to the utmost.

The new production era will retain, in its individual pictures, the more important of the conventional ingredients—the melodrama, thrill, fight, sob, smile and tear, which the fan masses demand in screen entertainment, but it is already going far beyond that point and giving to exhibitors an entirely new and unprecedented style of appeal for use in bidding admissions to the box office.

On the exhibitor's ability to recognize these new elements of appeal and to exploit them to his full benefit in increased receipts, will depend his continued right to the name of showman. The measure of his grasp of new opportunity will decide his fitness to keep ahead in the great struggle.

To the methods that have sufficed in the past the efficient exhibitor will add new conceptions, progressive methods and fresh devices. He must go forward. There can be no standing still. He must determine to extract a full hundred per cent in box office receipts from his new type of attraction. To the implements of former seasons, to improved lobby display, to the stunt, the ballyhoo, the parade and other circus methods, all excellent in themselves and necessary, he will add newer devices in keeping with the wider value of the new era of production. Old audiences will be retained, and a new public will be created; the exhibitor who is alive to the possibilities of the great material to his hand. There is, for instance, that still large public—old fashioned, if you will, whose idea of motion pictures dates back to the store picture house; people oblivious to the great stride the screen has since made; folk who do not realize what the motion picture can now give them—of deeper drama, of human nature, of the truly worthwhile. There is, too, that class of people trained to the legitimate, which will pay three dollars a seat elsewhere, but which spends nothing at all for motion pictures. This public has not been reached with the right sort of appeal. They are not hard boiled, but they have not been awakened to the high value of the motion picture of today.

This public, the one hundred per cent exhibitor will go after, arouse and secure. Never before was such splendid matter available or material so rich in special appeal. Never were pictures so richly endowed as in this day of independent effort and individual initiative, of production art uncramped by chilling dictatorship, of producers unfettered by the limitations of monopoly, and enterprise free to give the exhibitor and public its unhampered best—pictures, for instance, of the calibre of "The Jack Knife Man" and a dozen others that come to mind, each with some great outstanding quality, such as sheer depth of drama, humanness or novel presentation of a simple truth — pictures which are powerful levers in compelling new crowds to exhibitor profit.

More than ever before exhibitor efficiency will mean the realization of the incomparably greater calibre of his offerings and getting the fullest value out of his investment. It will take energy and enterprise. No stones must be left unturned.

The efficient showman will make it his business, too, to see to it that the picture receives from others the high value he sets on it himself. He will ensure reviews by the best qualified newspaper men, the editors themselves, if need be. He will secure for his attractions the interest of special bodies, special classes of people through those who influence them—educators, the clergy, and other leaders of thought. His advertising will reflect the higher value of his offering, his publicity will get its tone from the same criterion; his lobby displays will be in keeping with the intrinsic appeal of each individual attraction; and in a dozen other ways he will exploit on a scale worthy of the magnitude and merits of the new era picture.

Producers are today giving the exhibitor pictures of unprecedented value, productions that will earn for him not mere normal receipts, but far more than that, a full measure of profits.

But more than ever before it lies with the exhibitors to earn those profits. Will they live up to their opportunities? I am convinced they will. The ability they have hitherto demonstrated in devising new means to meet new opportunity will still be forthcoming. The energy and enterprise which in the past has affected so much will accomplish still more, but it will be intensified and amplified in keeping with the new showmanship the new type of picture demands.

To ensure his full measure of profit it will not suffice for the exhibitor to rest on the high reputation the "Jack Knife" or "Broken Blossoms" kind of picture has made in New York, Chicago or elsewhere. He will see to it that the public, and all of it, gets its attention focused sharply on the qualities that brought about that success. He will make it his business to make the public realize the special appeal of the picture as he realizes it himself. He will use every intelligent means to focus public attention thereon.

The test is coming. It is already here. Exhibitors will meet it the only way it can be met—by keeping abreast of the requirements of the newer picture and by a business-like realization of its opportunities, its special appeal and its unique qualities, whereby not only will the old patronage be retained but a new public reached with the newer and better material by methods adequately in keeping with a greater picture of a greater era.

Therein lies the test of new season showmanship.

Kansas Exhibitors Will Convene September 27

THE convention of the Kansas State Exhibitors' Association will be held on Monday and Tuesday, September 27 and 28, at the Chamber of Commerce Auditorium, Kansas City, Kansas.

Ninety-five per cent of the exhibitors of Kansas are organized and belong to the state organization. The object of the convention will be to perfect plans for the campaign in the Legislature. Sunday opening will also be a big issue. The raising of the quota for Kansas to the national organization will be taken up.

On the night of the 27th the exhibitors will be the guests of the exchange managers of Kansas City at a theatre party and big banquet.

The officers of the organization are: R. G. Liggett, President; R. H. Holmes, vice-president; M. Van Praag, secretary; William Meyn, Treasurer.

Rothacker Finds Spirit of Good Fellowship Abroad

"Clean Competition that Will Help All the Industry" Is the Outlook

ONE traveller has returned from Europe who didn't learn the A to Z of foreign conditions in a fortnight's stay; one traveller has stepped down a gangplank without crying the "Wolf" of dire and terrible competition coming for American pictures across the waters.

Watterson Rothacker is the man. The foremost American laboratory executive shies at the word "interview" when applied to his foreign trip. He'll "chat" with you about the people he saw, the activities he witnessed, and his own plans for undertakings abroad. But don't call it an "interview."

"I didn't go across with the attitude of expecting to teach them all about the picture business," he says, "and I don't want to return with the appearance of an American who after a hop, skip and jump around England, France and Belgium now 'knows it all.'"

Wherewith THE NEWS interviewer warmed up to Mr. Rothacker. Here was a new experience and a novel one.

"You can quote me for as many pages as there are in your book," he continued, "in appreciation of the kind courtesies extended to me by film men in England, France and Belgium. I went abroad as a pupil, seeking information, and it would cheer your heart to witness the open attitude of the most prominent film men.

"Don't allow alarmists to frighten you with the bugaboo of foreign picture competition that is aimed at American pictures solely as America pictures. Europe, and England in particular, is making serious and careful preparations for picture production on a large scale. If studio facilities and sincerity of effort are any indication you can also count on it that England is going to make more good pictures than ever.

"The natural result will be sterner competition in the foreign field for American pictures. But it will be a clean competition, a healthy competition. It will be the competition of grown men—not the childish waving of the flag that some seem to fear. The sort of competition that better made foreign pictures will create for the American product is the sort that we should welcome—for it will mean progress to the whole industry."

Mr. Rothacker has several interesting items of news concerning his own plans for activity in England. In the first place the laboratory project for England is now definitely settled, and the Chicagoan expects to return before the end of Fall to get the new branch under way.

"I am establishing a plant abroad because I have been told that there is an opportunity for an American laboratory in a manner that amounts to an invitation," he says. "But I haven't any of the feeling that I am going to burn up rivers invading a backward country. England is well equipped in a laboratory and studio way. The frank words of praise my English friends gave me on the Rothacker prints already being shipped to that country are the plain reason for a plain business move."

Another item of Rothacker news concerns the laboratory man's visit to Sir A. Conan Doyle, whose story, "The Lost World," is owned by Mr. Rothacker. The visit resulted in signing of agreements by which the famous British author will write another original story for Mr. Rothacker during the next year. This bit of news that could have justifiably burned up the cables was only wormed out of the Chicagoan in an off-hand manner.

One subject he harps on, and comes back to—the universal courtesy and helpfulness extended by all whom he met. "The British trade press was particularly kindly," he declares, "and as for the leaders in film life there seemed to be nothing they couldn't do. I am particularly grateful to Col. Brown of Walturdaw, the First National distributors, Col. Bromhead of Gaumont, Mr. Hepworth and Captain Paul Kimberly.

"I could not forget to mention the new Stoll studio, which I can easily say will be one of the finest in the world. Another interesting visit was that to the Hepworth studio in course of erection, and which will increase the production capacity of that organization four times. One of the most unusual experiences of the trip was the witnessing of the generator at this plant—nothing else than a Diesel engine from one of the German submarines. It is an engineering marvel and treat.

"In Belgium I had the pleasure of visiting the Gaveart raw stock plant in company with Mr. Gaveart and found a structure startling in its size and capacity. Messrs. Gaumont—senior and junior—welcomed me at their French plant, an organization astounding in its mammoth proportions.

"No matter where you go in Europe you are bound to feel at home—for around every corner you stumble into film men known on this side of the water. I met Mr. and Mrs. Bryant Washburn, who are abroad at work on their picture, 'The Road to London.' Among the other names that come to mind are Hy Winik, Joe Unger, J. G. Wainright, Slinger and Davis, Carl Carleton, E. V. Richards and Mr. Saenger, Jule Allen of Canada. The Allens are in the midst of a wonderful undertaking in the remodelling of the famous London Empire.

"I had the novel experience of flying in an aeroplane from London to Paris with my attorney, Charles E. Pain, who accompanied me on the trip. We also made the return trip by aeroplane, this time with the charming presence of Fay Bainter."

All the joys of Mr. Rothacker's trip were not reserved for his days abroad. For James Quirk, publisher of Photoplay, got his ingenuity working and staged a welcome home dinner on the part of "Friends For Ten Years" that was manouvered as a surprise and is retained as a remembrance worth while.

Swanson Not Interested in Producing Company

W. H. SWANSON, president of the Swanson Theatre Circuit, of Salt Lake City, Utah, denies any connection with a proposed ten-million-dollar picture producing company in Salt Lake City, announcement of which was made recently in a certain trade journal. Mr. Swanson adds the following explanation:

"The fact of this is that two gentlemen named Cook and Smith dropped in here for a few days from Los Angeles with a promotion 'bee' in their bonnet that was far in excess of the size of their bank roll. During their stay here, of three or four days, they endeavored to interest me in one or two things in their proposition, which was more of a stock-selling scheme than that of a producing company, and they jumped at the conclusion that publicity with my name connected would somewhat force me to go on with their plans. It at no time looked favorable to me, and I wish that you would deny any connections that I may be said to have with that proposed producing company."

Musicians Strike in Atlanta Is Settled

AFTER what seemed like an unbreakablet deadlock had been reached between Willard C. Patterson, manager of the Criterion theatre of Atlanta, Ga., and officials of the local musicians' union, an agreement was reached between the opposing interests and the orchestra re-instated.

When the strike came, a tentative agreement between the union and the S. A. Lynch enterprises enabled the orchestra at the theatre operated by this concern—the Rialto—to continue with its work. Mr. Patterson of the Criterion and Mr. Jas. F. Jackson of the Tudor theatre, however, refused to even the tentative agreement, for neither of them wished an equivocal situation.

After considerable wrangling, argument and pleading from both sides, and after both managers had agreed to wage-increase, but could not, because of their schedules agree to the shorter hours, Mr. Patterson and Mr. Jackson decided to meet the committee on arbitration on Saturday. The discussion lasted from seven o'clock in the evening until ten-thirty, the final result being that the orchestras in both theatres resumed work at the old hours and the old schedule of payment. In addition, a contract was signed which ensures perfect peace between the managers and the musicians for the period of one year, as the orchestras agreed to accept the same salary and working conditions until at least September 1921.

During the two weeks' lay-off, Mr. Patterson engaged three more players for the orchestra, so confident was he that an ultimate decision would result in his replacing the musicians in his house. Two of the players—a French horn, and an oboe—are from Hugo Reisenfield's aggregation at the Rivoli, New York. The third addition is a young Spanish girl harpist, who will not arrive for several weeks.

The patronage at both the Criterion and the Tudor has continued with no abatement during the strike, but the patrons are welcoming the return of the two orchestras with acclaim. Unusually fine programs by both orchestras this week have helped to make up for the loss, during the two weeks' lay-off to the "music-hungry" people.

From Spokane, Wash., comes the news that nearly two hundred and fifty musicians of theatre and other orchestras of Spokane, forty-five motion-picture operators and fifty-five employes of this city are seeking wage increase ranging from 5 to 20 per cent, according to Fred W. Green, president of the musicians union, head of the amusement section of the council and vice-president of the Washington State Federation of Labor. The picture-operators' demand is scheduled to go into effect September 5. The motion picture operators ask an advance of $6 a week, beginning September 5, the day before Interstate Fair begins here. Their new scale provides as follows: $42 a week for six hours, seven days a week, in houses having a seating capacity less than 600 people; $46 a week for theatres of 600 to 1,200 seating capacity; $51 a week for operators in vaudeville houses and $1.50 an hour for all overtime.

The musicians' union is planning to lease a large motion-picture theatre in Spokane for the purpose of inaugurating picture-show orchestras in this city, according to Fred W. Green, president of the organization. The orchestra in the union's show will have 25 pieces, he stated.

"We already have the finances to go ahead with the picture-show proposition and are arranging to close a deal for a local house," Mr. Green said. "Spokane should have orchestras in its picture-show houses the same as other cities of this size and even smaller. Picture-house proprietors here are not inclined to take this step, so the musicians' union is planning to do so.

"We have investigated and found that show-prices would not have to be raised to support orchestras of from 10 to 12 pieces in the large houses here. Billings, Mont., with a population of one-third of Spokane, has orchestra music for its picture-shows. Spokane will follow suit if a little competition along this line is started."

Camera Tourist Tells of East Indies Trip

FREDERICK BURLINGHAM, director of the Burlingham Adventure Pictures, who recently returned to New York from an extensive camera tour of the East Indies, has issued an interesting account of his exploits from his temporary headquarters at the Hotel Pennsylvania. Mr. Burlingham says:

"We left America last January and made for Java by way of the Pacific, via Vancouver, Japan, China, French Indo-China, and the Straits Settlements, some 12,000 miles. After fitting out in Soarabaja, Java, we crossed over to Bandjermasin, in South Borneo, and from there ascended the Barito about 550 miles. I took with me a Dutchman, Mr. Frinkling, and Malay and Dyak interpreters.

"Borneo is intested with crocodiles. At Bandjermasin, the week we arrived, three natives were eaten. My only narrow escape in Borneo was when our prau nearly turned over, and I fell into the water head down, trying to save my camera and was forced to remain in this awkward position until rescued. Possibly the crocodiles mistook my beard for seaweed and hesitated to attack.

"While crossing underneath a huge tree far up the river our native paddlers suddenly began shouting and gesticulating franctically and before we could stop the prau we glided underneath a huge black panther, but before we could shoot he was gone into the dense jungle. We sent in some beaters but only saw the bushes shake as he 'vamoosed' inland.

"At Moerateive, 264 miles upstream, we saw our first headhunters. They had been brought in by the Dutch jungle police. It seems there had been a feast over on the Mahakam River, and when interest began to lag it was suggested that the Dyaks cut off the heads of two of the guests. This livened up the feast considerably, and with the excitement growing the wild men began to run amuck. The Dutch, however, are trying to discourage this kind of enjoyment and sent over a punitive expedition after the ring leaders.

"Although we carried a tent and portable beds with mosquito nets we often slept in the bamboo huts with the natives. These huts are built on bamboo piling about fifteen feet from the ground as a protection against wild animals and snakes. Inside, however, are many lizards, and on one occasion, while dining inside, we caught a deadly scorpion under the table among our bare feet. The natives are so used to these visits that they simply laughed at the speed with which we withdrew.

"The natives of Borneo still hunt and fish with spears and still use poisoned arrows for killing wild pig. The poison used is obtained from the juice of a very poisonous beetle and kills very quickly. Besides, blow pipes may be used with considerable accuracy for 50 to 60 yards and as they are silent I consider them formidable weapons in a dense jungle. An expedition which recently went into New Guinea 120 strong got back to the coast with only 40 alive, the others having been poisoned by arrows or killed by disease.

"If the people of Borneo believe in a God, or a Supreme Being, we did not find it out. Thy are extremely superstitious and belive in omens, and at night they place food outside alongside of devil poles to propitiate the Evil Ones. When the morning comes the food is gone, probably eaten by wild pigs, but the Dayanks don't inquire. I must record we did find one Christian, near Poertoektjahoe, but he had a cross over his grave.

"I got five reels in Borneo, showing faithfully the daily life of these strange people, including a baptism and a wedding. In the former the wild people managed to keep away the Evil Spirits by throwing rice and carrying a hard-boiled egg on the end of a piece of sugar cane. During the wedding, however, to propitiate the devils, they smeared the blood of a newly-killed pig on their foreheads. They are a fine people, nevertheless.

Ottawa's "Pollyanna" Prologue Goes Big

TO "Pollyanna" fell the honor of being the first motion picture to be given a prologue presentation in Ottawa, Canada, and to this form of presentation Manager J. T. Moxley of the Allen's Russell theatre where the picture was shown is willing to give the credit for much of the big volume of business done.

Mr. Moxley called in Will McLaughlin, photoplay editor of the Ottawa Journal, and placed the proposition of providing a suitable prologue for the attraction entirely in his hands. The result was an original fairy fantasy in three scenes, entitled "Pollyanna at the Court of Happiness," with a story theme that not only tied up with the original "Pollyanna," but which allowed many opportunities for newspaper "tie-ups" which brought considerable advance advertising on the run. Mr. McLaughlin began his campaign with advertisements in the Journal several weeks before the opening date, calling for a girl of the Mary Pickford type to play the role of Pollyanna in the prologue. Several hundred embryo Pickfords presented themselves on the Russell stage on the evening designated, from which two girls were chosen, one as the understudy. The prologue, being a fairy fantasy, called for a cast of 130 children, exclusive of the principal characters. The services of Professor and Mrs. Sinclair, dancing instructors of considerable local reputation, were obtained to train the children, many of the talented kiddies being members of their classes.

The newspaper campaign started two weeks previous to the opening date and consisted of a series of "teaser" ads, which were later increased to full length single column ads calling attention to the unique prologue "presented on a scale similar to the prologues produced at the Capital, Strand, Rivoli, and Rialto theatres of New York City." On the Saturday preceding the opening the Journal carried a half page ad, and large space was used throughout the week of the showing.

Edward L. Hyman's ballet number in conjunction with the showing of the Educational scenic strip described in the accompanying article

The production enjoyed a tremendous success no small part of which is due to the playwriting efforts of Mr. McLaughlin and the financial success of the run of "Pollyanna" was phenomenal, especially since the Russell is a legitimate house and motion picture attractions have seldom proved popular there.

Hyman Synchronizes Scenic Subject and Ballet Act

How a well selected short subject lends itself to stage setting and musical accompaniment and can be made one of the principal parts of the bill was evidenced at the Strand theatre, Brooklyn, last week by the presentation that Manager Director Edward L. Hyman gave "Holland's Rustic Life and Waterways," an Educational single reel release.

A special prologue was used with this picture, a windmill and typical Holland scenery. It opened with Mme. Sylvia, a noted dancer and singer, singing "By the Zuyder Zee" to the accompaniment of the full orchestra. This was rendered from off stage and at the end of the song Mme. Sylvia came on, entering through the windmill door, with her dancing partner, George Cadon, and the two executed a quaint Dutch dance that brought encores at every performance.

Immediately at the close of the dance the picture was projected on the screen, it opening with scenes of Holland's windmills, exact duplicated of the one that had formed the stage setting.

Mr. Hyman is a great believer in giving his musical numbers the proper setting and in linking them up with pictures. He has found the short subjects most valuable in this particular. He keeps at hand a full list of the single reels that are obtainable and is able to select on most occasions just the interlude that he has arranged for a particular bill.

Soap Suds Machine for Exploiting "Suds"

Casino Theatre, Spokane, Wash., Gets Great Co-operation from Soap Manufacturer

WALTER L. FENNEY, of the Casino theatre, of Spokane, Wash., created a great deal of comment in his town and put over Mary Pickford's "Suds" in grand style, through an exploitation stunt that he arranged with the Western Soap Manufacturing Company. So successful was this idea that Mr. Fenney succeeded in getting the soap company to willingly cooperate with any exhibitor in the country who desires to use the same device.

The whole idea is best explained by Mr. Fenney's letter, in which he says: "Getting together with the Western Soap Manufacturing Company, of this city, to very good advantage, we secured from them what is called a suds machine. This we placed in our lobby for the week, and it proved to be 'the talk of the town.' The machine is a very simple affair, the invention of Mr. Roper, of the Western Soap Company. It consists of nothing more than the pan and cone and small hydraulic force-water pump, which is run by a small motor attached to the light socket.

"As the pump is not over 34 inches long and 14 inches wide, it was easily concealed behind the cutout.

"The machine uses the same water over and over again and all that is necessary to keep it working is the addition of a solution of boiled liquid soap. You can see the result in the photograph.

"In addition to the lobby display, we had a simple but effective stage setting. On one side of the stage we placed an old style wooden wash tub with wringer and wash board attached. Behind this a cutout of an extremely fatigued looking woman wringing her clothes. On the opposite side of the stage was placed a modern electric washing machine and standing behind it a wax model of a woman at ease. Then, running flat across the floor of the stage, we spelled the words S-U-D-S in wrapped soap. The electric washer was loaned by a local hardware store, and they mailed to their mailing list post cards, on which they said:

"'You can see Mary Pickford in "Suds" at the Casino theatre all this week for thirty-five cents. You can see suds in the One Minute Electric Washer at Ware Brothers Company any time, for nothing. SEE 'EM BOTH.'

"All this and a well-planned newspaper campaign, the use of twenty billboards, put the picture over in grand style, and everyone was well satisfied.

"Mr. Roper, of the Western Soap Company, tells us that if any theatres, particularly those along the west coast, would like to use the suds machine for lobby display they are perfectly welcome to it. Of course they would have to stand the freight or express charges and assume the responsibility of taking proper care of it. It is not a heavy machine but it is rather bulky."

This is the second company that has offered to cooperate with exhibitors throughout the country in exploiting "Suds." The other is the Thor Washing Machine Company, which has branch offices and salesrooms in most of the cities in the States.

State Road Detour Provides Advertising Idea

Anything unusual can be used to good advantage for the exploitation of motion pictures is shown by the way in which Aaron Shusterman, manager of the Strand theatre, New Brunswick, N. J., filled his theatre with capacity audiences for a week because four miles of a detour road running through the city were nearly unfit for automobile traffic.

Just outside of New Brunswick the detour-road stood in a four-mile stretch of dirt road bed which the spring thaws and lack of use had left rutty and bumpty. Machines were forced to go slowly over this stretch and for that reason it offered an advantageous position for billboard advertising. Three days before Norma Talmadge in "The Woman Gives" opened for a week at the Strand practically every tree and post along both sides of this entire four miles of rough going became decorated with large white signs, on which bold black letters blazoned to the effect that the roads were bad, but "The Woman Gives," which was playing at the Strand, would make up for the discomfort caused by the road conditions. In New Brunswick Mr. Shusterman arranged for space at the principal intersecting street corners and erected numerous signs bearing guiding hands and letting: "Straight ahead for the Strand theatre and a good show," "This way to 'The Woman Gives.'" Not satisfied with that Mr. Shusterman made a round of the garages on the road and arranged with them to display special signs advising tourists to leave their machines there for gasoline, oil, and cleaning while they attended the Strand. This special exploitation on the First National attraction combined with his usual newspaper advertising made the week "The Woman Gives" was the attraction at the Strand the best week it enjoyed during the hot summer months.

Rivoli Has Pleasing Specialty This Week

It is the stage setting that especially recommends the Rivoli specialty number this week, a combination singing and ballet act, under the title of "In a Watteau Frame." The idea is to imitate a painting, using the dancers to represent the persons of the supposed canvas. A drop with a cut out of suit-size so that the dancers will be in proportion is hung in one. About four feet from the stage floor a small second stage is placed, its top flush with the cut out opening. Back of this drop is a landscape canvas. The drapes part showing two dancers, Paul Oscard and Vera Myers, attired in white Colonials, posted on the platform mentioned. They hold this position during the rendition of an appropriate song by Charlotte Bergh who sits in front of the "picture," as she sings, also in costume.

At the close of the song, the singer feigns slumber and the dancers give their portion of the number, snatches of several dances of the period including the minuet. They then assume their first pose as the singer wakes and hold it during the rendition of a portion of the same composition.

The back canvas is dimly lighted in green and pink varying in hue and nicely blended and serves only as a background for the figures silhouetted. The frame of the "painting" is in keeping with the period represented, being a painted representation with many fancy scrolls and elaborate in design and coloring. A painted balcony balustrade masks the back drop. Much of the artistic effect is secured by the blending of various colored floods.

Clever Exploitation Idea for "Strange Boarder"

As a part of the exploitation campaign for "The Strange Boarder" at the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, Harry S. Lorch, Chicago Goldwyn exploitation representative, and W. H. Rhoda, manager of the theatre, utilized a cleverly worked out stunt which won a page of tie-up advertising in the Wisconsin News, for which the theatre manager paid nothing, and first page stories for four days. The newspapers, of course, was given full credit for the stunt.

A man advertised as the "strange boarder" was sent to certain stores at certain hours of the day for four days. The page ad contained the ads of six participating stores, telling the day and the hour when the "strange boarder" would be in that particular place. The newspaper stories carried descriptions of the man and the clothes he wore every day. Each day the first person who tapped the "strange boarder" on the shoulder or the arm, having a copy of the Wisconsin News with the ad of the Merrill theatre facing out, and said: "You are the Wisconsin News' "strange boarder" who is coming to the Merrill Theatre," received a season's pass to the Merrill Theatre from Manager Rhoda.

The "strange boarder" was discovered on each day and the four passes given out, but the resulting publicity and interest in Will Rogers in "The Strange Boarder" carried over for the entire engagement and, despite some of the hottest days of the summer, the picture's business surpassed that of most bookings for the season. The whole town was wild over the stunt and fell for it as though it had been the newest of exploitation campaigns.

Druggist Capsules Contained Advertising

Hilliger of Fruitvale, Cal., Has a New Exploitation Idea Which Listens Good

L. J. HILLIGER, "a man of the people," and owner of the Fruitvale, Cal., theatre as well, has become something of a local hero. His showing of 'For the Soul of Rafael" has also made him something of a local magnate. The recipe is not patented, Mr. Hilliger assures us, so that we are at liberty to divulge its ingredients for the pleasure and profit of his fellow-exhibitors.

When Hilliger booked "For the Soul of Rafael," his sixth sense of exploitation told him that the title was strongly suggestive of some secret concoction that was a balm for the soul. It required no scholar's learning to associate "spirit" and soul, and accordingly the brain fruit of this up-to-the-minute Fruitvale manager blossomed and produced an exploitation campaign that was as effective as it was inexpensive.

Hilliger laid in a generous supply of druggist's capsules, which cost three for a cent. He then ordered two thousand copies of the picture of the drinking scene in "For the Soul of Rafael," the cut being one of the stock cut that go with the press-book on the picture. The pictures were printed on tissue paper and were three by six inches in size. At the bottom of the picture appeared the mysterious phrase "Scene at the Fruitvale theatre Monday and Tuesday. No soft drinks used." Hilliger had a picture inserted in each capsule. As the picture was printed on tissue, it easily folded into the capsule. With the capsule went a short note to his mailing list, the first line reading: A RECIPE: and the second line in smaller type reading: "For the Soul." At the bottom in minute type headed by the word, "Directions," was printed: "Spread the contents of capsule out, and expose to light—do not spill."

In the left corner of the envelope in which the note and capsule were cut out, was printed "For the Soul," giving the contents a mysterious significance. The officials of Fruitvale were all victimized by the recipe. To make matters more exciting, Hilliger had a boy pass out capsules with the tissue insert on the street, to men only. The curiosity of the town was thus aroused. In addition, Hilliger sent capsules out to the "Fruitvale Register," and the joke was considered good enough to get mention in the news columns of the local paper.

The lobby of the Fruitvale was covered with the drinking scene of the picture, and the day of the opening of "For the Soul of Rafael" was marked by a double-column advertisement in the press, with the drinking scene featured.

All told the stunt was appreciated as being timely and clever, and the sympathetic fans of Fruitvale flocked to the theatre.

Reminds Patrons of Pleasant Times in His Theatre

Constantly reminding patrons of pleasant times they have had in his theatre as a means of getting their interest for current and future attractions is a method of newspaper advertising which has gained great results for Joe Goldberg, advertising manager of the Strand theatre at Louisville, Ky. He holds the logical theory that a big success at a theatre is the greatest hold that can be gained on patronage and therefore it is good business to remind people that current attractions are at the same theatre. Such advertising, he argues, is sure of attention for the name of a picture which they have seen and enjoyed will hold the interest of a reader, to the rest of the announcement.

In Louisville the phrase "Ringing the bell" is accepted as the neatest way of expressing the reaching of the ultimate goal of a worthy ambition. Mr. Goldberg made use of this phrase in large black letters to head off an advertisement which was printed in the middle of the second week of the biggest three weeks' business ever done by the Strand. The advertisement was worded:

"Ringing the Bell!!!
"Seems to be the Strand's Favorite Pastime These Days.
"Last Week it was 'Yes or No'
"This week it is
"'Why Change Your Wife?'
"Only Three Days More. By the Way:
"Next Week the Strand Hopes to
"RING THE BELL AGAIN
With
"'THE YELLOW TYPHOON'
"With Anita Stewart.
"Harold McGrath's Story of the Woman Who Lived for Excitement.
"Yes, Shakespeare said a mouthful when he said 'The Play's the Thing.'"

Simple But Artistic Setting Adds Much to Capitol Specialty

ARTIST JOHN WENGER has provided a stage setting for the ballet number at the Capitol theatre this week that lifts what would otherwise have been a very ordinary dancing act into a specialty of the first water.

The setting, however, is very simple. A cut out woods drop is hung in one. Back of this is a landscape backing. Up to the skyline the drop is painted practically black, no objects being discernible. The skyline is irregular, suggesting a rugged country with the horizon some distance away. The sky varies in color from a deep purple at the bottom to a brilliant pink at the borders. A number of stars shine in the purple portion of the sky. The lightings used are artistically arranged.

The ballet artists are attired in appropriate costumes for the number being rendered, "Hungarian Dance No. 6." The act opens with a quartette in a Hungarian folk dance. Later these girls are joined by Mlle. Gambarelli and A. Oumansky. The number introduces the spirit of the Gypsy dances and music which, together with the exceptional background provided, makes one of the best bits of entertainment to be found on Broadway this week.

"Peter Rabbit" Club See "Edgar" Comedy

As advertising for "Edgar Takes the Cake" while playing at Barbee's Loop theatre, Chicago, a special showing for the members of the Peter Rabbit Club, a Chicago children's organization was arranged.

Harry S. Lorch, Goldwyn's exploitation representative in Chicago got in touch with the Peter Rabbit Club in Chicago, which has 3,000 members made up of children who have read, or had read to them, at least one of Thornton W. Burgess' Peter Rabbit stories published in the Chicago American. He arranged with the American to admit the 3,000 members of the Peter Rabbit Club free between the hours of 11 a. m. and 3 p. m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

The American did all the rest. Starting Monday, it ran a brief notice in full-face type on the theatrical advertising page announcing that members of the Peter Rabbit Club would be admitted free to see the "Edgar" story and also the feature film, "Going Some." Each day on the magazine page appeared a half column story about the "Edgar" comedy and the child actors in the film. A picture of Johnny Jones and Lucille Ricksen in the chief roles was run. The American arranged for children whose membership cards in the Peter Rabbit Club were numbered from 1 to 750 to go on Tuesday, those holding cards numbered from 751 to 1,500 on Wednesday, etc.

Chicago's Exploitation for "Humoresque"

Tie-up with Talking Machine Company in Windy City Brings Great Results

EXPLOITATION and advertising to the *n*th degree is being practised in Chicago to aid in putting over "Humoresque" at Orchestra Hall where the picture is playing an indefinite engagement. Space running all the way from a quarter page to a full page was used in the Chicago Herald Examiner and American. On the morning following the picture's opening a six column cut was used showing the crowds waiting in line before the theatre on Sunday.

Cartoons and interviews from well known personages on the appealing qualities of the picture also added their share to a dignified but persistent campaign of publicity and advertising. The billboard campaign was limited but adequate, consisting of 8,000 sheets being used. Dr. Frank Crane's editorial on the picture was reproduced and added to the talk about the picture in every part of Chicago.

A tie-up was effected with the Columbia Graphophone Company arranging for window displays in every store occupied by the company's dealers. Oscar A. Doob, Paramount exploitation representative at Chicago, arranged 22 of these displays in person in the "loop" district. One of the most effective was the arrangement in the store at Wabash and Adams corners. The sign "Humoresque" was placed so that it could be read from the opposite street, from the street cars and from the elevated railways. A concealed phonograph sent out the strains of the song on the street. A moving display was arranged with an old phonograph, the disc enlarged by placing a compo board circle on the machine. Around the edge of the circle were placed cut-outs of the 11 by 14 lobby cards. As the disc revolved the scenes rotated before the spectators. Every "Humoresque" record in town was sold as well as every record of "Eli, Eli" which, as at the Criterion theatre in New York, was sung for the prologue.

The Rudolph Wurlitzer company tied up in another way, placing an old violin in its windows, surrounded by "Humoresque" cards and enlargements. Later this violin, in a beautiful glass case, mounted on velvet, was placed in Orchestra Hall, making a dignified ballyhoo for the crowds. Wurlitzer convinced that the picture would be a potent force in encouraging parents to give children a musical education, also tied up with the newspaper advertisements on the picture. Its stores throughout the country, dealing in musical instruments, were instructed to tie-up with the picture whenever possible.

One sheets were placed on a number of hurdy-gurdies that went around Chicago playing, among other selections, "Humoresque."

One of the most unique performances in the history of the industry was given when the inmates of the Homes for Aged Jews in Chicago were invited to a performance. None of these guests were under 80 years of age. Two of them, over 90, had never seen a motion picture before. It was such an unusual incident that photographs were taken and the Chicago papers used cuts and stories on it.

As a final stunt a window display was arranged with all the Woolworth stores on the sheet music. The stores sold 5,000 copies of "Humoresque" the first week while the picture continues to be the center of interest for all Chicagoans.

Small Town Exhibitor Urges Use of Lobby Displays

Exhibitors who do not use lobby displays are overlooking a very successful method of building up patronage, especially effective for those doing business in the smaller cities or towns, in the opinion of A. H. Poxson, manager of the Rialto theatre, Valdosta, Ga. Those exhibitors who believe they are doing as well as possible because of the limited patronage their territory affords are making a big mistake, says this exhibitor in a town credited with 7,000 population, and a few tests of the effectiveness of a lobby display would prove how quickly patronage may be increased.

"Small city exhibiting is usually along ineffective lines," says Mr. Poxson. "There are two reasons for this and both of them are caused by the origin of the exhibitor himself. Either he is a city man who has seen an opportunity in a territory not served by a theatre, or else he is a home product. Either class is ignorant of the fact that prejudice is the thing which runs or ruins a theatre. Motion pictures are still so young that in every city, town or hamlet there are a great many people who became prejudiced against them in their early stage when they were presented in remodeled stores and with poor light and accommodation. Small town exhibitors have not taken the pains to overcome this prejudice for they do not realize it exists. They know what good entertainment present day pictures are and take it for granted that everybody else knows.

"Now a small town is usually ruled socially by a small clique and it is usually the members of this small clique that hold this prejudice. They are not narrow-minded, the exhibitor has done nothing to make them change their opinions of the 'movies.' There is the same kind of advertising in the newspapers, the theatre always looks the same, so why should they form the opinion that the pictures have changed?

"That is where the lobby display comes in. It gives the theatre owner the same chance of gaining the esteem of his neighbors as does hedge clipping, grass cutting, sidewalk cleaning and flower growing give the householder. It gives him the opportunity of showing the oldest inhabitant that his business is respectable. Everybody in a small town will take the trouble to look at anything unusual and there is where the particular attraction exploitation value comes in. Keep your lobby always fresh looking with a tasty display in it, and then with a fifty foot front you have 2,500 square feet of advertising space for special exploitation that will do more for you personally than the same space in a national magazine could.

"Here is a sample of the way the lobby display, especially a special one will attract attention in a small place. For 'The Idol Dancer' I used an imitation sea grass mat for the walls and the ceilings. The remainder of my display was made up of cut-outs and three and six sheets, but the sea grass was the big novelty as I knew it would be simply because it was unusual. The home paper published a story on where I got it from and my description of how it was made. If there was anyone within Valdosta who did not see it they were bedridden. Farmers drove past the theatre coming into town and would stop to come into the lobby and feel it. That is the attention it attracted.

"Naturally with that interest in a mere lobby display the interest in the showing of the production itself was tremendous.

Describing the Capitol Vocal Numbers

"MOON OF MY DELIGHT," from the "In a Persian Garden" song cycle by Liza Lehmann, is being used as a vocal solo at the Capitol this week with Sudworth Frasier as the artist.

Mr. Frasier is garbed in a Persian style garment and sings before a stage setting showing a moon-lit sky masked off by a half-circle effect horizon.

The second vocal number on the Capitol bill is a costume rendition by Bertram Peacock as the soloist, with Tommy Dowd as the 'Lord High Chancellor's trainbearer," of excerpts from "Iolanthe," the Gilbert and Sullivan opera. The stage setting provided is a black velvet drop dressed with bronzed potted palms and a bench.

"Everywoman" Still Getting Cood Exploitation

Paraphrasing the proverbs "Everywoman" improves with age, provided she has a good exploitation man behind her. This was the deduction when this picture was shown recently at the Rex theatre, Eugene, Ore., and an exploitation campaign that took in every possible angle of publicity and advertising was staged in connection with the booking of the picture by the management of the Rex theatre and E. O. Childs, exploitation representative of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at Portland, Ore.

Here are a few of the helps that were included in the exploitation campaign:

A full double page of co-operative ads was used in the Eugene Daily Guard on Saturday, the day before the opening of the picture's run:

Attractive lobby displays, showing "Everywoman" being drawn into the grinding net of fate. Illustrations from the production also featured this display;

Billboard tie-ups with other mercantile establishments;

Window displays in shoe stores and fashion shops in which posters and photographs from "Everywoman" dominated the display;

A tie-up with the Rexall stores, which took a unique twist by offering a few passes to women making purchases on every quarter hour—exactly.

Kinema of Salt Lake City Builds Fine Lobby Display

The engagement of "Shipwrecked Among the Cannibals" at the Kinema theatre, Salt Lake City, was characterized by an exploitation campaign of unusual magnitude.

A lobby display that was a revelation to Salt Lake City picture patrons was a part of the campaign conducted.

Fifteen large palm trees were used in this exploitation stunt as well as a dozen smaller ones. The box office was transformed into a Cannibal hut and on the inside of the lobby were arranged numerous exhibits, curios, relics, etc., of New Guinea which were loaned by the Government's local Naval Recruiting station. Greenlights were used during the exhibition of this picture, giving the entire lobby a sort of moon-light appearance.

The lobby display attracted unusual attention and the newspaper advertising was well done. An excellent publicity story of the adventures of the exploring photographers was very effective.

Motion Picture Forms Basis of Lecture

Keeping in touch with community activities, and especially those in which women are engaged, is a quick and simple way of building up a large patronage for a small town or neighborhood theatre, according to James H. Rutherford, manager of the Bijou theatre, Bay City, Mich. As proof of this contention he offers the way he made D. W. Griffith's "The Idol Dancer" provide a convincing argument for a paper on the subject that modern fashions are modest compared to those which have been in vogue. The woman who was preparing the paper on this subject was a regular attendant at the Bijou and a personal acquaintance of Mr. Rutherford. Therefore he had no hesitancy in mentioning the fact that the picture demonstrated something that could be of use to her in her paper and he declares he chose "The Idol Dancer" merely because it was the attraction at his theatre during the same week that the paper was to be read at the club. He declares a little thought would have connected up any other picture. The paper was one of the greatest hits which had ever appeared on a program of the local women's club, and that the only members of the club who did not see "The Idol Dancer" were those who were out of the city and could not get back before it closed. Mr. Rutherford's audience was not entirely made up of women, for the men folks of the club women's families found a strange interest in the production after they had been informed that it proved conclusively that knee length skirts and a girdle instead of a were modest compared to the garb of the heroine of the picture.

"Ham and Egg" Boxers Advertise "Daredevil Jack" at Frisco

When "Daredevil Jack" was booked to the College theatre of San Francisco first run, the Pathe Exchange assistant manager, W. K. Kofeldt, agreed to assist in exploiting the picture.

Consequently prior to the opening date of the first episode, Mr. Kofeldt made arrangements with a motor truck company for the use of a machine for a co-operative advertising idea as will be explained by the accompanying cuts on the opposite page.

The house carpenter of the College theatre and Mr. Kofeldt rigged up the boxing ring shown, a couple of "ham and egg" boxers were secured and the truck after Police department permission had been secured made daily trips about the city, putting on two-minute rounds, much to the amusement of thousands at every stop the car made and to the subsequent advantage of "Daredevil Jack" at the College.

Award Prizes for Best Reviews of Serial

Here is another record of a small town showman who is displaying good sense in operating his theatre, the Star, located at Meadford, Ontario, Canada.

James Morrison, manager of the Star, has recently completed his engagement of the serial "The Invisible Hand" and as a means of "selling" the theatre and building interest in pictures offered three prizes for the three best essays on the production.

The result was surprising and most satisfactory from every standpoint. The winner of the first prize was a fourteen-year-old girl who wrote a detailed synopsis running probably 2,500 words. Mr. Morrison published the essay in an issue of the Meadford Mirror, with a photograph of the prize winner, all of which was good publicity for both.

Meadford is a small town, 2,400 population, and the essay competition was an event in which every one in town was interested. Mr. Morrison is convinced that exploitation pays and is planning other inexpensive advertising stunts for his house, which the NEWS hopes to report in the near future.

Cohan Compositions Being Used at Strand This Week

FOR the initial showing of "45 Minutes from Broadway" at the Strand this week, a very cleverly arranged musical program has been compiled from the George M. Cohan compositions.

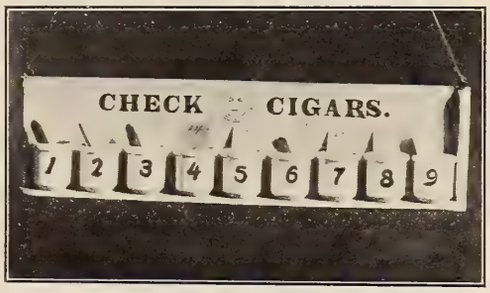
The overture is "Cohanesque Rhapsody" compiled by M. L. Lake especially for the occasion and includes excerpts from a number of the Cohan songs, including a bit from "45 Minutes from Broadway."

The vocal number is "So Long, Mary," one of the song hits from "45 Minutes." It is being sung by the Lyric male quartette.

"Bride and Groom" Stunt Works Well in Milwaukee

If you saw a bride and groom in full wedding regalia step out of a decorated cab and walk across the sidewalk to a furniture store window you would be sure to stop and look at them.

When such an episode occurred about every ten minutes for five consecutive days in Milwaukee's downtown district it is no small wonder that Milwaukeeans knew that "Married Life" was to be the attraction at the Strand theatre for the ensuing week.



A regular old-fashioned hack with regulation cabby was procured by Manager Frank Cook of the Strand theatre and suitably decorated with signs and imitation flowers. The hack paraded up and down the main streets of Milwaukee carrying a young man and woman in full wedding dress. Following a prearranged program the cab would stop in front of various shops where the couple was met by a middle-aged man. The bride would fling her arms around him calling him "daddy" and after a little comment the trio would go to the show windows to inspect house furnishings. All of the dialogue was carried on by the pair entirely oblivious of the crowd of passersby who congregated. Whenever the cab stopped it was quickly surrounded by a large crowd and police intervention was necessary several times. Needless to say "Married Life" received some splendid advertising.

Milwain Solved Lobby Smoking Problem

Manager of the Blue Moon Theatre, Bardwell, Ky., Has Plan That Should Appeal to All Small Town Managers

EXHIBITORS who are troubled with prospective patrons, especially men, congregating in the lobby of their theatre may follow with success the example of J. A. Milwain, manager of the Blue Moon theatre at Bardwell, Ky. Mr. Milwain discovered that a great deal of the congestion in the lobby of his theatre was caused by the reluctance of his men patrons to throw away half smoked cigars before entering the theatre, and that after purchasing tickets they would stand in the lobby until their smoke was finished.

"I could understand the reluctance of these men to waste their cigars especially now at the price a good smoke costs," said Mr. Milwain, "but at the same time the habit of congregating in the lobby was hurting my business. A smoke filled entrance was not especially inviting to women, and I noticed that a large number of people would turn away without going to the box office, the number of people in the lobby evidently causing the assumption that the theatre was crowded. I couldn't prohibit smoking in the lobby, nor could I order these smokers to keep moving, so finally hit upon an idea which I thought would stop them from smoking in the lobby, by making a joke of it.

The cigar checking rack originated by Manager Milwain, of the Red Moon theatre, Bardwell, Ky.

"The week following the birth of my idea the Blue Moon was showing 'Back to God's Country.' I utilized a large cut-out of Wapi, the dog, and placing it directly in front of one of the side walls of the lobby, I had a large sign hung around his neck reading:

"'Let me guard your cigar until you come out.'"

"In back of this cut-out I had placed a number of porcelain holders such as can be procured from any electric light company, by asking for street lamp sockets. Each holder had a number on it and inside was a ticket holding the same number. A smaller sign requested smokers to identify it when they came out and that their cigar would be saved for them.

"I had not really felt that many would utilize the holders, my idea in putting them there was to keep the men from blockading the lobby. The second night of the showing of 'Back to God's Country' I found that I hadn't enough holders for those that wanted them, and I put more in the following day. The men seem to appreciate the opportunity offered them to save their smokes, complaints from women patrons about the stench of burnt out cigars inside the theatre have stopped, but in addition the idea gained some free publicity for the theatre. The novelty of it attracted the attention of newspaper writers and the Blue Moon did not suffer."

The porcelain containers which Mr. Milwain utilized can be procured from any electrical company. The copper inside should be removed and then ashes and other dirt is easily washed out with the result that they are always fresh looking.

Parking Space for Cars Good Exploitation Bet

The Forest theatre, an aerodrome located at Highland Park, N. J., gives some methods of building a profitable summer business for any country exhibitors whose house is situated near any well travelled automobile road. The Forest theatre is located on the Lincoln Highway. Parking space for automobiles and conveniences for campers were some of the difficulties overcome by the Forest theatre.

Originally outside of providing convenient water and plenty of room, the tourists were to be left to themselves. Inside the park were suggestions that the theatre offered a good way of spending the evening and hand bills were distributed to the parties that stopped. Vendors of automobile supplies, however, were quick to see the business opportunity that the large parking space offered and bid for concessions inside the inclosure. The management of the resort agreed to this, feeling that any attraction which the parking space had to offer would be a help to the theatre.

While the theatre had always done a good summer business this new attracted population brought practically to the door of the theatre. An all-day ride in an automobile creates a taste for relaxation during the evening and motion pictures within a stones throw of the free camping grounds brought the occupants of practically every car that stopped into the theatre during the evening.

Suggestion Box Works Well at the Kinema

The Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, California, has found a suggestion box located near the exits, and suggestion pads on the backs of the seats in the theatre are an inexpensive and most successful means of judging the effects of pictures upon patrons. The pads are small and contain a notation at the top of each sheet inviting patrons to use it as means of criticising anything in connection with the theatre or of the picture. Two weeks before the theatre showed Constance Talmadge in "The Perfect Woman," an announcement of the coming of the production was printed on the bottom of each of the suggestion sheets. The first night this announcement was on the sheets eight comments were found in the boxes, all expressing pleasure at the coming of the star. Accordingly, the following week a cut of Miss Talmadge was run on the back page of our house program with a brief announcement as to the title of the picture and the dates of the showing. Newspaper advertising was also based upon the star. Another feature of the operation of the Kinema theatre which was exceptionally good results is the method of sending personal invitations each week to the dramatic critics with a request as to what accommodations they desire for the opening night in place of the usual passes.

Newspaper Argument Exploitation Medium at Williamsport

Newspaper discussion, minus the slightest tinge of any connection with theatrical publicity, gave keen exploitation to "Why Change Your Wife" which was booked for the Grand theatre, at Williamsport, Pa. While the discussion of divorce through readers' letters in the press has previously been used for the exploitation of this production, Eli M. Orowitz, exploitation representative at the Philadelphia Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, gave it a new touch by eliminating any semblance of publicity.

The argument was started through the columns of the Williamsport Sun, which officially asked its readers for an expression of opinion on the divorce problem under the caption of "Why Change Your Wife." As an incentive it offered three prizes for the best essays, ranging from $10 to $25. Letters poured in by the score and public interest in the argument waxed hot.

Throughout the entire contest not a single mention was made of the motion picture. When at the conclusion of the contest, however, the theatre announced the showing of "Why Change Your Wife" so strong had the division of opinion become that anyone who went to the "movies" at all wanted to see how Cecil B. DeMille looked at the problem. The stunt had worked!

Nesbitt Adopts System in Managing the Linwood

Here Is a Small Town Exhibitor Who Can Give the City Guy Some Pointers

"NOT all of the live wire showmen come from the small towns—some of them are still there," which quotation will serve to introduce to our readers Earle S. Nesbitt, of Tarkio, Mo., manager of the Linwood theatre, the author of the following article at our request, on how he has systematized certain parts of his job so that he is able, after the expenditure of a little time each week, to have at hand a fund of information that the average exhibitor tries vainly to carry around in his head.

The article is Mr. Nesbitt's own story. There have been no additions or erasures. None were needed.

"To so accumulate and segregate all the reviews, producers advertisements, newspaper ads, lobbies, prologues, stage settings and novelty exploitations recordea in the various trade journals, in such a manner that all such data on one certain picture would be available to you on a moment's notice, would seem to be somewhat of a task on first thought. And then to continue this work until you had such information on practically every picture that came on the market, might be considered by some exhibitors as requiring far more time than they could possibly spare. Of course, no one will doubt that given such information, it would be a very easy task to buy only the cream of the market (the producers willing, of course), and to have A-1 exploitation and presentation on each and every program offered to the public.

"But man, it's simplicity itself, and six hours or at the outside ten hours each week will do the trick. And in return, good programs day in and day out, exploitation designed for your use by McCormick, Franklin, Ruffner, Thomas, and all the other successful exhibitors. Prologues, stage settings and presentation novelties that Grauman, Rothaphel, Newman and other geniuses have offered with pride in their cinema palaces. All this right at your finger tips the minute that you want it. And it's live stuff, stuff that you can use, stuff that you need and can bank on because it has all been tried and found not wanting.

"The requirements are few. Just such trade journals as have your confidence—don't monkey your time away with others. A card system of 5 x 8 cards and two drawers for filing them, with alphabetical guide cards for separating them into sections. An innate desire for work and a certain amount of stick-to-it-iveness.

"Now as your trade journals come to your hands each week get out your drawers of cards and start right in at the first of the magazine. The first thing that will appear on a picture is either a producer's advertisement or an announcement of the production of same. Right here, allow me to say that the producers put their very best advertising brains in their advertisements to the exhibitor—not in the press book. And that by a little working over, the exhibitor can use their arguments or sales talk save when they play havoc with the superlatives. You can't tell those kind of lies to your trade; or, at least, not so often.

"In working, go straight through the paper, it being easy to keep the cards in alphabetical order. Each card should contain information on one picture only. It will probably take twelve or more issues of a trade journal to exhaust all the news of the various points in the history of a picture from its inception via producers ad to exhibitors' comments and exploitation on same.

"When you have finished collecting data on a picture, you will find that you have an excellent guide in your buying from the exchange on the one hand and on the other, the best press book in the world for selling to the public. You can use both sides of the card, making one side the buying side, the other the selling. The following is a copy of one of the card's with the buying side first:

"Mark Twain—'Huckleberry Finn.' Paramount.

"News, 3/6, 2393: Mark Twain's Immortal Story Lives on the Screen. The interest of the picture never flags. The author's intention is revealed pictorially and dramatically.

"World, 2/21, 1290: Vastly entertaining. Good for grown-ups as well as children. Well made. Delightful entertainment.

"Billboard, 3/6, 82: This show was well patronized at the Rivoli, children and young folks being strongly represented. The picture is long drawn out, lacks continuity, but has some good laughs. Doubt whether average audience will go wild over this. Entertainment value—good. People who have read the book will enjoy it. Atmosphere absolutely true to life.

"Consensus (Wid's): Mark Twain lives again on the screen in a picture of wide appeal. (E. H.) The exhibitor who can play it is assured of big business and a grateful patronage.

"Exhibitor Comments: 'A very good picture which played my house one week to big business.' 'An average picture to poor business three days.' 'This picture appealed to our audiences. Played it one week, however, to poor business.'

"And on the reverse side, the selling dope, this being mostly index and requiring that your magazines should be filed according to dates:

"Producers Ads: N, 1-10, first; N, 1-17, first; W, 1-17, first; N, 1-24, 932; W, 1-31, first; N, 2-7, first; N, 2-14, 1549; W, 2-14, first; W, 2-21, first; N, 2-28, 2119; N, 3-13, 2410.

"Newspaper Ads: N, 2-28, 2119; N, 3-6, 2313; N, 4-3, 79; W, 5-15, 951.

"Exploitation: N, 3-13, 2513; W, 4-24, 571; N, 5-8, 3995.

"Lobby: N, 4-37, 2908.

"Stage Setting: N, 3-20, 2696; W, 3-20, 1960.

"Prologues: W, 3-20, 1960; N, 4-10, 3279.

"'Twain's Huck Has Premiere Showing'—N, 2-27, 1444.

"'Doob Jazzes Ohio Town for Premiere Showing'—W, 2-7, 886.

"'State-Wide Hook-up' — W, 3-6, 1629.

"That is just one example. You will have the same line of information on every picture that you play—valuable information, to say the least. And it is quite a bit of knowledge to be contained on one little 5 x 8 inch card.

"How it Works: When Mr. Salesman calls, full of bull as usual, you simply pick out the card on the picture in question. Read the various reviews, not forgetting the comments of your brother exhibitors. Take a glance at the other side to see how much exploitation dope you have on the picture. And then, decide with something like brains whether or not you can pay his price.

"As soon as you buy a picture, take the card out Drawer No. 1, which contains dope on all pictures which you have not contracted for, and slide into its alphabetical place in Drawer No. 2, which contains the cards of the pictures which you have under contract. Then, when making up your bookings, you will find Drawer No. 2 an invaluable aid in getting the proper variety in your programs, in selecting pictures for specific occasions, and etc.

"And lastly, when you come to play said picture, look up all references in your trade journal files, fill your mind full of the picture's qualities, become drunk with its greatness, work like hell and you will probably make a few dollars more than you would have done under a blind or trust to the press book system; but, best of all, you will have the supreme satisfaction of knowing that you did your darndest."

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

Exhibitor's Reports De Luxe

EXHIBITORS' reports on the feature pictures playing leading theatres of the country are shown on this page. Only such houses as play a picture a full week are represented. After publication once on this page the reports are transferred to the "Exhibitors' Box Office Reports" department appearing on the pages backing the "Plan Book" reviews.

The theatres reporting or the cities from which the reports have been secured are not given, since few managers of leading theatres will permit their opinions on this page to be quoted.

Managers who are willing to assist in compiling this most valuable exhibitor service will be furnished blanks for returns and assurance is given that their reports will be considered strictly confidential.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Carter De Haven, en route to New York with the print of "Twin Beds," stopped over in Chicago last week for a visit at the Rothacker Laboratories. President Watterson R. Rothacker is back from Europe, and was expected to arrive at the Chicago plant this week after a few days spent in New York.

Richard Robertson, advertising and exploitation manager of the Independent Films Association, left Chicago last week for Los Angeles for the purpose of creating a campaign of exploitation behind the new series of Pinnacle Comedies that will equal in scope and distinctness, the campaign which has been started on the Neal Hart features.

Kenneth L. Eaton, formerly connected with Paramount in the Minneapolis territory, and Howard Robertson are the latest additions to the sales force of Independent.

Finishing touches are being put on the new front of Majestic theaatre at Racine, Wisconsin, and the interior of the house has been cleaned and redecorated. Manager Wolcott hopes to reopen early in September.

Nathan Bloomberg, of the Rialto theatre, Racine, has entered the ranks of the benedicts, having been married on August 24th to a charming society girl of that city.

The premier Chicago showing of Charles Ray's first Associated First National Picture, "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," was held in Universal's projection rooms, Consumers building, last Friday, and the picture produced an excellent impression on those who viewed it. The consensus of opinion was that Ray was up to the high standard he set in previous pictures and that Dorothy Devore made a very appealing Mary. Also that there was plenty of action and clever comedy in the screen adaptation of the famous Cohan play. The picture started on its three week's run on Madison street at the Rose on August 29th, and is drawing big houses.

Rex Lawhead, of the Lincoln Square theatre, Decatur, Illinois, dropped in last week to tell us that the $20,000 job of redecorating and refurnishing this sixteen hundred seat house, is practically complete and that the Lincoln Square will reopen on September 5th with Douglas Fairbanks in "The Mollycoddle" as the feature. Mr. Lawhead, who is a firm believer in the drawing power of good music, will have eighteen men in his symphony orchestra this season, having signed up several Chicago musicians of high reputation for a year in addition to his old players.

The feature of Milwaukee's B. P. O. E. week was the presentation of a new play, "When Elk Meets Elk," a screaming farce from the pen of Ralph T. Kettering, general representative of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago. Ralph should know whereof he writes, as he is one of the most active members of Chicago Lodge No. 4, and was a member of that prolific publicity committee for the Grand Lodge Convention recently held in Chicago.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer, of Chicago, announce the personnel of their executive and theatre staffs for the new season of 1920-1921. Norman E. Field is general manager of all their interests, while Ralph T. Kettering acts as their general representative. J. C. Matthews is general booking manager, while John J. Jones is the executive vaudeville booking director. Sadie Kusell is assistant to Mr. Matthews.

The Rialto theatre is managed by William Rosenblum with George Burdick and Al De Veto as assistant managers.

McVicker's theatre is managed by John G. Burch, with Chester Amberg and Starr Walsh as assistant managers.

The Randolph theatre is managed by Louis J. Jones, with Walter Moore and Jack Karno as assistant managers.

The Orpheum theatre is managed by George H. Moore, with Mike Simons as assistant manager. Mr. Moore is also manager of the Lyric theatre.

The Bijou Dream is managed by Sigmund Faller, with Ben Anderson as assistant manager.

The executive department, located in the Rialto Theatre Building, has Emil Mayer as Chief Accountant. The publicity department, presided over by Ralph T. Kettering, has Matt E. Niessen, as first assistant and Cyril Samuels as secretary. Adolph Linick will have the assistance of Sidney Weisman in the financial direction of the firm.

The first series of Pinnacle Comedies, consisting of twelve two-reelers, will be given their initial release November 1st, with appearances every two weeks thereafter, and according to Manager Eddy Eckels of Independent Films Association, options have already been granted the following exchanges for the rights on the comedies in their respective territory: Dooley Exchange, Syracuse and Buffalo; Savini Films, Atlanta; Magnet Film Company, Davenport and Omaha; B. D. Lewis Film Company, Dallas, San Antonio, Little Rock and Oklahoma City; Crescent Film Company, Kansas City; First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Minneapolis and Milwaukee; Twentieth Century Film Company, Philadelphia; Warner Film Attractions, Cleveland; Major Film Corporation, Boston; Pearce Films, New Orleans, and Greater Features, Inc., Seattle.

Announcement of the stars in the Pinnacle Comedies is being withheld until the insertion of the first colored insert advertisement in Motion Picture News, at the appearance of which a genuine surprise is promised the entire independent field.

Joe Friedman, president of Celebrated Players, is back from a ten days' vacation spent with his family at Charlevoix and is more than busy clearing off the mass of mail which accumulated on the big desk during his absence.

"Madame X," starring Pauline Fredericks, the picturization of the celebrated play of the same name, has been booked by the Barbee theatre for its premier Chicago showing.

Work is to start shortly on a palatial $125,000 moving picture house at Dixon, Illinois. Parties interested in the new house are not ready to have their names announced, as yet, but say they intend to make it one of the finest picture theatres in the state.

Ike Van Ronkel returned from New York last Monday in company with Maurice Fleckels and verified the report that they had purchased the Hallmark Exchanges at Chicago and Milwaukee and that the twenty-six Triangle releases are included in the transaction. This will give Messrs. Van Ronkel and Fleckels the rights to distribute these pictures in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. It is understood that Mr. Van Ronkel is negotiating for rights on a number of feature pictures for the same territory and expects to close up for them within a few days.

Harry Rice of Universal's Chicago Exchange, was in Peoria last week putting on a big exploitation and publicity campaign there in the interest of "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals." This picture had one of the longest and most successful runs recorded among the Madison street theatres, Chicago.

Manager Willard of Realart's Chicago Exchange, reports that "Youth" has been booked for a two weeks' run on Madison street, starting September 5, at the Rose theatre, and his prediction is that this production will be one of the biggest successes of the year. "Sweet Lavender," the first of Realart's Fall series was screened last week for Chicago exhibitors and many of those who were present declared it the best picture ever made by Mary Miles Minter.

Harry Weiss of Superior Screen Service, Inc., is preparing for the release of "For the Freedom of Ireland," the Creation Film Company's production which he will release in this territory.

Harry Spanuth of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, plans to put out a series of Billy Whiskers one reelers this Fall along the lines made successfully by the Billy Whiskers two-reel comedies he produced last Spring.

District Manager Wolfberg of Famous Players, has recovered his automobile which was stolen from him more than a week ago in South Chicago. Publicity Director Doob had just put a "What's Your Hurry" pennant on the car when it disappeared and he had a hard time convincing Mr. Wolfberg that his car was really stolen and that it was not all a press agent stunt.

Chicago's new motion picture palace, the Stratford theatre, located at 63rd and Halsted streets, is practically completed and the opening was scheduled for this week. The Stratford will be under the personal supervision of W. P. Clement, a well known motion picture manager. One of the many features of this new million dollar theatre will be a forty piece symphony orchestra under the supervision of Walter Blaufuss, the well known song composer. In addition to the regular forty piece symphony orchestra, which the Stratford will have, there will be a Jazz Orchestra which will be directed by John Alden, also well known as a composer of popular music and composer of "La Veeda" which is his latest hit. Rudolph Mangold, formerly concert master of the Riviera theatre and assistant concert master of the Chicago Grand Opera Company under the leadership of the late Cleofante Companinni, will conduct the Stratford's symphony orchestra. Mildred Fitzpatrick, who has been chief organist for Orchestra Hall ever since they put in motion pictures, leaves Orchestra Hall to become chief organist for the Stratford.

Recent additions to the Paramount Chicago organization include J. G. Mac Pherson, who enters the motion picture field after a successful career as a bond salesman, and will cover western Illinois; W. B. Singleton, formerly with Goldwyn at Cleveland, who will travel in Illinois territory and G. A. Schneider, who also came from Goldwyn office at Cleveland.

Educational in Southwest

Offices Will Be Opened in New Orleans and Dallas Immediately

ONE hundred per cent organization of the branch offices will be completed within a very few days, according to announcement this week from President E. W. Hammons, of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. This will include offices in every principal distributing center in the United States and Canada.

Carrying out the work that was started at the convention of Educational's branch managers for the eastern territory at the Hotel Astor, Henry Ginsberg, domestic sales manager, left this week on a tour of all the exchanges outside the eastern territory. His first stop will be in Atlanta where the office under the management of A. C. Bromberg has just been opened.

From Atlanta Mr. Ginsberg will go to New Orleans and Dallas where exchanges will be promptly opened. Many offers have been received from prominent film men who desire to become interested in those offices, but pending the completion of some other matters, installation of the offices has been held up. However, the demand for Educational product in those territories has determined immediate action.

During his trip Mr. Ginsberg will also make arrangements for offices in Denver and Salt Lake, this completing the entire system.

Distribution through Canada will begin with the full product in a few weeks, or just as soon as the legal priliminaries have been met. The Dominion company will be known as Canadian Educational Films, Inc., and there will be a main office in Toronto with a sales manager in charge and branch offices in St. Johns, Montreal, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. Physical distribution will be carried out through the Monarch Film Company, controlled by Messrs. Jule and Jay J. Allen.

Splendid Cast in "Dinty"

Neilan Claims Fine Support for Wesley Barry in New Production

MARSHALL NEILAN'S newest production, "Dinty," which serves as Wesley Barry's initial starring vehicle, boasts of the most notable cast ever assembled in a Neilan production, according to an announcement of the producers. This picture, now nearing completion at the Hollywood studios, was written by Mr. Neilan himself in collaboration with Marion Fairfax, head of the Neilan scenario department.

As "Dinty's" mother, Colleen Moore, the popular little actress of Christie fame, is given a dramatic character to portray. Marjorie Daw, who has gained wide prominence since her affiliation with Marshall Neilan a year ago in such pictures as "The River's End" and "Don't Ever Marry," is another important member of "Dinty."

As Jack North, the best friend of "Dinty," Pat O'Malley is given another part that equals his opportunities in "Go and Get It," in which he played the cub reporter. Noah Beery, one of the most popular character actors in pictures, portrays the part of Wong Tai, a Chinese "heavy." Offering a delightful contrast in the light situations of this picture are the personalities of Walter Chung, a little almond-eyed youngster about the age of Wesley Barry; Aaron Mitchell, a darkie with a penchant for the "shimmy," and Newton Hall, a little tough kid.

Among the other well-known artists in "Dinty" are J. Barney Sherry, who has met with notable success in recent Neilan pictures, Tom Gallery, Kate Price and Tom Wilson.

Form Welfare Organization

Universal Employees Launch New Association as Aid to Members

A MUTUAL welfare organization of great scope and promise has been organized by employees of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, it has just been announced. It is known as the "Universal Mutual Welfare Association" and its purpose is to aid Universal employees who are sick or otherwise in distress.

Although the organization had its origin among the members of the night force at the Universal laboratories, Fort Lee, the idea has spread rapidly through the rest of the factory and other branches. Strongly backed by R. H. Cochrane, the first vice-president of Universal and other Universal officials, it is expected to become a world-wide organization with active branches in every part of the globe where Universal agencies are located. Already steps have been taken to organize branches of the Universal Mutual Welfare Association in the fifty odd Universal Exchanges throughout the United States and Canada.

A. L. Mohan, the night superintendent at the Universal Fort Lee factory, is president of the new organization. Other officials, all members of the factory night force, who organized the association, are W. T. Richards, vice-president; F. Stocklian, recording-secretary; J. O'Toole, financial secretary; J. Roth, treasurer, and H. Truax, sergeant-at-arms. The trustees are H. Quail, H. Webber and B. Aubry.

The association has elected four honorary members as follows: Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal; R. H. Cochrane, first vice-president; E. H. Goldstein, assistant to the president, and E. F. Murphy, general superintendent of Universal's Fort Lee factory.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Big Educational Special

Twenty Prints of Babe Ruth Pictures Working in New York City

TWENTY prints of the Educational special, "Babe Ruth—How He Knocks His Home Runs" are working in theatres in New York City alone, according to reports from the New York exchange. This single reel picture which was made during an actual 1920 championship game between the Yankees and the Cleveland Indians has been booked in every theatre on the Keith and Orpheum circuits throughout the United States and Canada. Among the theatres that played it this week are the Palace, New York and the State Lake, Chicago, the finest vaudeville houses in the country.

According to Educational, the picture has been given unusual publicity on the sporting pages in practically every city. It shows Babe Ruth participating in an actual game, shows him at the bat in ordinary camera action, and then analyzes in minute detail the swing that has made him famous. All the famous players of the two teams are shown, and among the other interesting features of it are slow motion analyses of the pitching of Carl Mays, the only underhanded twirler in the big leagues; Jack Quinn and the batting of Tris Speaker, the leading batter of the American League.

While there is comedy relief afforded by the appearance of a kid batter and through some clever trick photography, there is no element of drama in the reel, it being offered only as a special news subject though every portion of it was made for the exact purpose for which it is being offered. The film was made by Science Film Company.

Educational is supplying theatres with black and white enlargements from the film itself, preferring to use these rather than any posed pictures which do not appear in the actual film.

"Concert" Ready for Screen

Goldwyn Will Make Picture of Leo Ditrichstein Stage Success

ONE of the biggest of stage successes, the screen rights of which are controlled by Goldwyn, is ready to go into production at Goldwyn's Culver City studios. It is Hermann Bahr's comedy, "The Concert," which served Leo Ditrichstein as a starring vehicle for two seasons under the management of David Belasco. Victor Schertzinger will stop directing Mabel Normand pictures long enough to see that "The Concert" is properly translated into the films. He will again direct Miss Normand's pictures, however, upon her return to the Coast. She has just left for New York where she will spend several weeks in shopping.

The cast for the screen adaptation of Rupert Hughes' novel, "Canavan," was completed this week. It is to serve Tom Moore as a stellar vehicle. In his support are Sylvia Ashton, Naomi Childers, Bertram Grasby, N. E. Stimson and Sydney Ainsworth, E. Mason Nopper is directing this picture and has already started work on the production.

Director Reginald Barker has selected the last of the players who are to appear in the screening of Graham Moffat's Scottish comedy, "Bunty Pulls the Strings." Director Mason N. Litson will complete the seventh of the Booth Tarkington two-reel Edgar series of comedies this week and after a rest of seven days will begin work on the eighth.

Pioneer Has Play Rights

Stage Successes of Morris Rose, Vice-President, to Be Picturized

A NEW and interesting chapter in the history of the Pioneer Film Corporation will have its inception as a result of arrangements which have been consummated for the acquisition by the Pioneer for the film rights to the productions of Morris Rose. Mr. Rose is a vice-president of the Pioneer Film Corporation and is also a moving spirit in the theatrical producing field.

"Scandal", the comedy which had a long run on Broadway, and which is now making a tour of the country, is one of the productions which brought Mr. Rose well into the limelight as a producer and he has now in course of preparation and in rehearsal, a half dozen big plays, dramas, comedies and musical comedies, which will shortly find their way into Broadway houses.

The Pioneer Film Corporation will have the rights to the screen versions of all the Rose productions and in this connection, unusual interest centers on the fact that Miss June Wauker, who will now play the lead in "Scandal" and who was featured with the late Clifton Crawford in "My Lady Friends" is under the management of Morris Rose.

At Pioneer headquarters, it was said, that its forthcoming activities as a result of its close connection with the enterprises of Mr. Rose were on a scale which will delight the exhibitors throughout the country.

Frank Mayo's new Universal feature, "Hitchin' Posts," is rich in the atmosphere of the West of the '50's

"Kismet" Picture Gets Wide Publicity

With "Kismet," Robertson-Cole's special starring Otis Skinner still in the making, evidences of the interest with which this offering will be met by the American exhibitor and public are already evident, says the Robertson-Cole Company in a statement just issued by that organization.

"Daily newspapers throughout the country, dramatic journals and periodicals, fan magazines and a host of other mediums have been chronicling regularly the progress of the forthcoming masterpiece of the screen," continues the statement. "Mr. Skinner's entry into motion pictures has been heralded from one end of the country to the other as an event of extraordinary importance. And as the time approaches for the taking of the final 'shots,' the columns of publicity are growing in numbers and importance."

Ruth on "Location" Is Given Reception

Haverstraw, N. Y., having been selected for the "location" of "Babe" Ruth's picture, "Headin' Home," the Yankee batsman, his director, cameraman and other members of the company recently journeyed to that town to film some of the scenes for the forthcoming production. Although the baseball player's advent to that locality was kept a secret, states the producers, Kessel and Baumann, Ruth was not long in the vicinity before his identity was discovered. Then, according to Kessel and Baumann, the whole town "knocked off" work, "declared a holiday," and flocked to see the star "slugger" go through his paces before the camera.

"Hairpins" Heads Paramount Schedule

The feature release on the Paramount schedule for August 29 is "Hairpins," a Thomas H. Ince production in which Enid Bennett is the star. The picture already has played a week at the Rialto theatre, New York. C. Gardiner Sullivan was the author of "Hairpins" and Matt Moore is Miss Bennett's leading man.

"Devil's Pass-Key" Going Big

Breaking All Previous Universal Records, It Is Reported

"THE DEVIL'S PASS-KEY," Eric von Stroheim's production of Parisian love and intrigue, is reported to be breaking all previous Universal records for popularity and success. Although only released a few weeks ago, it already has been booked in hundreds of theatres from Coast to Coast, states Universal. The Universal home-office is flooded daily with telegrams of commendation, it was recently announced by Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal. The following statement has been issued by Universal in connection with "The Devil's Pass-Key."

"In New York and its environs alone, 'The Devil's Pass-Key' has been booked for a total of one hundred and forty days over the B. S. Moss, Keith and Proctor and Fox Circuits, it is reported by Charles Rosenzweig of the Big U Exchange. Keith's Regent and the Flatbush theatres, which are inaugurating a two-a-day policy, will show 'The Devil's Pass-Key' during the first week of their new schedule.

"The success of 'The Devil's Pass-Key' at the Capitol theatre, New York, was more than duplicated at the La Salle theatre, in Chicago, where it was exploited under the direct supervision of Joseph H. Mayer, Universal's director of publicity. The Chicago exploitation campaign, which consisted largely of effective teaser ads followed by elaborate display ads in all newspapers, backed up by an unusual lobby display and a colorful prologue, was repeated by Mayer in Cincinnati, with equal success.

"In Milwaukee the popularity of 'The Devil's Pass-Key' was phenomenal. Opening at Saxe's Alhambra theatre with two large circuses as the most dangerous opposition, the picture created more discussion among photoplay-patrons of that city than anything ever shown there on the screen. Previous to the showing Ed. J. Weisfeldt, manager of the Alhambra, predicted an unusual run.

"His predictions were justified. After the first day he wired as follows:

"I am very desirous of expressing satisfaction with 'The Devil's Pass-Key.' The week's exploitation stunts proved a great asset. The way Milwaukeans turned out, one would think the picture was to run only one day. The box office cashier had to be relieved twice, so steady was the receipts. Our prediction of the picture proving a big success is certainly being realized.

"Commendations on 'The Devil's Pass-Key' unite in boosting it because of its finished direction and production. A large percent of those who have seen the picture cannot be brought to believe that it was filmed in Universal City, Calif., and not in Paris. It is admitted that Stroheim has achieved next to the impossible in realistic duplication of foreign scene, atmosphere and mannerisms.

"Exceptional credit in the acting has gone to Sam de Grasse, Una Trevelyn, Clyade Filmore, Maude George and Mae Busch. So excellently did they interpret the unusual roles in the 'The Devil's Pass-Key' and so thoroughly were they in accord with von Stroheim's grasp of the theme that several of them have been selected by him for his next big continental picture, 'Foolish Wives,' which will be staged in another European centre of high life and intrigue, Monte Carlo.

"It is conceded that von Stroheim has brought a new note to the American screen, a note of realism, of subtle characterization, and absolute motivation of the succeeded successive events that take place in his photo-dramas."

Bennett Starts New Series

"The Truth About Husbands" First of Play Series; Two Others Follow

"THE Truth About Husbands" is the title of the first series of three special productions which will be produced from plays by Whitman Bennett for distribution by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., in addition to the four Lionel Barrymore productions under his direction which will be handled by the same distributors. "The Truth About Husbands" is the film adaptation of "The Profligate," and the title under which it will be released was decided upon by Mr. Bennett as one which gives a more accurate idea of the story than does the title of the play.

Anna Lehr has been selected to play the part of Jeanette, which is as near a leading part as the picture affords. When the play was produced in London no less than five world famous actors and actresses had parts in it. The part of Jeanette was played by Miss Olga Nethersole in the original production and in the other leading parts were Sir Johnston Forbes Robertson, Sir John Hare, Lewis Waller and Kate Rorke. Mr. Bennett has selected his cast for the film production, it is said, with full realization of the extraordinary demands of histrionic ability, which is made upon everyone appearing in the numerous big scenes with which the story abounds, and in addition to Miss Lehr, the following have prominent parts: Holmes E. Herbert, Maxy McAvoy, Ivo Dawson, Arthur Rankin, Richard Gordon, Lorraine Frost, Paul Everton and Elizabeth Gordon.

Full scope is also being given, says First National, in the production to the numerous opportunities the story presents for scenic effects. The many scenes in Italy, however, are the ones upon which Mr. Bennett and his art directors and scenic experts have specialized. Two settings are said to be especially effective and elaborate. These show an ancient palace in the hills near Florence, and an underground bacchanalian dance hall in Rome. Both settings have been reconstructed from photographs and special color charts in order that their detail may be exact.

Walter Woods Writes Arbuckle Story

Walter Woods, of the scenario staff at the West Coast studio of Famous Players-Lasky has written an original story which will be used as a starring vehicle for Roscoe Arbuckle, according to announcement made by Frank E. Woods, supervising director at the Lasky studio.

Mr. Woods has written the continuity for all of Arbuckle's pictures since he gave up making two-reelers and confined his efforts to making comedy features for Paramount. These pictures are "The Round-Up," "The Life of the Party," "The Traveling Salesman" and "Brewster's Millions."

Agnes Ayres is Given Ann Forrest Role

Agnes Ayres has been chosen to head the feminine portion of the cast of Cecil B. DeMille's current production, according to an announcement made by Mr. DeMille at the Lasky studio.

Miss Ayres will assume the role left vacant by the transfer of Ann Forrest to the cast of George H. Melford's production of "The Faith Healer," from William Vaughan Moody's play of the same name. Production work has been resumed by Mr. DeMille following the inevitable delay which the transfer of roles necessitated. Miss Ayres will play opposite Forrest Stanley and Clarence Burton.

Goldwyn Will Release "His Own Law" Soon

Levey in Dramatic Field

Extends Production to Dramatic Features as Well as Industrials

HARRY LEVEY, having launched the Harry Levey Service Corporation for the exclusive production of industrial-educational motion pictures, is now widening the field of his activities and will head a second corporation, known as Harry Levey Productions, which is to produce feature dramatic films for theatrical distribution. The producing centre is to be located at No. 230 West 38th street.

The following statement has been issued by the Harry Levey Service Corporation concerning this new phase of Mr. Levey's production program:

"It is Mr. Levey's plan to produce each year eight feature-pictures which shall represent in production and direction details the high-water mark of perfection in the feature field. In keeping with this ideal, the first release of the new company is to be a motion picture version of 'Uncle Sam of Freedom Ridge,' the story by Margaret Prescott Montague, which appeared in the June issue of the Atlantic Monthly, and which President Wilson characterized as 'the greatest piece of literature that came out of the war.' The story was brought out in book form immediately following its publication in the magazine, and four editions have already come from the press, with promise of more to meet the demand.

"A strong cast has been selected. George McOuarrie, William S. Sorbett, Paul Kelly, Helen Flint, Leslie Hunt, Sheridan Tansey, and Eugene Keith play leading parts. George Beranger, long a member of D. W. Griffith's direction staff, is in charge of direction. Ernest Maas wrote the continuity, and Irving B. Rubenstein is chief cinematographer."

Brinch Home from Europe

Hodkinson Representative Asserts Europe Is Considerably Behind Us

P. N. BRINCH, of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, who has been abroad for some months, returned to America on board the S. S. Olympic which docked in New York on Wednesday, August 25th. Mr. Brinch in his travels visited Scandinavia, England, France and Belgium, and expresses himself as being pleasantly surprised at the conditions existing.

"In the first place," he says, "I found but little trace of the so-called ravages of war. The battlefields of France are green with corn. The railroads and highways are brought to at least pre-war efficiency, and the towns are being rebuilt as rapidly as possible, except where ruins are preserved as being of historical interest. Even in Belgium, I found conditions to be flourishing.

"As regards the conditions which exist in the film industry of the countries I visited, there is much that can be said. First of all, there is no denying the fact that American-produced pictures dominate the field. The reasons for this are as simple as they are obvious. Neither the French nor the English nor the Italian films are in any way worthy to compete with those which are produced in this country. They have a wealth of material from which to draw from over there.

"The theatres are doing wonderful business and are crowded night after night, but the general run of pictures as well as their presentation, in no way approaches the standard set in America.

"The average admission charges, in France for example, run from 3 francs to 12 francs, and even at the present exchange rate this must be reckoned as a considerable sum for the people over there, and I say that they do not get their money's worth."

Fox Special on Broadway

"While New York Sleeps" Opens to Big Crowds at Lyric Theatre

THE Lyric theatre, New York, opened its doors last Sunday with the third William Fox production to be presented on Broadway this season. The 1920 cinemelodrama of life in the great metropolis, "While New York Sleeps," occupied the screen.

The records of William Farnum in "If I Were King," and Tom Mix in "The Untamed" were equalled by "While New York Sleeps." A line of people reached from the box-office of the Lyric out to 42nd street and all the way to the corner for the opening performance, and this was repeated at each showing.

Three box offices were opened to give patrons proper service and to relieve the congestion in traffic on 42nd street caused by the crowds that overflowed from the lobby. The rear exits through the stage had to be used to empty the house after the showings, and every audience that has witnessed "While New York Sleeps," was said to be enthusiastic over the production. Its story of New York as it is; its mysteries, crimes, sensations; its Gay White Way, lower East Side and underworld, quickly caught the imagination of the great audiences of New Yorkers who know their city.

De Mille Story Titled "Forbidden Fruit"

"Forbidden Fruit" is the title finally determined upon by Cecil B. DeMille for his new special production for Paramount which he is now making at the Lasky studio. As is Mr. DeMille'es custom, the producer has given out little information regarding the new production beyond the fact that the story was written by Jeanie Macpherson. The cast is headed by Agnes Ayres and Forrest Stanley and also includes Theodore Roberts, Clarence Burton and Theodore Kosloff.

Chandlee and Wm. Laub Explain "Edititling"

Harry Chandlee and William B. Laub, editors and subtitle writers who have coined a new word to describe the service in which they specialize, explain that "Edititling," means just exactly what the combination of the two words implies. While it does not entirely cover a description of their own technique in the arranging of scenes in conjunction with subtitles, it does describe their method of editing film and writing subtitles at the same time; writing the titles on the cutting table while handling the film so that they may fit the action perfectly and blend harmoniously with the color and tempo of the story.

Kenneth Hodkinson Promoted

THAT this is the day of the young man in business was demonstrated anew this week when Kenneth Hodkinson, one of the youngest executives in the motion picture industry, was promoted by Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists Corporation to the foremost post on his staff. Mr. Hodkinson has, since the organization of the "Big Four's" distributing company, held a close and confidential position under Mr. Abrams. The recent election of Mr. Abrams to the Presidency of the United Artists Corporation has naturally focused on him an enormous amount of additional responsibility and detail. Mr. Hodkinson, by virtue of his appointment to the position of Executive Manager of the Corporation, will now assume much of the detail heretofore carried by Mr. Abrams, leaving his chief free to look after the larger affairs of the Company that necessarily come to the president's office.

Not only is this appointment noteworthy in so far as it concerns the affairs of United Artists Corporation, but it is a splendid achievement in the industry that has achieved big things, for the position which Mr. Hodkinson now occupies is one of the real big jobs in the film world. Mr. Hodkinson is a very young man, as years are reckoned in business, and the position he has already made for himself foretells a splendid future.

Kenneth Hodkinson, general manager of United Artists Corporation

Before his connection with United Artists Corporation, Mr. Hodkinson had quite a number of years of intensive training and experience in the exchange end of the film business, both on the Pacific coast and in the East. He was also associated with Mr. Abrams in a confidential capacity before United Artists Corporation was formed, and as a result of their previous business relationship. Mr. Abrams called Mr. Hodkinson into his service when he built up his organization for the marketing of the "Big Four" product.

In announcing the appointment of Mr. Hodkinson as Executive Manager, Mr. Abrams paid him a splendid tribute. "Kenneth Hodkinson," said Mr. Abrams, "has earned promotion if ever a man has. His loyalty, not only to me personally, but to the Artists whose pictures we are privileged to handle, and to the principles on which this organization has been built, has been steadfast. He combines with this loyalty a sense of justice and fairplay which has made his service to us invaluable in our dealings with our customers, for in all his work he has tried to live up to the ideal of serving his company best by serving its customers best.

"And then, a man can always be judged by what his fellow-workers think of him. In our own organization, to a man, I know that this appointment will be welcomed by Mr. Hodkinson's associates, for he has earned their respect and sincere affection.

"He has youth, imagination, high ambition and splendid ability, coupled with a fine, lovable personality. To me, he typifies the very spirit of our industry, and I am glad of this opportunity to recognize his value to our own organization and to the upbuilding of the motion picture business."

Tie-Up for Mayflower Contest

News-Reel to Carry Views of Women Contestants

THE MAYFLOWER PHOTOPLAY CORPORATION announces that through an arrangement made between it and Kinograms, a news-weekly, exhibitors in all parts of the country will be enabled to establish an effective tie-up between their theatres and the newspapers in their community which have been featuring the National Sales-Girl Beauty Contest. The Newspaper Enterprise Association, working in cooperation with 300 newspapers throughout the country, it is stated, is handling this beauty contest which is proceeding under the arrangement of Mark Larkin, publicity-director for Mayflower. The mode of procedure in dealing with candidates and selecting the winners as well as the personnel of the national beauty committee is given in the following statement, emanating from the New York office of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation:

"Papers in various cities which featured this stunt staged local contests to find the most beautiful sales-girl in their particular city. After judges appointed by the paper had decided upon a local beauty, her photograph was sent to the New York office of the Newspaper Enterprise Association, and after the New York office of this news association had received photographs of the winning beauties from all of the participating cities, the pictures were then turned over to the national beauty committee, which will soon announce the national winner.

"This committee is made up of Neysa McMein, famous illustrator and painter of pretty women; Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., famed as a connoisseur of feminine beauty; Alfred Cheney Johnston, America's foremost photographer of women; James Quirk, editor of Photoplay Magazine, and R. A. Walsh, motion picture producer.

"Under the personal supervision of Ray L. Hall, managing editor of Kinograms, 'movies' are now being made of the contenders for first place. These pictures will be shown to the judges to help them in reaching a final decision on the national beauty and will then be released as an exclusive news-feature through the public distributing Corporation to all theatres where Kinograms are shown.

"It is estimated that at least ten-thousand sales-girls in cities throughout the United States entered this contest, and as a consequence there will be great interest attached to the news-reel, featuring these beauties. The tie-up arranged by Larkin with Kinograms will afford exhibitors of their news weekly all kinds of publicity and exploitation possibilities.

"Through the Newspaper Enterprise Association, papers which featured the contest will be told that the news-reel is coming to their town and they will be advised to communicate with the exhibitors showing this feature with the idea of cooperating on a publicity and exploitation campaign.

"On the other hand, exhibitors booking this subject can speed up the program considerably by getting in touch at once with the local paper that played this contest. This stunt presents the greatest opportunity for a profit-pulling campaign for an entire show that has been offered to exhibitors in some time."

Fox Finishes Filming Will Carleton Poem

After five months' work William Fox has completed a six-reel picturization of Will Carleton's poem, "Over the Hill to the Poor-House." It is scheduled for Fall release.

Not until recently, however, was Mr. Fox able to conclude negotiations with Harper Brothers, publishers of the Carleton verses, for the film rights to the two poems.

"'Mother' pictures have always proved big attractions," said Mr. Fox, "and 'Over the Hill' is a mother picture of the most appealing sort. Aside from this, the fact that the poem is more popular than ever and that it is known to millions of people gives to it the advantage of all the word of advertising it has received during the last forty years."

Mary Carr, famed for her characterizations in "Mother" roles, appears in an all-star cast as Ma Benton. William Welsh appears as Dad Benton. John Walker plays John Benton, the black sheep of the family, Noal Tearle is Isaac, the sanctimonious eldest son. Others in the cast are John Dwyer, Wallace Ray, Phyllis Diller, Louella Carr, Vivienne Osborne, Dorothey Allen and Edna Murphy. Harry Millarde directed.

Strong Cast Supports Star

Careful Selection of Types Found in Cast of Robertson-Cole's "Iris"

PAULINE FREDERICK, who is shortly to be seen in her first Robertson-Cole super-special production, which is based on the Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's stage play, "Iris," has assembled to aid her in making this picture one of the best supporting casts of the year.

The screen version of "Iris" follows the exact location of the noted playwriter's original work and its characters are English. Miss Frederick and her director, Henry Otto, who personally selected the supporting cast went out of the way in order to get the exact type. It followed that they needed Englishmen, and two of the leading actors who will be seen in support of Miss Frederick are natives of England.

First of these is Nigel Barrie, who has the role of Lawrence Trenwith, in love with the heroine. Mr. Barrie was born in Calcutta, educated in England, and had a stage career in the latter country with Sir Herbert Tree, Sir Frank Benson and other noted English actors, came to this country several years ago, and were seen in vaudeville with Joan Sawyer.

The other Englishman in the cast is Howard Gaye, who plays the part of Arthur Kane in "Iris." Mr. Gaye was educated at Oxford and played in classical roles there in student theatrical organizations. Later he was with the Ben Greet players, and also with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson and Sir Herbert Tree.

Daisy Robinson, who plays the part of Aurea Byse, is a native of New York, who traces her theatrical career back to the days when most of young America was running about with "pig tails" and dolls. Two other prominent players in the cast of "Iris" are Maude Louis and Arthur Hoyt.

Expansion Policy in Force

New Impetus Given Production in Metro Studios in East and West

METRO'S resumption of dual producing activities at Hollywood, California, and in New York four months ago, in line with the company's policy of expansion, is reported to have resulted in a new impetus being given to production in both places.

The Hollywood studios have been expanded until they now cover six city blocks. A new dark stage has been added, making three big stages in continuous activity, and a new building has been erected for the special use of the writing staff, under Bayard Veiller, author of the stage dramas, "The Thirteenth Chair" and "Within the Law".

The biggest Metro production of the season, the picturization of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse", with a company that, it is claimed by Metro, will number 11,000 in the scenes, showing the first battle of the Marne, has been assigned to the Hollywood forces.

The new productions for May Allison, Viola Dana and Alice Lake are likewise being made on the West Coast along with several Metro all-star specials, the C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., filmizations of Jack London's novels and the Buster Keaton comedies.

The biggest production of all, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" in now well under way. The first scenes were taken in sets representing a port town in Argentina, where were gathered derelicts from all over the Seven Seas. In order to get these types the docks of San Francisco and Lower California were ransacked, it is stated, and 500 men were gathered, most of whom are said to have refused to disclose anything of their past. June Mathis has dubbed the Hollywood studios, for the present, "The Port of Missing Men".

Kimberley, manager of the Pathe Exchange in the Bison City, who has just concluded a week's visit to New York for conferences with Director of Exchanges Elmer R. Pearson.

"We are now at the inception of one of the greatest theatre building booms in our history," said Mr. Kimberley. "Marcus Loew has started the building of a new theatre, which when completed, will be one of the finest in the country. The old Olympic, now housing vaudeville and pictures, will become an exclusive picture house when the same management opens its new 5,000 seat home, now in the course of construction."

Universal Will Make Movie Style Show

Something new in the way of motion picture style shows is promised by the Educational and Industrial Departments of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company when it has completed a motion picture for the "New York Style Service," which is composed of the leading manufacturers of women's wearing apparel of New York City.

Only the most beautiful models it was possible to obtain were used in the cast. These charming young women were selected from nearly fifty professional fashion models employed in New York's most exclusive dress salons. The tentative title is "The Girl at Rest Lodge," and the production is from an original story prepared by the Universal Educational Department staff of scenarists.

Mermaid Comedy Sets Record in Cleveland

"Duck Inn" second of the Mermaid Comedies released through Educational exchanges and starring Lloyd Hamilton, is said by that company to have broken all records for the Cleveland territory by being held over for the fourth consecutive week at the Euclid theatre.

Each of its pictures has been shown for a minimum of two weeks, including Chesters, Christies and Torchys and for the first time in the history of the house these pictures have been given a portion of the advertising space.

"Bud" Duncan Chosen by Exhibs for Series

When President Cropper of Reelcraft left New York, six weeks ago on a business tour, he had options on the services of four comedy stars for their appearance in Reelcraft pictures. In each distributing center, the list was submitted first to the exchange managers, now distributing Reelcraft releases, and then to several prominent exhibitors in that particular territory. "Bud" Duncan was the evident choice and negotiations were cl with him accordingly for a long-term contract. The exhibitors were also questioned as to the style and type of comedy, with the result that the brand-name will be "Bud and His Buddies."

The new series is expected to be ready for the market by the middle of October on the basis of one reel every week.

W. Niebuhr Conferring with Exchangemen

Walter Niebuhr, president of American Cinema Corporation, is absent from New York on a trip of conference with the exchange managers, handling the company's products. He will visit Detroit, Chicago, Indianapolis, Pittsburg, and other points in the West. There are two American Cinema productions to be released within the next few weeks, "His Brother's Keeper", and Marguerite Namara in "Stolen Moments". The E. K. Lincoln production, "The Inner Voice", and Mollie King, "Women Men Forget", are meeting with general acclaim throughout the country, it is stated.

Starts Sales-Campaign on "Fourth Face"

The Climax Film Corporation, which is releasing "Love's Battle" and "The Fourth Face" on the territorial plan, are inaugurating their sales-campaign on this picture that will be far-reaching in its effects, it is expected. It is not their intention to concentrate on the state-right buyer only but to operate this campaign in such a way that it will be of assistance to the purchasers of territory with the exhibitor. The major portion of their efforts will be concentrated on the exhibitor so as to acquaint him fully with the merits of these productions.

Metro Announces Big Releases

Now Ready to Launch Campaign for Its Fall Releases

WITH eight big productions listed for release in September and October, Metro Pictures Corporation announces that everything is in readiness for the company's big Fall drive and for the most important releasing schedule for 1920-1921 that it has ever launched. The policy of bigger and better pictures inaugurated last Autumn by Metro has now gained full momentum, it is stated, so that Richard A. Rowland, president of the corporation, predicts that Metro will in the coming season stride into undisputed leadership of the industry.

Beginning with the first of the coming Metro will release "The Hope," the melodrama by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, with an all-star cast. September 6 will see the release of "Love, Honor and Obey," the S-L super special, with an all-star cast, scenarioized by Eugene Walter from the novel, "The Tyranny of Weakness," by Charles Neville Buck.

On September 13 the Metro exchanges will offer "The Price of Redemption," starring Bert Lytell. This is a picturization of I. A. R. Wylie's novel of Anglo-Indian life, "The Temple of Dawn." On the 16th of September Metro will formally release "The Great Redeemer," the Maurice Tourneur production of H. H. Van Loan's story of western life and prison regeneration, with a strong ensemble including House Peters and Marjorie Daw.

"The Saphead," co-starring William H. Crane and Buster Keaton, is put down for release on September 16. It is an elaborate picturization of "The New Henrietta," Winchell Smiths' comedy-drama of high finance.

Metro's last September release will be "Clothes," a filmization of the drama of high society life in New York, by Avery Hopwood and Channing Pollock. The screen version is enacted by a strong cast, including Olive Tell and Crauford Kent.

October will be ushered in, according to present plans, with the release of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." This production is now in process of making at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, with Rex Ingram directing.

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," based on Vicente Blasco Ibanez's novel, Metro officials assert, will be the company's crowning achievement. Every detail of the production is being undertaken on a grand scale. The cast is all-star.

With the exception of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," Richard A. Rowland, the Metro president, has made screen examinations of all the other September and October releases, and he expresses himself as immensely pleased with the work done at the company's Western and Eastern studios in preparation for the big Fall sales drive.

Bebe Daniels in New Comedy

THE second Bebe Daniels production for Realart is now under way at the Hollywood studios under the direction of Maurice Campbell. All the entertaining comedy touches of the original Bolton-Wodehouse musical success, "Oh, Lady, Lady!" have been retained in the scenario by Edith Kennedy, states Realart, and the inherent character of the screen and the individual capabilities of the star have permitted the addition of several delightfully humorous situations, it is stated.

Miss Daniels has been pronounced by Realart officials as a perfect choice for the role of "May Barber," a gawky girl who later becomes "Rilla Rooke," a dashingly fascinating young actress. The transition between the two stages of the heroine's career is said to give the star many opportunities to display those individual comedy touches that have made her so popular. There are also several dramatic moments for the star when she innocently becomes involved in a conspiracy against her old country sweetheart.

Equally interesting to the followers of Realart pictures is the announcement that the clever team of Harrison Ford and Walter Hiers is again to offer their joint services. In "Oh, Lady, Lady!" Walter Hiers has the funny role of corpulent Willoughby Finch, the slow and serious minded country sweetheart of May Barber. He has some very desperate moments when he thinks his old country sweetheart, now a lively young stage person, is about to throw a monkey wrench into the machinery of his perfectly conventional marriage with a perfectly conventional girl. The role gives Mr. Hiers the best opportunities, and he is certain, says Realart, to surpass his recent successes in "Going Some," "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," "The City Sparrow" and "So Long Letty."

Harrison Ford is expected to do much to enhance the popularity he enjoys as a leading man. His part in "Oh, Lady, Lady!" is even stronger than that in "Miss Hobbs," and it rivals his role opposite Wanda Hawley in her latest production for Realart, "Food for Scandal." In the Bolton-Wodehouse play Harrison Ford plays the part of Hale Underwood, an artist who jumps in to help his stout friend, Finch, and goes through a medley of side splitting situations as a consequence of his interference.

The other roles of the picture are taken by capable players. Also Smart, a fresh young newspaper man, is a fine comedy, but said to be ably handled by Jack Doud. Charlotte Woods has an important role of Molly, the bride-to-be of the simple Willoughby Finch. As the mother who has been scheming for years that her daughter might capture the wealthy Willoughby, Lillian Langdon is stated to be perfectly cast.

Maurice Campbell, who is directing "Oh, Lady, Lady!" came to the films after twenty-five years of continuous success as a producer of the legitimate stage

A Literary Coup by Hodkinson

Acquires the Entire Output of Irving Bacheller

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that negotiations have been completed whereby it secures the exclusive motion-picture rights to all the written works of Irving Bacheller, the well-known American fiction-writer. The Hodkinson officials express themselves as delighted with this literary acquisition which is looked upon as a distinctive achievement for the organization. A letter, addressed by the author to President Hodkinson at the same time that the contract was closed, follows:

"I am one of the many who rejoices in your vision of better things for the moving picture stage and in your efforts to make them a reality. The silent drama can be and ought to be the most effective agency for civilization in modern life. At the same time it can afford as many thrills as any man can accommodate. It is more entertaining to see Lincoln slaying one of the great enemies of men than to witness a fatal duel in a barroom. The former excites a grand emotion which leaves in the mind something helpful and worth having; the latter takes away a little of one's respect for the sanctity of human life. Decency and virtue and high motives can really be very thrilling. The man who doubts it would better go and try to buy a ticket for John Drinkwater's play when it opens again. You do not underestimate the crowd.

"Therefore I am glad to turn my books over to you and to wish you all good luck with them. I shall be glad to do what I can to further your plans."

Irving Bacheller, famous novelist, whose books will be produced in pictures. W. W. Hodkinson is responsible for the securing of Mr. Bacheller's works for screen purposes

In a statement just issued by the Hodkinson Corporation considerable space is devoted to the career of Irving Bacheller and the place he occupies in contemporary literature. This statement follows in part:

"He himself was born in a clearing in St. Lawrence County, New York State, and he not only keeps his native land in memory but he has put it imperishably into American fiction. His books are records of the progress of America, and they are written in such a way as to make them replete with interest. The theme itself, or rather, the succession of themes, is of massive grandeur, close to the hearts of each and everyone of us—the growth of our country. And at the same time they are like the man himself, — gently humorous, quaint of fancy and entirely wholesome.

"It has been estimated by Mr. Bacheller's publishers that well over five million copies of his books have gone forth to make the world a better and brighter place in which to live. Perhaps the best known of all of them is 'Eben Holden,' his first great success. Pioneer life in America is its theme, and it is replete with action and well-sustained suspense. The same theme underlies 'The Light In the Clearing,' which is counted as one of the important pieces of fiction he has put forth.

"Mr. Bacheller's books are ideally suited to picturization,—and in this connection special stress must be laid upon 'A Man for the Ages,'—his story of Lincoln, as engrossing a tale of that great figure as has ever been written.

"It is Mr. Hodkinson's intention to hold these books until such time as he finds the independent producing company best fitted to handle them. It may be one or more of the companies now releasing their output thru W. W. Hodkinson or some new company yet to be discovered."

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Unusual African Views Secured

Scientific Data and Thrilling Realism in Travel-Reels

A CAMERA expedition into the heart of the African jungles, prompted at the outstart by missionary motives and culminating in the acquisition of unusual "shots" of scientific value and educational interest, was recently terminated when Dr. Leonard J. Vandenbergh, L.L.B., J.D., returned to America with more than 36,000 feet of film, depicting the primitive natives of East Africa and Uganda. The expedition sailed for Africa last September with the financial backing of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and under the auspices of the American Museum of Natural History.

The collection of views secured by Dr. Vandenbergh are reported to contain film records of the characteristics, customs and modes of living of some of the least-known tribes that inhabit Uganda and East African territory. The feature of the collection is said to be an African lion-hunt in which the quarry is showing as charging on the camera and actually getting within thirty-feet of the cameraman before being killed by a spear from a native's hand. The views, it is stated, are different from anything filmed before of a similar character, being possessed of a human-interest appeal and not taken especially from the sportsmanship angle. Customs and rites, fast disappearing before the restrictions of civilization, are faithfully reproduced, states Dr. Vandenbergh. These film records —showing customs and ceremonies rapidly falling into oblivion—constitute invaluable contributions to the science of anthropoligy, he says, as well as furnishing the rest of the world with interesting data about these strange unknown peoples.

The pictures taken are now being cut and titled in the East and it is expected that a trade-showing of these views will be given towards the end of September. However, in view of the great amount of work to be done in preparing the collection for presentation no definite arrangements have been as yet made.

When interviewed late last week by a representative of the NEWS at the home-office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Dr. Vandenbergh gave an interesting account of his experience in Africa and spoke enthusiastically about the results that had been achieved by the expedition. He mentioned as the high-lights of his picture-collection the views of the pigmies that he secured in the Congo forests. Here, he studied at close range the Mambuti tribe, a group of human beings averaging four feet in height. One view, he said, shows him staging a sort of Maypole dance, in which the dancers gambol around him, the tallest fully a half-foot under his outstretched arm. The lion-hunt was also described as a piece of action that is sure to equal any scene shown on the screen for its suspense and thrilling qualities. The action opens with the lion advancing about sixty yards from the camera and continues until the animal is speared within thirty feet of the operator.

Dr. Vandenbergh also noted as a distinctive mark of his work in Africa the views taken of the Alour tribe, the members of which average over six feet in height. The scenes showing the gradations in height, the distinctive customs and characteristics of the four principal tribes west of the Albert Nyanza in the Congo will, he expects, add greatly to the anthropological study of these peoples.

Fox Has New Exchange in Butte, Montana

Because of the increased volume of business, and the desire that the exhibitor may obtain quick and efficient service, Fox Film Corporation has opened its twenty-sixth branch office in the United States, at No. 125 West Broadway, Butte, Montana.

Heretofore the Fox Seattle Exchange has handled Montana, but the business coming from that State has made this new link in the Fox distribution chain a necessity. Lawrence J. McGinley has been appointed manager.

All Set for Paramount Week

One-Third of Nation's Theatres Booked for Week Sept. 5 to 11

BASING their conclusions on the records of the bookings received at the New York headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, officials of that organization predict that at least one-third of all the motion-picture theatres throughout the United States will take an active part in the National Paramount Week which opens on Sunday, September 5 and concludes on the following Saturday, September 11. Reports from exchange managers indicate "that nearly six thousand theatres will play Paramount Pictures every day during the week of September 5 to 11," says a statement from the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters.

Exploitation representatives in the various exchanges have worked out a number of novel stunts supplementary to the extensive advertising campaigns being conducted through the local newspapers. One of the most striking of these was arranged by Frank A. Cassidy, exploitation representative at Cincinnati, who has completed arrangements with the Dayton-Wright company of Dayton, O., to have deliveries of film made to scores of theatres in the Cincinnati territory by airplane. A schedule is said to have been worked out whereby stops will be made in the largest cities of Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana and West Virginia, where suitable landing places are afforded. Deliveries in the smaller towns along the route will be made by means of a specially constructed parachute, it is stated, the pilot flying over a marked spot and dropping the films as bombs would be dropped from a bombing machine.

In describing the inauguration of Paramount Week ceremonies both in Chicago and at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, Famous Players-Lasky issues the following statement:

"In Chicago, Paramount Week already has been officially proclaimed by Mayor William Hale Thompson. Through negotiations conducted by Exploitation Representative Daniel Roche, the mayor was given an honorary membership in the billposters' union and he then proceeded to post a 24-sheet advertising Paramount Week. And while he did all this a cameraman of the International News Weekly made a picture. The Herald-Examiner carried a still photo of the stunt. Ten prints of this film have been prepared to be used as trailers on Paramount Week.

"One of the most spectacular, as well as unusual, tributes ever paid to motion pictures was that which was enacted by the 5,000 officers and jackies at the Great Lakes Naval Training station, when the Government gave formal recognition to the celebration of Paramount at all its camp theatres.

"The tribute took the form of a special drill and review in the presence of Rear Admiral Kunz at the Great Lakes station. Previous to the turnout of sailors, Lieut. A. Desomer, U. S. N., Lieut. Commander E. E. Wilson, U. S. N. and chief Mate R. P. Manion, in charge of morale-work at the station arranged with Harris P. Wolfberg, district manager of Paramount at Chicago, for observance of Paramount Week at all the several theatres at the station. This was in accord with the action of the army, which through the Community Motion Picture Success, arranged for Paramount Week at all army-camp theatres from Denver to Cleveland to Atlanta.

"With Paramount Week banners gying on all the navy station theatres Chief Mate Manion and Commander Wilson decided to hold a special Paramount Week drill. Using more than 3,000 jackies of the aviation division, commander Wilson put the boys through a drill that spelled out 'Paramount Week —Sept. 5-11' on the drill field."

"Way Down East" Will Open on Sept. 3

D. W. Griffith's picturization of "Way Down East," based on the stage play by Lottie Blair Parker, which for the past twenty-two years has been one of the rural classics of the American theatre, will be presented at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York, on Friday evening, September 3, with the following cast: Lillian Gish, Richard Barthelmess, Mary Hay, Burr McIntosh, Lowell Sherman, Creighton Hale, Mrs. Morgan Belmont, Kate Bruce, Edgar Nelson, George Neville, Vivia Ogden, Porter Strong, Josephine Bernard, Mrs. David Landau, Patricia Fruen, Florence Short, Emily Fitzroy and Myrtle Sutch.

"Way Down East" is announced as the biggest production Mr. Griffith has made since "Hearts of the World." It contains 12,000 feet of film and the better part of three hours will be consumed in unfolding the story. Several Griffith innovations are promised, including a thrilling snow storm and a genuine New England ice break on the Connecticut River.

Following Friday evening's premier, the production will be offered twice daily, at 2:15 and 8:15. There will be a special musical program.

Charles Ray on Another

Popular Star at Work on Light Comedy-Drama by Fred. Stowers

WHILE "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway", the Charles Ray picture, is beginning its career, the actor is hard at work on another picture, "Nineteen and Phyllis," by Frederick Stowers.

Because of the wealth of superior published material which he has accumulated Mr. Ray heretofore has consistently declined original scenarios, but "Nineteen and Phyllis" he believes to be such a compelling story that he felt he had to purchase and produce it. He has, however, clung to his rule to produce only works by well-known writers, for Mr. Stowers is an author with a large and enthusiastic following.

The scenes are laid in a small southern town, but "Nineteen and Phyllis" is not a story of the essentially small town type. Instead of being of the rustic order all the characters are well-dressed and modern. The tale is chockfull of delightful comedy features and the plot takes a novel twist which nobody foresees but which adds greatly to the interest and charm.

Clara Horton plays the leading feminine role.

Here is Charlie Ray in his latest feature, the first to be presented under the management of Arthur S. Kane as a First National release, "45 Minutes From Broadway," adapted from the famous George M. Cohan musical comedy

Big Pathe Program Is Coming

Future Features to Be Up to Usual Pathe Standard

WITH the adding to its schedule of forthcoming releases of "Half a Chance," a Hampton special, and "The Devil to Pay," a Brunton production, Pathe believes that it greatly increases the strength of the foundation it has built for unprecedented feature business during the Fall and Winter months.

In obtaining productions of the calibre of "The Riddle: Woman," the first Associated Exhibitors release, "Half a Chance," "The Devil to Pay" and other high class specials, Pathe seeks to live up to the message to exhibitors, delivered two months ago by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., when he said:

"Instead of devoting its energy during the forthcoming season to the introduction of 'startling policy changes,' or other schemes, which to exhibitors, have become frequent occurrences, Pathe Exchange, Inc., will endeavor to furnish its patrons with the finest feature subjects money will buy. Exhibitors are interested in pictures with box office value, not policies, and that is what Pathe will endeavor to furnish them."

Since then Pathe has released such attractions as H. B. Warner in "One Hour Before Dawn;" Blanche Sweet, in "The Girl in the Web;" Edgar Lewis's "Lahoma;" and Bruce Gordon and May McAvoy in J. Stuart Blackton's, "The House of the Tolling Bell."

In the course of the next six weeks, the Pathe schedule is also promising, with "Felix O'Day," starring H. B. Warner scheduled for issue on September 12th; "Help Wanted: Male," starring Blanche Sweet, which just completed a pre-release showing at B. S. Moss's Broadway theatre, and is listed for release on September 26th; "The Riddle: Woman," starring Geraldine Farrar, first of the Associated Exhibitors master-productions, which will have its premier on October 3rd; and "Forbidden Valley," another Blackton production featuring Bruce Gordon and May McAvoy, slated for October 10th release.

Between now and the first of the year, Pathe plans to issue a series of features that will not only surpass anything it has ever distributed, but which will rank with the highest type of photodramas issued by any one concern.

"Half a Chance" most likely will be the forerunner of the new series following the release of "The Riddle: Woman," which Pathe feels will be its greatest feature triumph. "Half a Chance" is the first of a series of special productions which will be made by Jesse D. Hampton, who is now producing the H. B. Warner and Blanche Sweet attractions. Robert Thornby directed this production, which was adapted from the celebrated novel by Frederick Isham, and features Mahlon Hamilton and Lillian Rich.

"The Devil to Pay" comes from the plant of Robert Brunton, and is a model of the splendid productions turned out by that producer. Brunton proved to Pathe followers among exhibitors that he is a superior producer, through the success of "Daredevil Jack," the Pathe serial starring Heavyweight Champion Jack Dempsey. An all-star cast appears in "The Devil to Pay," with the principal roles enacted by Roy Stewart and Fritzi Brunette.

Fox Advertises Its Serial

Newspaper Ads. in Many Cities Help to Popularize "Bride 13"

AN intensive newspaper advertising campaign in nine cities is being conducted by William Fox to assist the exhibitor in selling "Bride 13," the first Fox serial. Because adequate bill-board space in these nine key cities could not be obtained, Mr. Fox ordered a broadside directly to the people.

The advertising is being carried in newspapers in Atlanta, Indianapolis, New Orleans, Kansas City, Buffalo, Rochester, Providence, Chicago and Detroit. Six different pieces of advertising were prepared, the first two being teasers designed to attract the public to look for the subsequent advertisements. The first of the teaser copy carries only this query: "Who is Bride 13?" The second advertisement shows a bride clutched at by a grimy hand. The third piece of copy is more informative and divulges the fact that the "Bride 13" is a serial picture, produced by William Fox, costing $1,250,000, and urging the reader to ask for it at his favorite theatre.

The fourth discloses the villain and his pirate colleague leering down upon the bride in the lower right-hand corner, and the fifth presents a stirring picture of Navy men dashing to the rescue of the kidnapped brides and elaborates upon the message delivered in the preceding advertisement. The sixth advertisement, the largest of the series—containing 744 lines—carries an adaptation of the 24-sheet stand.

All the advertisements were written by experts and the art work was done by a prominent artist. The copy is an outstanding quality, fairly lifting itself out of the newspaper in which it is appearing.

Baby Show Adds Laughs to Rolin Comedy

Many amusing moments are said to be furnished in the new Hal Roach comedy, "Rock A Bye Baby," with Snub Pollard, which Pathe will release September 12th. The fun-making setting is a baby show in one of the cities of the West Coast. Roach took advantage of this actual occasion for the filming of the picture, and a great many funny moments are supplied by the prize winners in the arms of their mothers.

"Bride 13" Said to Be Winning Approval

William Fox reports that the number of contracts coming in for "Bride 13" and the character of the houses booking this Fox serial furnish strong evidence of the high favor with which this chapter-picture is meeting.

The Pantages Circuit has booked it for its theatres in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland, Portland, Tacoma, Seattle, Spokane and Minneapolis. Harry Marsy, president of the General Theatres Corporation, of Buffalo, N. Y., adds his testimonial to those of other exhibitors by contracting for "Bride 13" for the Allendale, Ellen Terry, Marlowe and Circle Theatres.

Members of the Fox sales-force report most encouragingly from all over the United States and Canada. Exhibitors everywhere have been much interested in the picture and have made a point of seeing it. After the screenings they have spoken highly of the production, says the William Fox office.

Carpentier's Return Is Renewing Interest

While "The Wonder Man," Robertson-Cole special production starring Georges Carpentier, had been selling strong all summer, by reason of its merits as a picture and the widespread interest there is in the famous French warrior and boxer as a man, the news that he will meet Battling Levinsky in the ring, October 12, Columbus Day, at Ebbet's Field, Brooklyn, has vastly stimulated public and exhibitor interest in the attraction, according to a statement from Robertson-Cole.

So strongly are the bookings coming in, says the Robertson-Cole office, that 150 prints of "The Wonder Man" will be booked solidly throughout the United States during September and October. Everywhere exhibitors, feeling the pulse of the public, know that there is a new wave of interest in Carpentier, which is making him an attraction all over the country.

"Girls Don't Gamble" is Butler Picture

D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc., announces that the second of its series of photoplays starring David Butler will be distributed on a states-right basis. The picture is called "Girls Don't Gamble," and is an adaptation of the Saturday Evening Post story, "Girls Don't Gamble Any More," by George Weston.

In addition to Mr. Butler, the cast includes Harry Todd, Eleanor Fields, Rhea Haines, Alice Knowlton and Billy de Vaull. Fred Butler directed the picture, which was preceded by the production of David Butler's successful comedy-drama, "Fickle Women."

Kane Offices Doubled in New York

The Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation in New York has doubled its office space. The company occupies a suite on the eleventh floor of the National Association Building, 25 West 43d street.

The doubling of the quarters gives additional room for the contract, publicity and auditing departments, with space also for a private office for clients, and a motion picture library.

Press-Book Prepared to Aid Hirsh Production

In the elaborate campaign book being prepared on Nathan Hirsh's super-feature "The Woman Above Reproach," there are numberless fine ideas and suggestions outlined for the proper exploitation of the picture. The title itself is one that can be used to lure business to a theatre and which can be used in many ways in advertising and publicity, particularly in a "teaser" campaign.

Charles Urban Products Closed for Japan

How rapidly the world-wide distribution of the Charles Urban "Movie Chats" and the "Kineto Reviews" is becoming effective was illustrated this week when information came to the office of David P. Howells that arrangements had been closed for both subjects to be widely shown in Japan.

"Big Happiness" Selling Fast

Dustin Farnum Vehicle Meeting with Favor, Is Report

ROBERTSON-COLE is realizing from "Big Happiness" the first production of its new "super-special only" regime even more than it expected in the way of public and exhibitor support, for the picture, which has Dustin Farnum as its star, is selling rapidly, and meeting with unqualified praise from critic and public, according to a statement from the Robertson-Cole headquarters.

"Big Happiness" is the first of the pictures which Robertson-Cole announced as its fall attractions, and also the first under its plan to release 36 big productions yearly. In addition to this, it is the initial Dustin Farnum production under his new contract with Robertson-Cole, making the picture one of triple significance.

The statement just issued from the Robertson-Cole headquarters in connection with the release of "Big Happiness" follows:

"Exhibitors will find in Big Happiness a typical example of the sort of picture which Robertson-Cole desires to supply henceforth. It has a star who fills a particular niche of his own, in which he is unrivalled on the screen. Dustin Farnum in this picture has a role which enables him to measure up to his fullest emotional capabilities.

"Furthermore, the story is one filled with drama and suspense, and the direction which is by Colin Campbell is the best which Robertson-Cole could give Mr. Farnum.

"Added to the intrinsic worth of the picture itself, are the advertising and exploitation aids which Robertson-Cole has given Big Happiness. Exhibitors who are to show it receive a typical Robertson-Cole press book, one of the regulation campaign books which this firm is publishing with each production, a book which is unrivalled in artistic and practical qualities by any in the industry.

"Big Happiness is a gripping story of twin brothers, one a heartless man of the world whose only desire is wealth, the other a less successful fellow who dwells in the slums of Paris, but possesses a happy nature and a heart of gold. By a strange trick of fate the poor but honest brother is called upon to impersonate the other, a leading British financier, during his enforced absence from Britain.

"The story interest is further enhanced by the fact that the wealthy brother had just married a beautiful girl who did not love him, but married him because of the financial conditions of her family. Gradually, however, she learns to love the masquerader, because of his gentleness and kindness. Her love is returned, but owing to the peculiar situation, her make-believe husband cannot tell her of his affection.

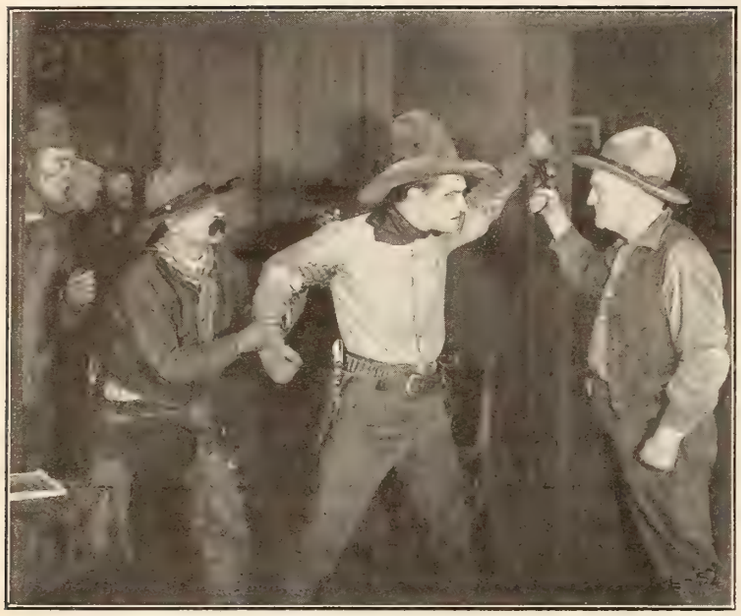
"The climax of the story, when the financier, who was supposed to have drowned at sea, suddenly appears, makes this story one of tremendous dramatic appeal. The supporting cast in this picture is exceptionally good, containing such names as Kathryn Adams, popular leading woman of the screen; Fred Malatesta, the noted portrayer of "heavy" roles; Joseph J. Dowling, of 'Miracle Man' fame, and others."

"Midchannel" in Heavy Demand

Bookings Surpass Preceding Records for Clara K. Young

ACCORDING to a statement received from the headquarters of the Equity Pictures Corporation, the franchise-holders of that corporation report unusually heavy bookings for Clara Kimball Young's latest starring vehicle, "Midchannel." Despite the fact that pre-release bookings for the previous Young productions, "The Eyes of Youth" and "For the Soul of Rafael" were heavy, says the statement from the Equity offices, the unusually big demand for the new 'Midchannel" picture now in evidence is affording the Equity officials a pleasant surprise. The Equity statement follows:

"Of all the territories included in the list of Equity's franchises, those who report heaviest bookings on "Midchannel" are New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, and Cleveland, thus far. This record is based on the gross number of advance bookings. Figuring on a percentage basis—that is the number of bookings in proportion to the size of the territory—the Denver exchange leads the list, followed closely by New Orleans and Louisville, Ky. This is a significant fact. It proves to Equity and to exhibitors at large that the echo of Broadway penetrates to the remotest corners. The relatively small exchanges just mentioned are alive to the fact that "Midchannel" had a Broadway run with Ethel Barrymore in the leading role. They are aware of the prestige this gives the production, apart from all its other attractive features.



"The explanation of the great amount of pre-release bookings, as expressed by Equity's franchise-holders and exhibitors, seems to be the extraordinary combination offered in this picture—a combination that "comes once in a century"—as one exhibitor put it. First there is the star—Clara Kimball Young, with whose former productions exhibitors have realized a very handsome box-office profit. Of equal importance is the author, Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, a man who has had more plays adapted to the screen than any other playwright. Then there is the setting, the direction and the extravagant properties used. Those who know the sweeping popularity of all of Miss Young's productions know that one of the chief points of interest was the costly sets, the expensive furnishings and the luxurious clothes and gowns worn by Miss Young and the rest of the cast.

"Added to all this is the radiance of Broadway, reflected in the historic performance of Ethel Barrymore in "Midchannel" at the Empire theatre. The fact that Pinero is probably the most widely read playwright today adds so many patrons to the exhibitor's showing of "Midchannel", and to make matters still more promising, "Midchannel" is recognized as Pinero's greatest drama, its subject being the most vital and throbbing of all his plays—the problems of marriage.

"All of which proves that exhibitors are alive to the times, and leave nothing to chance when contracting for 'Midchannel' so far ahead."

Praise for Realart Special

New York Critics Pleased with Taylor Feature Shown at Rivoli

THE performance of "The Soul of Youth," the first special made by William Desmond Taylor for Realart, at the Rivoli theatre, New York, has brought forth liberal praise in the local newspapers. Here is what Aileen St. John-Brenon says in the Morning Telegraph:

"William Desmond Taylor's production for Realart, 'The Soul of Youth,' the feature at the Rivoli this week, brings Lewis Sargent back to the screen in one of those boy parts in which he is thoroughly delightful. You remember him as Huckleberry Finn. You couldn't forget him, and as the boy in Julia Crawford Ivers story he makes the same appeal as he did as the Mark Twain youth.

"'The Soul of Youth' is refreshing, and the audiences are going to enjoy it."

The New York American critic predicts a long and successful life for it, attributing its gripping human appeal to the work of Lewis Sargent as the boy, and to Judge Ben Lindsay.

"There is a picture," says the New York American, "heading the program at the Rivoli theatre this week that is destined to travel a long and winding way through the country, a trail verdant with endorsement. Valdosta, Ga., where the film may be somewhat frayed and scratched when it is projected, and Minot, N. Dak., are going to join with Broadway and the remainder of a film land in admitting the vast humaness of this picture It is a Realart presentation, entitled 'The Soul of Youth'. . . .

"This boy (Lewis Sargent) and this Judge (Judge Ben Lindsay) are two characters who visualize soul until they lift an every day story onto the plane of a tale of living people."

Feature Runs 8 Weeks

Goldwyn's Production Attracts Crowds in New York and Chicago

"EARTHBOUND," Goldwyn's production of Basil King's great photodrama of life after death has now completed eight weeks—four in New York City and four in Chicago. The producers announce that the reception accorded the production by the public has more than justified the faith of the organization in the powerful, human appeal of the story. Exhibitors who have seen the film are said to be as enthusiastic over its story, production, directing and acting as are the critics and the public. Also the exhibitors are confident of its drawing power. They see in it possibilities for exploitation of a character which has never before been used and with a public which seldom goes to a theatre in addition to the picture fan public.

The Goldwyn exploitation staff is taking advantage of all the unusual and unique angles for exploitation which "Earthbound" offers in the campaign book which is nearing completion and in the accessories of various kinds. The publicity and exploitation campaign for this picture will be the most complete and extensive ever conducted by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. The picture furnishes the exhibitor the opportunity of a lifetime, the Goldwyn organization believes, to cash in. But to get the most out of the picture he must conduct a publicity campaign that will reach the non-theatregoing public as well as picture fans, and it is not only the belief of Goldwyn but also many prominent exploitation men, that pictures of this kind when once viewed by an audience, will tend to draw the intellectual class of patrons to the theatre.

SIMPLEX NOTES

It will be of interest to the thousands of Simplex users to know that Rudolph C. Kneuer, Chief of the Factory Order Division, has just celebrated his eighth year of service with the Precision Machine Company. Nearly every Simplex user who has had occasion to order Simplex parts is familiar with the name of Kneuer who, as a boy came into the employ of the company in August, 1912, when the only space devoted to Simplex manufacture, office and laboratory was a section of the 9th floor of the present twelve-story building.

At that time Mr. B. F. Porter (who is now the greater New York Simplex Distributor) was General Manager of the plant, while J. E. Robin (now Superintendent of the International Cinema Quipment Center) was sales manager.

Mr. Kneuer is now only 26 years old, but in spite of his apparent youth, it can be truthfully said that there is none who is better known to the Simplex trade nor who knows the numerous machine parts better than he. On the day celebrating his eighth year of Simplex service Mr. Kneuer remarked at the almost unbelievable growth of the Simplex factory since the early days when B. F. Porter and the late Francis B. Cannock were active in the building up of the business.

"Country God Forgot" Not New Picture

In a statement just issued, First National quotes Marshall Neilan as warning exhibitors that the picture, "The Country God Forgot," is a re-issue and not a new picture. The rest of Mr. Neilan's statement, as qnoted by First National follows:

"My present product is being distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. These releases are 'The River's End,' the James Oliver Curwood story; "Don't Ever Marry,' an adaptation from Edgar Franklin's comedy; 'Go and Get It,' my current release-offering, a newspaper story the scenario of which was written by Marion Fairfax; and 'Dinty,' my latest production with Wesley Barry to be released in the fall. Other subjects to be released via First National will be made public as soon as the information is available."

"Madame X" Released in Sept.

SEPTEMBER is Goldwyn's star month. Its star production in its history of three and a fraction years is to be released this month. Its first public showing will take place shortly at the Capitol theatre, New York, according to Goldwyn. It is the picturization of "Madame X," made from Alexandre Bisson's world-success on the speaking stage, with Pauline Frederick in the chief role. It was directed by Frank Lloyd and it was with this picture that he won his spurs. In the future he will be a featured director.

"Madame X" has been called by some who have known the picture game from its birth to its gigantic present as the greatest emotional picture ever made. It is the supreme accomplishment of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation—a picture to which Goldwyn pins an absolute, unshakable faith and on which it is willing to rest its reputation.

Prints of the production are in all twenty-two branch exchanges of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation ready to be shown to the exhibitor. Pauline Frederick, in the stellar role, gives an earnest, sincere, human, powerful interpretation of the role of the mother who commits murder in order that her son may never know that his mother has trod the path of degradation and disgrace. In the spoken drama Miss Frederick has been seen in "When Knights Were Bold," with Francis Wilson; in "Samson," with William Gillette; in "Joseph and His Brethren" and as a star in "Innocent." In the films she has appeared in such pictures as "Mrs. Dane's Defense," "La Tosca," "Fedora," "Mme. Jealousy," and in the Goldwyn pictures "Bonds of Love," "The Woman in Room 13," "The Loves of Letty," and in "Roads of Destiny" for later release.

Goldwyn Willing to Bank Reputation on Production

William Courtleigh, seen in the role of Louis Floriot, the husband who unjustly casts off his wife, is one of the most popular leading men and character actors on the legitimate stage. He has supported practically all of the feminine stars of the day and been featured in a number of productions.

Sydney Ainsworth has played the lead in "Arizona," supported Robert Edeson in "Soldiers of Fortune," "Strongheart" and "Classmates" and acted in "The Fortune Hunter" on the spoken stage. In the films he has appeared in "Graustark," "On Trial," "Brown of Harvard," etc. He has an important role in Goldwyn's picturization of "The Branding Iron."

Lionel Belmore was for three years a member of Wilson Barrett's company, for twelve years with the late Sir Henry Irving and for six years with William Faversham. In pictures he has appeared in Vitagraph, World, Metro and Goldwyn productions. He was the villain in Goldwyn's Will Rogers pictures "Jes' Call Me Jim" and has the role of the father in "The Man Who Had Everything," starring Jack Pickford.

Casson Ferguson has played with Robert Mantell, appeared in musical comedy in New York and grand opera in Paris.

Comedy Shows Good Cast

T. Roy Barnes, Colleen Moore, Grace Darmond and Walter Hiers Engaged

AL CHRISTIE, producer and director of the screen version of "So Long Letty", Oliver Morosco's stage play, believes that the cast which will be seen in this comedy-drama soon to be released by Robertson-Cole is the best one ever assembled for a production of similar nature and one which will interest every exhibitor seeking the best grade of pictures which mingle wholesome fun with dramatic suspense.

The cast of "So Long Letty", when it scored its great success on the spoken stage, was an especially strong one, and Mr. Christie took great care in selecting his screen cast, so that it might hold a position of corresponding importance. He needed but four principals. But, as is always the case in a smaller cast of principals, each must be capable of greater time and finer work before the camera.

The cast, comprising T. Roy Barnes, the comedian of the legitimate stage; Grace Darmond, the beauty and screen star; Colleen Moore, the little leading woman of many successful photoplays; and Walter Hiers, known for the fine character of his comedy roles, was selected with a special eye to these requirements.

Besides these, there is a large number of California bathing beauties.

T. Roy Barnes, Mr. Christie says, fits admirably into the part of "Henry Miller", the husband who spends his waking hours trying to be a "good fellow". Grace Darmond plays the part of "Letty", the temperamental wife who preferred tangoing to preparing a "square meal".

"The Stealers" to Have Big Premier

"THE STEALERS," the Robertson-Cole super-special directed by William Christy Cabanne, which is for early fall release, will have its premier in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor, Sept. 17. Robertson-Cole claims that this production has a wider appeal and superior entertainment quality to any other picture the company so far has offered to exhibitors.

"The Stealers," which was made in the East this summer, tells a story which Mr. Cabanne has been working on for the past two years. With powerful, impressive strokes it goes deeper than the emotions, touching in artistic, awe-inspiring scenes the most fascinating and mysterious subject known to mankind. Thousands of persons were used in making "The Stealers," which alternates simple heart interest scenes with others of wonderful spectacular depth.

Evidence of Good-Will Pleases Donaldson

Arthur Donaldson, star and general-director of the Arthur Donaldson Productions Company has made the following statement to the trade:

"That the majority of exhibitors are with me in my new venture is proven by the number of letters and telegrams of congratulation that I received immediately the announcement was made that a company was formed to star me.

"Preparations are now under way for the launching of our first production, 'Sun Valley,' which was especially written for me by Chester De Vonde. Mr. Shaw, our production manager, is now endeavoring to acquire a suitable Broadway house for its premiere. We expect to start rehearsals within a very short time."

He would not divulge the name or any details of the production beyond saying that it is now in nine reel form and that it would be cut down to five reels for marketing under the C. B. C. banner.

"Golden Trail" Rated High

Arrow Claims it Will Prove One of Biggest Productions of the Year

ARROW'S production "The Golden Trail," which is being given a widespread advertising and publicity campaign, is described as one of the few stories of the far North having a convincing theme. This is the report of one of Arrow's officials. The story lends itself admirably to exploitation as well as publicity, it is stated. The Arrow official points out that the attractiveness of the story lies in the fact that part of it is written around life in the East and the major portion around life in Alaska.

Jane Novak is starring in this production. Arrow has just issued a sixteen-page exhibitors campaign book on "The Golden Trail." This campaign book contains sufficient publicity material and advertising ideas to enable the exhibitor to play this production as one of the biggest of the year, says Arrow Film.

The cast of "The Golden Trail" includes such players as Jack Livingston, Jean Hersholt, Bert Sprotte, Otto Matiesen, Broderick O'Farrell and William Dills.

The picture, according to the Arrow officials, "may easily be classed as one of the biggest productions ever offered to the independent field of pictures." Constant inquiries regarding territory available are being received at the Arrow offices, and according to the Arrow official, who has made the foregoing statements, all the territories on this production will be disposed of within a short time.

Star in Locklear Thriller

Louise Lovely Plays Second Part in Fox Feature, "The Skywayman"

WILLIAM FOX reports that the presence of Louise Lovely in the chief feminine role of the cast of "The Skywayman" is lending additional interest to this new Fox production. Despite the fact that Miss Lovely is now a Fox star in her own right, says the statement from the Fox headquarters, she consented to play second part in "The Skywayman," featuring Lieut. Ormer Locklear, because of the unique part assigned to her in this picture. A synopsis of "The Skywayman" story is given in the following Fox statement, and some of the "stunts" found in the picture are also recounted:

"'The Skywayman,' which is to be released very soon, is the story of an American aviator who invalided home from France, needs a counter shock to restore his memory. His doctor and a girl whom he has known abroad as a Red Cross nurse conspire to give him the necessary shock, and as a result he finds himself in the midst of what he takes to be a vast international plot. A serious note is added by the fact that the doctor is carrying on a double deception, with the aim of bringing disaster to his patient.

"In making this picture, Lt. Locklear was called upon to exercise all his skill, the result of his long experience as an inventor of flying stunts. He performed not only his unique feat of stepping from one airplane to another in mid-air, but new feats never before seen on the screen. He leaped from an airplane to an express train, then climbed back again; he landed in the narrow court of a skyscraper hotel; he deliberately collided with an automobile; he drove his airplane at a church steeple, and took the weather-vane off. All these feats are shown in detail in the film.

Kaufmann Arrives From Coast for Conference

EUGENE H. KAUFMANN, manager of the Accessory Department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, arrived in New York this week after a four months' stay in California. The nature of Mr. Kaufmann's return from the Coast in the midst of his activities, pending the establishment of two additional service stations to be opened in San Francisco and Portland, is for a series of important conferences with President Cromelin who recently returned to this country after an extended trip through Europe.

While in Los Angeles, Mr. Kaufmann opened a service station at 6514 Hollywood Boulevard—the first of the three offices which the company proposes to establish on the Pacific Coast, and which will serve as branch depots to accelerate shipments of American films and motion picture accessory products into Far Eastern film markets. An entire building has been rented at the above address, and according to Mr. Kaufmann, the structure has been entirely overhauled to meet the company's manifold requirements.

It is understood that Mr. Kaufmann will remain in New York for about four or five weeks, after which time he will return to the West Coast and take up the work of opening the two additional service stations in San Francisco and Portland.

Author Is Pleased at Kerrigan Picture

William Johnston, author of "The House of Whispers," which has been picturized with J. Warren Kerrigan in the leading role, issued the following statement after witnessing a private screening of the production recently:

"I am astonished and delighted by the production which Robert Brunton has given my novel, and I just want to say that the film is infinitely better than the book. It is absolutely a Kerrigan masterpiece and I am thoroughly delighted with it."

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will release "The House of Whispers" during the month of October.

Coast Workers Choose Mary Miles Minter

"A Cumberland Romance," a Realart picture starring Mary Miles Minter, was the choice of the employees of the Sun Drug Company of Los Angeles, when, during a celebration, they were asked what show they desired to see. In spite of the popular counter attractions that were playing in the city, every one of the two hundred employees voted to see Mary Miles Minter in "A Cumberland Romance" at the California.

Our Opinion

A Serial That Will Appeal to People Everywhere

The production of this serial has been handled in such a manner that in addition to appealing to those folks who are avowed followers of film serials, it will reach out and interest those of higher intelligence who have looked askance at serials. There is a vein of comedy running through the serial that takes away the dead monotony of exaggerated thrills and yet leaves no opportunity for a drag in the interest. Romance and adventure are the fundamentals upon which the plot is based and the spectator's interest is maintained steadfastly throughout.

The serial has all the thrills and suspense one expects to find in a serial and gets away from the usual run of serials in that instead of ending each chapter with someone hanging at the end of a cliff or awaiting death in one form or another, each chapter ends with a situation so full of suspense that the interest is worked to an even higher pitch and the spectator is twice as anxious to get back and see the rest.

Many men have produced, directed and acted in their own stories, but those who have been as successful as this young and enterprising producer-actor-director are few and far between. The direction of the serial has been handled in a very fine manner and the work of George B. Seitz in the featured role is appealing and convincing.

The cast supporting him has been well selected and renderes him capable assistance. The success of "Bound and Gagged" is a well-known fact and this serial by the same producer promises big things for the man who is on the lookout for good serials.

As a plain tale of the early days of Oklahoma "Lahoma" would be an excellent production, but it is more than a plain tale.

As a drama, alive with life and action, it would be considered one of the best of the current season, worthy of presentation in the best theatres in the country, but it is more than a drama.

As a theme play, big and sweeping, it could take its place among the finest pictures of this character, but it is more than a theme play.

It is a great story of the pioneers of the West, told in a sequence of great dramatic suspense, and carrying throughout a theme as vital as the human heart is to life itself.

Pathe Has One Reeler for Americanization

Pathe's share of the part being played by the motion picture industry in the Americanization campaign, conducted by a joint committee of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, is a one-reel picture of strong patriotic appeal entitled "The Land of Lafayette."

This film is a photographic chronicle of a profoundly impressive celebration held in Paris July 4, 1920, as a mark of appreciation for America's generosity toward the French war orphans, thousands of whom marched in a gigantic procession through the streets of the French capital. "The Land of Lafayette" will be the second release of the Americanism Committee of the Motion Picture Industry of America.

Metro to Launch Big Advertising Drive

The Chicago office of Metro is about to start an extensive advertising campaign in the daily newspapers with the aim of bringing before the public the merits of the super specials which will be released during the fall and winter.

Approximately $40,000 will be expended, it is stated. According to present plans, a quarter page will be taken four times a week in the Tribune and Examiner and two of the afternoon newspapers on every feature picture, which will mean a total of four full pages of newspaper advertising for each feature.

Chester Comedies Exploited

Showmen Are Featuring Them, Says Educational

SUCH an unusual success has been scored by Chester Comedies, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., reports, that many exhibitors are now devoting a considerable portion of their newspaper advertising to the comedies and are putting forth considerable effort on their exploitation.

With reports from all the exchanges not yet at hand, Educational points out that the two-reel animal comedies have already attained bookings in leading theatres that challenge comparison with any other pictures of the class, no matter how long they have been on the market. Many exchanges report the comedies booked for months in advance.

Included in the houses which have signed contracts for the entire series are the Rialto and Rivoli, entire Marcus Loew metropolitan circuit in New York; the Riviera and Central Park, the Balaban and Katz Chicago houses; the Walnut in Cincinnati; Strand in Dayton, O.; Colonial in Columbus; H. C. Horater's Alhambra and Patheon in Toledo; the Loew houses in Cleveland, with first runs of two weeks each at the Euclid; A. H. Blank's theatres in Des Moines and Omaha; the entire Butterfield circuit in Michigan; the Circle in Indianapolis; Strand in Louisville; the Mastbaum houses in Philadelphia; Rowland and Clark's chain in Pittsburgh and Erie; Loew's Palace and Columbia in Washington; Stanley Champber's Palace in Wichita; Grauman's in Los Angeles; Wells theatres in Richmond; Turner and Dahnken circuit in California; the entire Ruben and Finklestein chain in Minneapolis and St. Paul; the Jensen and von Herberg houses in the northwest; the Gordon interests in New England; the Poli theatres through Connecticut, and in fact principal theatres in every territory.

In Canada Messrs. Jule and Jay J. Allen have not only instructed that these comedies be booked at every one of their theatres through the Dominion, but have also advised their managers to play up the Chesters in their advertising and exploitation.

According to Educational the booking of these comedies is so heavy that the entire stress is being placed upon this advertising and exploitation angle and the attention of exhibitors who have booked them to the possibilities of the pictu

Newspaper advertising, in both cut and mat form is being provided on all of the two-reel comedy releases, and special scene pictures supplied those who design their own displays. Special suggestions for lobby display and unusual exploitation angles are being given with each release.

"The Big Show," the third Chester release, is offered as supplying unusual opportunities for the showman. A considerable portion of the action is built around a kid circus with youngsters as wild men, tattoed folk, Egyptian dancers and the like. This portion of the picture supplies a great portion of the amusement, but there are thrills in abundance when little Arthur, the baby actor, is seized by the villains and rescued by Snooky.

All sorts of circus methods are suggested for exploiting the picture which is being advertised as "for kids of six, thirty-six and sixty." Since he has been given the sobriquet of "the Humanzee," "Snooky" has proven an unusually easy subject to exploit.

The fourth Chester has been completed and is en route to New York. It is "A Tray Full of Trouble." "The Big Show" is scheduled for release the week of September 12.

Lloyd Release on Sept. 12

"Get Out and Get Under," Latest Laugh Maker, Scheduled by Pathe

"GET OUT AND GET UNDER," second of Harold Lloyd's new series of two-reel comedies, will be released early in September according to an announcement just made by Pathe Exchange, Inc.

In "Get Out and Get Under," Lloyd is supported by the same company which helped him establish "High and Dizzy." An addition to the cast, however, is little Frederick Ernest Morrison, otherwise "Sunshine Sambo" whose ability is known to all who have followed the Rolin one-reelers featuring "Snub" Pollard. Mildred Davis, who has been Lloyd's leading woman in the last five of his two-reel comedies, is again his principal support.

In Buffalo, the Shea Amusement Company, operating the Hippodrome, broke its first run rule and consented to share Lloyd's pictures with the Strand of that city, playing them day and date. After showing "High and Dizzy," Harold B. Franklin, manager of the Hippodrome ,sent the following letter to the Pathe Home Office:

"Harold Lloyd would feel amply rewarded if he could hear the long, spontaneous shrieks of laughter of our audiences while watching his latest comedy, 'High and Dizzy.' Beyond a doubt, Lloyd is established in the affections of theatre-goers as one of the rarest comedians that has ever graced either stage or screen. We consider it a privilege to play the Lloyd pictures on our program."

Wide Appeal in Program

Hodkinson Claims to Have Pictures for All Classes of Fans

THE showman knows that to give his audiences what they demand in screen entertainment he must show pictures of every nature, differing widely in theme, appeal and locale, and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announced in preparing their output they kept this fact firmly in mind.

Hodkinson claims to have a picture which will suit any class of audience. "Firstly," reads their announcement, "there is the big, spectacular, lavish productions. Under this heading may be listed the colossal success 'Sex' and the soon-to-be-released 'Love Madness.' Secondly: The ever popular 'Westerners.' And under this heading there are the great Benj. B. Hampton productions such as 'The Westerners,' 'Desert Gold,' 'The Sagebrusher' and 'Riders of the Dawn'."

"Thirdly: Pictures dealing with great, big stories of present day conflict of which 'The Dwelling Place of Light' scheduled for early release is typical. Fourthly: Sea stories. And it is said that in 'Bucko McAlister' the next J. Parker Read, Jr., production, starring Hobart Bosworth, the Hodkinson organization have a picture which will live long as a deep-sea epic.

"Fifthly: Pictures with locale laid in the South with all the charm of beautiful women, wonderful horses and widely-verandahed stately homes. 'The Kentucky Colonel' is ideally representative of this type.

"Then mystery stories,—the sort of pictures in which Robert Brunton has been presenting J. Warren Kerrigan, and lastly rural drama, such as Wallat's "Down Home."

Bennett to Make Specials

First National Will Distribute Series; Pinero Drama Is Started

BY the terms of a further contract signed with Whitman Bennett, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., have secured a series of special pictures to be forthcoming from that producer in addition to the four Lionel Barrymore productions already provided for according to an announcement from Associated First National this week.

These special productions under the additional agreement are to be three in number, and together constitute a series of emotional dramatic subjects based on themes of intimate feminine interest, it is announced. The first of these is "The Profligate" by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero and the actual making of this production by Mr. Bennett is already in progress at his Yonkers studios under the direction of Kenneth Webb.

"The Profligate," when produced on the speaking stage some years ago in England proved an enormous success. The original cast included Sir Johnston Forbes Robertson, Sir John Hare, Lewis Waller, Kate Rorke and Olga Nethersole among other players of international fame.

Whilst the name of original play is being used as a working title the final title of "The Profligate" will in all probability be changed to one more aptly conveying the theme of the story. The production of the feature will not in any way interfere with the work on the Lionel Barrymore series, said Mr. Bennett.

R. A. Walsh Completes Second Production

With the filming of a sequence of elaborate scenes depicting Monte Carlo now in progress, R. A. Walsh this week completes actual camera work on his second independent special to be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation as a First National Attraction.

Chester Comedy Wins by Direct Appeal

AN unusual piece of sales work is reported by A. C. Bromberg, manager of the Atlanta office of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. Manager Charles W. Picquet, of the Carolina theatre, Pinehurst, N. C., a town with a population of less than 250, felt that he could not afford to pay the price asked for Chester Comedies, so Mr. Bromberg sent him "Four Times Foiled," first of the series, and asked him to show it and fix his own price.

This Mr. Picquet did, and just before running the comedy used the following slide:

"Good two-reel comedies are very scarce. It's more difficult to get good ones than features. We have tonight the first of a new series of animal comedies which has been sent us on trial. If you like it, we will book the series. If not, this will be the last."

The result: Mr. Picquet writes:

"I am sorry you left the price-making of the Chester Comedies to me. I didn't realize how embarrassing it would be until now. 'Four Times Foiled' made an unqualified hit. On account of my limited business I am unable to pay you what it is really worth."

"Felix O'Day" Will Be Released Sept. 12

Gauging their opinions by the success of "One Hour Before Dawn," Pathe officials are looking to H. B. Warner for another triumph when "Felix O'Day" is released. The screen version of F. Hopkinson Smith's novel, heads the schedule of Pathe for the week of September 12th. The cast supporting Warner is small, but select, and includes Marguerite Snow, Lillian Rich, Ray Ripley and Karl Formes. Robert Thorney directed.

Frank Griffin Is Main Production Manager

Coincident with the taking over by the Special Pictures Corporation of the Balshoffer studios in Hollywood comes the announcement from President Louis W. Thompson of the Los Angeles organization that Frank C. Griffin, the former Sennett rightbower, has been engaged as production manager.

Griffin, who has grown up with the picture industry since the old Biograph days, will have entire supervision over the production activities of the Special Pictures Corporation.

First National Straw Vote Causes Interest

With 8,000,000 more women eligible to vote for president this year than ever before now that the suffrage amendment has been proclaimed a part of the constitution of the United States by Secretary of State Bainbridge Colby, and with early prophecies as to the outcome of next November's election upset, the shrewdest politicians are looking to the Presidential Straw Vote to be launched by more than 5,000 film theatres the week of September 19th under the supervision of Associated First National Pictures for the most accurate forecast obtainable.

In the week of straw balloting the motion picture theatres are expected to reach between 4,000,000 and 6,000,000 voters, and it is expected that the final result will be announced from Associated First National headquarters in New York fully a month before the November election.

Pathe Has Three Big Features

Blackton Production, Blanche Sweet and Warner Ready

MEETING the predictions of a season greater than ever as voiced by exhibitors everywhere, Pathe will release three superb feature productions in the month of September. They are the first of a steady stream of high class motion pictures which will be offered throughout the coming fall and winter months.

The schedule for the month in the feature field calls for the release of a new J. Stuart Blackton production "The House of the Tolling Bell," a play from the novel by Edith Sessions Tupper in which May McAvoy and Bruce Gordon are featured; Blanche Sweet in a cantering romance, "Help Wanted—Male"; and H. B. Warner in a strong drama, "Felix O'Day," from the famous story by F. Hopkinson Smith.

"The House of the Tolling Bell" is a drama of love and mystery laid in the Southland. It will be released on September 5th. The novel from which it was adapted appeared serially in the Illustrated Sunday Magazine with a circulation of over four million readers. The action is laid in old Louisiana in an atmosphere of old colonial mansions, broad lawns, old colonels, and all the essentials of healthy, happy Southern life. The romance of it fits the background.

In the selection of a cast Commodore Blackton picked May McAvoy, who has scored remarkably under his direction in previous offerings, and Bruce Gordon. Miss McAvoy justifies her selection with a remarkable portrayal of a brave little girl of the South, Eulalie Jensen, who has been achieving distinction in recent work, has an important part and others in the cast are Edward Elkus nd Edward R. Dunn.

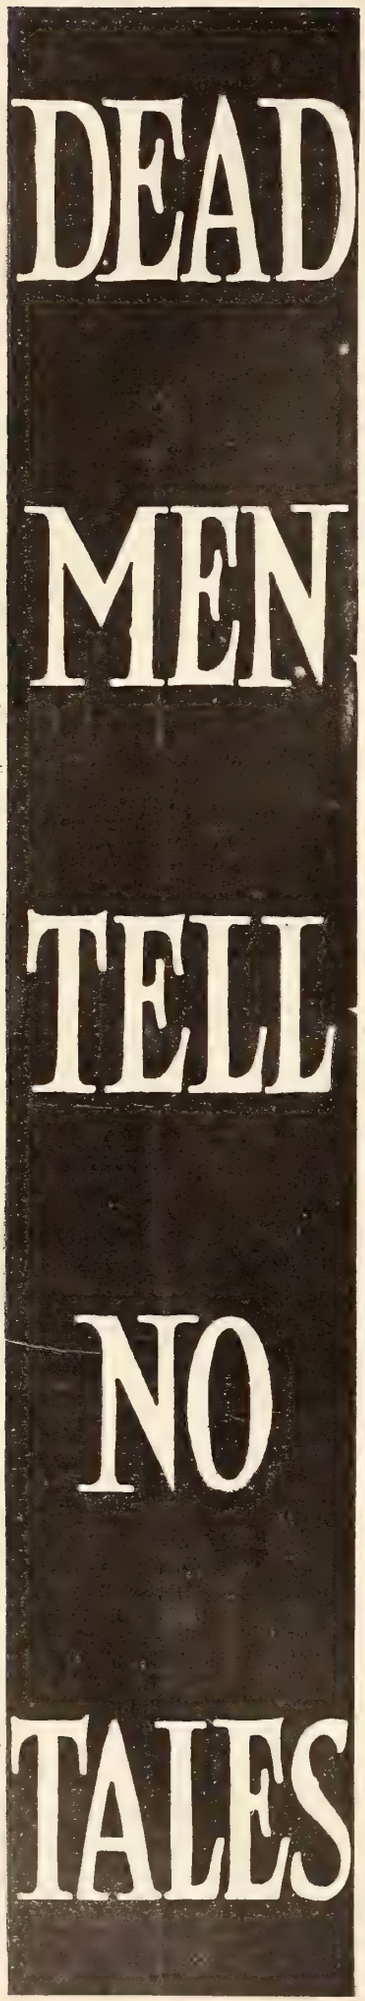
The Warner picture, "Felix O'Day," will be released on September 12th. The book was the last book written by F. Hopkinson Smith before his death and by many critics it is said to be his best work. It is the tale of Felix O'Day, an Irish gentleman and sportsman who is carried from the heights of society to the depths of the underworld and to utter poverty in his pursuit of a man who had betrayed his friendship. A remarkable situation is developed when Felix O'Day finds his erring wife and the man who stole her from him.

H. B. Warner is ideal in a role with force, dignity, and in an atmosphere of refinement and social recititude, and this production is of just that character. The action is strong but never unnatural and the quiet portrayal by Warner as against heroics of some screen stars is in keeping with the story.

"Help Wanted—Male," released September 26th, may be termed a glorious comedy. To quote a recent pre-release review it reveals a hitherto unsuspected Blanche Sweet, an animated young lady who wears gorgeous gowns, hats, and hose, and wears them well and who glides through her scenes in a manner at once piquant and passionate.

Three Fox Films on Broadway

PRODUCTIONS made by Fox Film Corporation have played a big part in helping provide entertainment to the vast army of theatregoers on Broadway during the past week. In three of the photoplay houses along the "Gay White Way"—the Capitol, the Lyric and the New York theatre and Roof—three of the latest Fox productions, capacity business was the rule.



"While New York Sleeps," a Fox "special," appropriately styled "The 1920 Cinemelodrama of life in the metropolis," holds the centre of the stage at the Lyric theatre. Reports during this first week indicate that a new record for attendance at motion pictures will be hung up by the time the two weeks' engagement is ended.

"The Untamed," Max Brand's story picturized with Tom Mix, the daredevil star in the title role, is the second Fox production that blazed forth in electric lights on Broadway, holding forth at the Capitol theatre, which is recognized as the largest motion picture house in the country. A two-fold significance was attached to the showing of "The Untamed" at the Capitol from the fact that this is the first time Tom Mix has played at one of the big Broadway houses and the first time a William Fox production has been shown in the Capitol theatre.

Manager Rothapfel is said to have booked "The Untamed," which was staged by Emmett J. Flynn, for the Capitol upon its inherent merit, in entertainment value, both from the standpoint of Tom Mix's work in the role of Whistling Dan, and the intense heart interest which the story arouses in the spectator. That Manager Rothapfel's judgment in selecting the Fox production for the Capitol was sound is evident from the verdict of many of the New York motion picture critics.

The third Fox production to grace the screen of a Broadway theatre was "The Little Wanderer," with Shirley Mason in the title role. This picture, just released to first-run houses, entertained audiences at the New York theatre and Roof, where Fox pictures are shown.

"If I Were King," the famous stage success and novel by Justin Huntly McCarthy, enjoyed a success at the Lyric theatre for two weeks.

Seitz Returns from Spain

Trip of Picture Company Reported a Success from Every Standpoint

GEORGE B. SEITZ, recently returned from Spain, brought back with him approximately thirteen thousand feet of film for his Pathe feature, "Rogues and Romance". The scenes were taken in southern Spain, in the provinces of Malaga, Cadiz, Seville and Granada. Mr. Seitz was informed by natives that his was the first company of screen players to take pictures in these localities.

The company experienced the most favorable weather conditions. Mr. Seitz said that out of the entire seven weeks spent on a trip work was not held up more than two hours on account of adverse weather conditions. The members of the producing unit were June Caprice, Marguerite Courtot, Harry Semels, Frank Redman, assistant director William Sullivan and cameraman Harry P. Wood.

The production is a picturization of a play, "The Golden Senorita", written by Seitz. The title is to be "Rogues and Romance" which will be this director-star's first feature offering. It is a romantic drama, dealing with the adventures of two young Americans who become involved in a Carlist uprising. Practically all the action takes place in Spain, and in staging the piece, Mr. Seitz used the actual locations demanded by the story.

Save for the necessary studio scenes and a street scene requiring special effects, not possible of achievement outside of America, the entire picture was filmed in Spain.

"Scenically, 'Rogues and Romance' will be one of the most pretentious photoplay offerings," says Pathe. "In putting his story into pictures, Mr. Seitz disregarded production cost, concentrating on the aim to realize the maximum in cinematic and dramatic effect. The street set he has erected at Larchmont, N. Y., is the most elaborate attempted in the East and compares in size with the biggest settings constructed for a motion picture."

Pioneer Exchange in South

New Office to Distribute Product in Mississippi and in Louisiana

ANOTHER link in the chain of exchanges of the Pioneer Film Corporation was established yesterday when arrangements were completed for the distribution of Pioneer pictures in Louisiana and Mississippi.

A. Samuels and his general manager Charles Kranz will handle the Pioneer features as a result of negotiations made with Pioneer's general manager, M. H. Hoffman.

This deal between the Pioneer and the Southeastern Pictures Corporation is regarded at Pioneer headquarters as being of the utmost importance and makes the latter concern the largest independent organization, operating throughout the eight Southeastern states.

There is no doubt but that the exhibitors in Louisiana and Mississippi will welcome the news which will enable them to procure the many successful features which the Pioneer has released of late and which it is about to release for the coming 1920-1921 season.

Some of the productions which will shortly be released in these two states are as follows: "Long Arm of Manister," "The Boomerang," "Atonement," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "Bubbles," as well as many other well-known Pioneer specials. They will also immediately release in the territory a series of one-reel comedies, known as "Facts and Follies" and also the Stecher-Caddock wrestling Bout.

Universal Is Busy Titling

Four Features Now in Cutting Rooms Include Eva Novak Picture

FOUR important features are now in the editorial stage in the Universal City cutting rooms, preparatory to being added to the list of forty-eight special productions pledged the exhibitors and the public during the current fiscal year.

"Black Friday," starring Frank Mayo, has just been finished under the direction of Frederick Thomson. The scenario was prepared by Wallace Clifton from the novel by Frederick Isham, and principals in the cast are Lillian Tucker, Dagmar Godowsky, Belle Stoddard Johnstone, Ray Ripley and Fred Vroom.

Stuart Paton has just shot the final scene of "Wanted At Headquarters," his first production since his return to the Universal studios. Eva Novak, Universal's newest star, is introduced in this romance of dauntless daring, adapted from the novel by Edgar Wallace.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are busy editing, cutting and titling their latest comedy feature, "Once a Plumber—" which is the third in their list of fire-reel funfilms. The story is by Edgar Franklin, and was responsible for their first farce feature, "Everything But the Truth."

Reeves Eason is similarly employed on "Pink Tights" the story of circus life by J. U. Giesy, adapted by Philip Hurn. Gladys Walton and Jack Perrin are featured in this photodrama.

Pathe News' Exclusive Views of Villa

FOLLOWING up its acquisition of the first exclusive pictures of the Russian-Polish warfare before Warsaw, the Pathe News claims to have scored another beat in obtaining the first pictures of Pancho Villa, the reformed Mexican bandit, taken in four years. They were obtained by O. A. Aultman, Pathe News representative at El Paso, in spite of the refusal of Pancho to pose unless he received compensation.

According to the Pathe account of Aultman's exploits, the cameraman made repeated attempts to locate Villa's whereabouts, journeying from place to place with considerable difficulty as new stories and reports of the bandit-chief's rendezvous reached his ears. At one place Aultman was arrested by the Mexican Federal troops and released only upon appeal to President de la Huerta. When Aultman finally did penetrate to Villa's camp, the Mexican chief refused to pose for the "Grin-go" photographer. However, by means of a bribe, Aultman is said to have finally won over a government photographer who took the "shots" surreptitiously with the Pathe camera.

Two serial lights are combining to make distinctive the new series of fifteen two-reel Western dramas starring Tom Santschi, produced by Cyrus J. Williams, who contracted through Arthur S. Kane for release through Pathe. Ronald Bradbury is directing Santschi, while Frank Howard Clark is writing the stories, the first of which is "Beyond the Trail."

Artola Co. Announce High-Class Comics

The Artola Productions, Inc., a new Massachusetts corporation, operating in New England with headquarters in Boston, announces its production of a series of comedies and comedy-dramas, which, it is expected, will meet the demand of theatre managers for comedies minus the chase and slap-stick. Artola will produce, it is announced, twenty-six one-reel comedies annually.

The Artola has already started work on the first of the two-reel "After Dark Comedies," of which there will be eight annually, and which stories are from the pen of Charles F. Smith, director-general of Artola Productions and also start next week on the two-reel satire, entitled "Kiss-met."

The temporary titles of the first Artola comedies are "Honeydo" and "Hats," while the tentative title of the first of the "After Dark Comedies" is "Wet Ashes." A male star has been engaged under a five-year contract, it is stated, for its twenty-six one-reel comedy productions.

Price R ceives First "Ambrose" Comedy

The first of the Mack Swain comedies being produced by Jean Perry has been received by C. B. Price Co., Inc. This initial two-reel "Ambrose" subject bears the title "Full o' Spirits."

C. B. Price, president of the Price Corporation, was exceedingly pleased with the first release. "While Mr. Perry has told us to expect an exceptionally good comedy, we were more than surprised at the quality of this subject," said Mr. Price. "We feel certain that the exhibitors and buyers throughout the country will agree with us in the statement that we believe that they will rank with any comedies now being offered them."

Fall Buyers Visiting Arrow Offices

Joan Acquires Billy West

Star Will Make Series of Two-Reelers to Be Issued Monthly

FROM the offices of the Joan Film Sales Co. comes an announcement that Billy West has been signed up by Joan to produce two reel comedies at the rate of one a month, which Joan will handle on a states-rights basis.

According to the arrangement between Joan and Billy West, the comedies will be an entirely novel kind, along lines that are distinctly individual, according to Joan. It will be remembered that while Charlie Chaplain was in his heyday, Billy West produced comedies along Chaplin lines that aroused popularity. The understanding West has with Joan calls for comedies on a style all his own.

It was pointed out by Joan that Billy West will give himself plenty of time to perfect his work, as the comedies will be produced no faster than one a month. There will be no rushing about his work. In the past, the popularity of Billy West's two-reelers induced the producers to hurry him to the extent of releasing one comedy every two weeks. Such haste will not be the case here, regardless of the demand for his pictures. It was with this understanding that Billy West has accepted Joan's contract. He will have plenty of time to perfect every foot of film, and the keynote of his comedies will be concentration on every detail.

It was said by Joan that this Billy West deal is heavily financed and that no expense will be spared in making the comedies.

The twelve Paralta pictures disposed of are "A Man's Man," "Madam Who," "The Turn of a Card," "Rose of Paradise," "Blindfolded," "Hoops of Steel," "Shackled," "Wedlock," "Maid of the Storm," "The White Lie," "The Heart of Rachael," "The Goddess of Lost Lake."

"Determination" to Be Complete Soon

"Determination", the ten-reel super production, being produced by John L. McCutcheon for the United States Photoplay Corporation, at their Grantwood, N. J. studios, is announced by the makers as well on the way to completion.

Miss Eve Pierson, formerly with the London Film Co., and lately with Vitagraph and Famous Players, is playing the lead in the prologue, portraying the part of the "Angel of Mercy", and Ole Stadstad, who has been absent from the screen for two years, will portray the part of the international crook.

"Determination" will not be completed for another two months and then will have its initial run on Broadway for a short period after which time it will be sent on the road.

Eminent Authors Pledged

Equity Promises "Even Greater Literary Lights" for the Future

IN announcing its policy for the coming year, Equity Pictures Corporation lays special emphasis on the high standing of the authors that have been responsible for the stories that it has picturized in the past and then promises for the future "even greater literary lights for its productions." The statement just issued from the Equity Pictures Corporation office in connection with this phase of its production program, follows in part:

"A bird's eye review of the seven Equity productions of the year reveals an array of the cream of dramatic genius. Beginning with Max Marcin of Broadway fame, author of the first Young feature, 'The Eyes of Youth,' which is still going strong, this list includes Lenore J. Coffey, one of the greatest scenario writers of the day and author of 'The Forbidden Woman'; Monte Katterjohn, the brilliant dramatist and romance writer, responsible for the House Peters production 'Silk Husbands and Calico Wives'; Marah Ellis Ryan, author of a book with a circulation of 8,000,000—'For the Soul of Rafael'; Henry Arthur Jones, England's foremost classic dramatist, author of 'Whispering Devils,' Conway Tearle's latest starring medium; Robert Brownson Stockbridge, the celebrated American writer, and author of Equity's Edith Taliaferro special production 'Keep to the Right'; and finally Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, one of the world's leading realistic dramatists, author of Clara Kimball Young's latest and greatest picture, 'Midchannel.'

"It will be remembered that out of the seven productions, four come from the legitimate stage, two of them with Broadway records—'The Eyes of Youth' and 'Midchannel,' in which Ethel Barrymore made her great triumph."

Reelcraft Names Releases

THE general office of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation reports the completion of five more productions for its exclusive short subject program. For the fifth release of the new Royal Comedy series, Reelcraft offers an all-star production of "When the Cat's Away", with a large cast including Rose Burkhardt, Tommy Flynn, Ernest Loos, Nema Catto, Rhea Laughlin, Lew Golden and Frederick J. Ireland, the last of whom also directed the picture. Leon Errol was featured in the first release, while Billy B. Van starred in the second, third and fourth releases. The success of the Billy B. Van releases has induced the executives of Reelcraft to add more Van comedies to the series. These will be announced shortly.

Alice Howell has completed her second production of the new series at the Hollywood studio of Reelcraft, titled "A Convict's Happy Bride". It was directed by Dick Smith. In this new series of Alice Howell comedies, Director Dick Smith is introducing a new type of picture.

Russell Film Soon to Start Production

W. D. Russell, president of Russell-Greiver-Russell Film Corporation, Chicago, is on a trip to the west coast where he intends to oversee the final details of construction on the new studio so that there will be no delay in starting production after the first of September.

The company announces its intention of starting work immediately on a series of five-reel pictures to be released in the course of the next few months through independent exchanges.

Gersten in State-Right Field

"The Unfortunate Sex" Is First of Group of Big Features

FRANK GERSTEN, who has for the past five years operated one of the most successful independent exchanges in the East in addition to maintaining a circuit of theatres, has entered the state-rights end of the business and will immediately put on the market a series of big special productions, it is announced.

The first of this series, which is now being offered the independent distributors, is "The Unfortunate Sex", an elaborate production, in which Frances Edmonde is co-starred with George Larkin, supported by a cast in which appear the names of Harry Van Meter, Katherine Lewis, Earle Schaefer and others of equal prominence. The story was adopted from Elsier La Maie's famous novel of the same name, which is remembered as being one of the "best six sellers" a year or so ago.

"Within five minutes after the last reel of 'The Unfortunate Sex' was off the screen when being shown to me privately for the first time, I had closed the deal which gave me the world rights to this big drama," said Mr. Gersten in talking of his initial offering.

"To me it is an ideal picture from every viewpoint in that it combines story interest with a big theme in which romance and mystery are cleverly interwoven and interspersed here and there with little human touches. The plot moves swiftly, the action affords plenty of thrills and the suspense is well sustained up to the big climax.

"Then again, the title is the kind of a title that offers many angles for special exploitation and gives the showman every opportunity to sell his seats. And the picture itself will send the patrons away more than satisfied. Taking all combined, I am convinced that 'The Unfortunate Sex' is a profitable picture from every angle."

Mr. Gersten being an exhibitor and showman of national repute, having owned and directed the Lexington Opera House, New York City; Royal theatre and the Prospect theatre in the Bronx; the U. S. theatre, Hoboken, N. J.; and the U. S. Temple, Union Hill, N. J., is in the position to judge what the public likes.

It is Mr. Gersten's purpose to market at least one big production a month, which will enable the independent exchanges handling the Gersten pictures ample opportunity to compete with any other factor in the field, whether independent or program distributor.

Already several contracts are closed for future offerings, it is stated. Several important territories have already been sold on "The Unfortunate Sex" which is significant from the fact that not one line of advertising has heretofore appeared and that the final cutting and editing of the picture was complete only a week ago.

F. Backer Announces Campaign

Key-Cities Will Have Special Showings of Jans Film

WHAT promises to be a campaign extensive in its proportions and effective in its results is about to be launched by Jans Pictures, Inc., in behalf of its latest production, "Madonnas and Men", according to a statement made by F. E. Backer, general-sales-manager of the Jans organization, to a NEWS representative early this week. The first step in this systematic effort to acquaint the trade and the public more thoroughly with "Madonnas and Men", which was given a special public presentation recently at the 44th Street theatre, New York, will consist, says Mr. Backer, in a series of pre-release showings of the pictures at available theatres in the key-cities, especially engaged for this purpose.

Following closely after these first showings will be an extensive advertising drive through the medium of the trade journals. A special feature of the accessories being prepared to aid in "putting the picture over" is a series of special sketches in eight colors being done by Anthony Gablike at the Apeda studios, New York. Mr. Gablike is already well known to the industry for his artistic work for Goldwyn, United Artists and other picture organizations, and Mr. Macker promises that these eight-color sketches done against artistically designed backgrounds will mark a distinct departure from the usual run of lithographic work.

Mr. Backer has already made several trips through the Mid-west in the interests of "Madonnas and Men" and has discussed the Jans production with all the prominent exchange-men of the key-cities that he visited. He reports that he found a marked display of interest in the picture which had already become known to the exchange-men of the Central States owing to the publicity given it earlier in the year in connection with its New York premiere.

"The Inferior Sex" to Show Wide Variety

"The Inferior Sex", Art-Class Pictures Corporation's new drama now in the course of making at the Yonkers studio of the company, is to have a wide variety of interest, background and cast, states the producing company. Jack Harvey is directing the feature.

Preliminary Work on Neal Hart Advertising Brought to a Close

THE preliminary work in the big advertising and exploitation campaign behind the Neal Hart Pinnacle Productions, was brought to a successful conclusion last week when Eddy Eckels, general manager of Independent Films Association, O. K'd the new style of lithographs created by the Ritchey Lithograph Company for Independent and the lobby photos, created by the Western Photogravure Company, Chicago.

Independent Films Association due to place at the disposal of those exchanges and exhibitors playing the Neal Hart feature, some elaborate display matter to advertise and exploit their dependent feature, according to Manager Eckels, who states that extraordinary steps have been taken to obtain ultimate results through lavish types of all lobby display and accessories. He points to the Neal Hart press books and trade journal advertising as examples of what exhibitors may expect in the exploitation behind this series.

At the studios in Glendale, Calif., Mr. Hart is already well under way with the second production, entitled "Skyfire." The second Pinnacle feature will be a story of the Canadian Secret Service, a theme woven around the Canadian Mounted Police and the omen of the Aurora Borealis.

"Hell's Oasis," the first of Hart's Pinnacle features, is an adaptation from the famous stage play "The Fighting Parson," by Wm. L. Roberts. "Skyfire," Mr. Hart's second vehicle is from the pen of H. C. Tuttle, star writer for "Adventure."

Orphanage Used in Picture

Hemmer Company Commandeers Asylum in Making Production

AS the background for one of the big scenes in the premier presentation of Hemmer Superior Productions, Inc., of which Edward Hemmer is president and director, the Leake Watts Orphan House, at Hawthorne Avenue and City Line, Yonkers, was commandeered for a whole day and its entire personnel utilized for the forthcoming production. The action in the piece is built up around Maud Sylvester, ingenue of the company, who as one of the inmates of the establishment, has a rather obscure start in life, but whose career later develops a series of adventures that parallel the life of a young girl of affluence and luxury.

Arrangements for the use of the establishment were consummated through the courtesy of A. S. McClain, superintendent, and an entire day was spent in staging the scenes. It was a gala day for the youngsters who enjoyed their first experience as spectators and participants in a "movie" production.

Mr. Hemmer announced that Elmer McGovern, film editor, has completed the task of cutting and captioning the new picture, and that although he had expected it to be ready for release about September 1st, present indications are that he has been over-optimistic.

In the cast of the production are: Maud Sylvester, ingenue lead; Sidney Mason, leading man; Flora Finch, Henry Sedley, playing one of the leading roles, and Pete Raymond, stage veteran of twenty-eight years experience.

Jans in Deal with Garson

Secures New Jersey Rights on Six Clara Kimball Young Productions

HERMAN F. JANS, president of the Jans Pictures, Inc., has concluded a contract with Clara Kimball Young and Harry Garson, giving him the distribution rights for the state of New Jersey on six Clara Kimball Young starring vehicles. These negotiations were brought to a successful close by Mr. Jans, it is stated, while he was enjoying a short rest at Kennebunk in the depths of the Maine forests. From this point Mr. Jans conducted his operations at a time when representatives of other big interests in New York were in close competition for the series, says a statement from the headquarters of the Jans Pictures Corporation. That he found it profitable to combine business with pleasure is evidenced in the contract which has just been consummated.

Other details, set forth in the statement just issued, are submitted as follows:

"Mr. Jans announces through his press department that he will release the six Clara Kimball Young pictures, following 'Midchannel', on a six-picture contract basis, thus affording exhibitors an opportunity to control the output of this popular film star without the necessity of purchasing a franchise for their territory.

"Mr. Jans also announces that commencing September 6th, his distributing company, known as Jans Film Service, Inc., will be enlarged to include New York State as well as New Jersey, and that he will very shortly move into large quarters, necessitated by his rapidly growing business.

"Foster Moore, a man of wide experience both in New York and New Jersey film circles has been made manager of the New York branch, and Maurice M. Broskie, who has been with Mr. Jans since the inception of his film activities, will remain as manager of the New Jersey branch and general manager of Jans Film Service, Inc."

Mr. Jans also announces for New York and New Jersey "Madonnas and Men" with an all-star cast and "Wings of Pride," starring Olive Tell. Both of these were directed by B. A. Rolfe and produced by Jans Pictures, Inc.

"Silent Barrier" Is Shown

Inter-Ocean Owns Foreign Rights to New Louis Tracy Production

PRIVATE showings of "The Silent Barrier," the first of the Louis Tracy Productions the series of which were recently acquired by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution, have disclosed a photodrama which in the opinion of Inter-Ocean officials, is one of the finest pictures it has had the privilege of offering to foreign buyers in many moons. Adapted to the screen from the "best seller" of the same name by Louis Tracy, and produced under the direction of William Worthington, it is said that the picturized version brings to the screen a production which is "rich in human interest and dramatic intensity."

What makes the picture specially commendable in foreign markets, according to Inter-Ocean, is that the theme in "The Silent Barrier" is international. In this respect the locale of the story, unlike other American offerings, is laid in Continental Europe where an absorbing love story takes one from a dingy and insignificant London newspaper office to the splendor of St. Moritz Baths in Switzerland. The sharp contrast here is at once apparent, and furnishes the background for a series of startling adventures ending amid the snow capped peaks of the Alps.

Opportunity for Independents

Exhibitors Looking to Them for Relief from "Abuses"

"THE independent field of film production and distribution is today overflowing with the milk and honey of opportunity." That is the opinion expressed by Richard Robertson, vice-president of the Independent Films Association, in a statement just issued on the general conditions now prevailing in the independent field of the motion-picture industry. Mr. Robertson's statement follows:

"In every district and section of the United States, theatre men are turning more and more to the independent exchanges for bookings in relief from the evils and abuses of the program exchanges.

"Exhibitors prefer to deal with the 'boss' in booking their attractions. The independent exchange man is the boss, by reason of the fact that it is his own money that keeps his business in operation. He is a fixture in his territory, knows the exhibitors and the conditions they are facing from firsthand information. He is not a 'hired man' who is likely to walk into his office any morning and find himself fired, with his successor waiting to take over the reins for a few months until his successor walks in.

"In case of disputes involving the refund of money exhibitors know that they can get quick and satisfactory settlement from the independent exchange man without waiting for a ponderous accounting system to get in motion in New York.

"In sketchy fashion, the reasons above are a few which explain why the exhibitors are more and more seeking to do business with the independent film men. And the only reason the independents are not handling the bulk of the business in each territory is that they are not able to get enough of the sort of attractions exhibitors want.

"'Exhibitors come into my office two and three times every week,' says Al Kahn, of the Crescent Film Company, Kansas City. 'They are looking for something new. Most of these have played every film I have at least once, and in many cases more than once. I keep buying as fast as I can find productions I know I can book. And I have no trouble in keeping these booked in my territory.'

"The same situation with few variations exists in every exchange center in the country today. And with all the money invested in independent exchanges and in state-right film productions, yet it remains true that this field has remained virtually untouched so far as concerns its development along systematic, businesslike lines.

"Here is the proof—which every independent film man will recognize instantly as being strictly and unexaggeratedly true:

"With one or two notable exceptions, the only films the state-right exchanges have been able to get up to this time have been those falling within one or more of the following classifications: 1. Reissues. 2. Pictures made for sale to the program distributing companies and rejected by them as being inferior. 3. Pictures made by the program-distributing companies for their own use, but rejected as inferior and thrown on the state-right market in a desperate effort to recover part of the wasted money. 4. Productions too big to distribute as program. 5. Single pictures made by newcomers in the production field with the idea of making one big profitable sale and moving on.

"You can count on the fingers of one hand (and still have several fingers left!) the cases where a producer has come before the independent exchanges and said, 'I know the kind of pictures you need. I know how to make them and I have plenty of money to make them with.'

"Yet that is exactly what Eddy Eckels told the state-right men last spring when the Independent Films Association was formed. And the first releasing series produced in accordance with the above brand-new policy is the series of Neal Hart Specials which will be on the market throughout the United States October 1 for release every six weeks—eight of them during the year, each one built especially for the independent exchanges."

"Fickle Women" Doing Well

Butler Picture Sold in Fifty-five Per Cent of Country

COINCIDENT with a general statement of "prosperity" in the affairs of the recently organized D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc., Joseph Klein, general manager, announces that business has "surpassed all expectations" in the state righting of "Fickle Women," starring David Butler.

Fifty-five per cent of the territory on this, their first release, has been closed, while the outlook for the remaining forty-five per cent, gives conclusive evidence that it will not be long before a complete list of the dealers who have already purchased it, and will handle the first Schwab productions throughout the United States, will be submitted for publication.

Unsolicited inquiries from South America, Mexico and European buyers, responding to no source of information other than the critical estimate of this feature contained in published reviews, also give promise that its compelling box-office qualities and David Butler's popularity will carry this feature to the furthermost corners of the earth.

"The reason for this," declares Mr. Klein, "is that we have endeavored and succeeded admirably in producing a clean, wholesome production, sustained from every critical standpoint from Sophie Kerr's story published in the Saturday Evening Post. Its transportation to the screen has created the demand through its representative qualifications and has surpassed 'all expectations.'

"In addition to 'Fickle Women,' adds Mr. Klein, "they will shortly release two more features also with David Butler in the leading roles. They are 'Girls Don's Gamble,' and 'Smiling All the Way.'"

As instanced in "Fickle Women," the desire of the producers has been to secure their material from representative reading publications. The producers again have gone to the Saturday Evening Post for their material in the filmization of "Girls Don't Gamble." The author is George Weston.

This feature is said to give promise in scope of genuine entertainment values. It is comedy-drama in every sense of the word, sustaining with critical merit the tempo of comedy effect and comedy relief, while it abounds further in applause provoking and breath holding thrills genuinely designed and expertly directed to dominate its audience of every class and description. Its cast has been selected from the very cream of motion picture players. It is headed by David Butler, whose qualifications need no further comment than a brief commentary on his portrayal of the rube Cal Price in "Fickle Women." His efforts in screen classics prior to this embrace his carrer under the personal direction of D. W. Griffith, King Vidor, Maurice Tournier, Universal, Selznick, etc. The feature has been directed by Fred J. Butler, David's father, the former's record as a director of dramatic legitimate attractions embracing a span of 25 years on the Pacific Coast for Oliver Morosco.

OUR own representatives gather every item appearing in this department. They aim, first, to secure news that is adaptable to the use of photoplay editors; and, secondly, material that will liven the exhibitor's program. Full permission is given to editors and managers to reprint from these pages. In addition, the Studio Department staff, under the direction of Miss Lillian R. Gale, is always at the service of newspapers and theatres to prepare any special material that may be desired.

The Studio Department serves as a connecting link, presenting the ideals, personalities and achievements of players and directors to the exhibitors and newspaper editors of the country, and, through them, to the public.

ABOUT PLAYERS

UPON seeing Charles Ray's first independent production, J. D. Williams, president of the First National circuit, telegraphed the star as follows: "Home office staff considers 'Forty-five Minutes From Broadway' one thousand per cent superior to any of your previous efforts. It is splendid tribute to unlimited possibilities of independent production and indicates beyond all argument that genius unrestrained has no limitations. I freely predict exhibitors and public will concede double your present popularity after seeing 'Forty-five Minutes From Broadway.'"

Ina Claire, and supporting company in the Metro special of "Polly With a Past", hadn't a "kick" to register on the location selected for some of the interesting exteriors. The estate of Albert Freeman, Sands Point, Long Island, was used for the local, which is midway between the Port Washington homes of Reginald Vanderbilt and August Belmont. It is said to have saved the necessity of pleading for "atmosphere", since the stage was admirably "set".

The scenes being photographed there show the arrival of "Polly" at a Long Island estate, where she is employed as a maid and where she disguises herself as a French adventuress, according to the "plot". The company includes Clifton Webb, Harry Benham, and Marie Wainwright. The director, Leander de Cordova, under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, Metro Director General.

Katherine MacDonald will go to Marion, O., as a member of a theatrical committee to call on Senator Harding, republican candidate for president. The invitation was extended by Al Jolson, president of the Harding-Coolidge Theatrical League.

Rudolph Valentino is a familiar figure to the early rising residents of Hollywood, California. Not that Mr. Valentino arrives home when others are preparing to greet the rising sun. But the handsome Metro player, who is enacting the leading role in the colossal picturization of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse", by Vicente Blasco Ibanez goes for a horseback ride every morning before starting work.

Mr. Valentino, who is an expert horseman, has a handsome mount which he will use for many scenes of this sensational Ibanez story. He has been rising at five o'clock each morning in order to beat the rising thermometer.

Herbert Rawlinson, returned from vacation, with a coat of brown like one gets only at Siasconset, Mass. (which is on the isle of Nantucket), is going around bragging about his color. Arthur H. Jacobs, Mr. Rawlinson's far-seeing manager, is not so overjoyed since he has Mr. Rawlinson scheduled to begin work in two weeks in a part which does not call for "an Indian make-up".

Among the popular leading men working opposite popular stars, is Plympton Greene, who will be seen in the Dorothy Dalton picture nearing completion, under the direction of Frank Reicher.

And another leading man with a popular star and director of prominence is Wallace Ray, who is cast for the role opposite Vivian Martin, under the direction of Sidney Olcott, in a Capitol production.

The working title of Constance Binney's starring vehicle now in the making is "Calderon's Prisoner". According to members of the company, the customs officers at Havana took them for escaped convicts or turn-coat revenue officers when Miss Binney, Ward Crane, her leading man, Lucy Cotton and Director R. William Neill were refused permission to land because they brought with them several cameras to film the local scenes for Miss Binney's forthcoming Realart production. The quartet, for only the above-named made the trip to Havana, were held up for five days until word came from Washington, D. C., authorizing their landing with the cameras under bond.

After spending eight weeks in and around Ithaca, New York, on location with the first Cayuga production under the working title of "Three Women Loved Him", Charles Lane has returned to New York and is now on the final, and studio work, of the picture. Mr. Lane will be remembered as an actor of the speaking stage and has been seen in a number of Famous Players productions of which the latest two that have been shown include "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde" and "Away Goes Prudence".

A unique tribute to Mr. Lane's professional standing was accorded him in Ithaca, when the professor of dramatic arts at Cornell University, situated in that city, learned of Lane's presence in town and induced him to deliver a series of informal talks on dramatic subjects to the summer students.

ABOUT DIRECTORS

DELL HENDERSON, directing a Fox production, was in a bit of a quandary what to do about getting "extras" in Milford, Pennsylvania, but was delighted to find that having selected the mining town for the scene of location, the "extras" were literally "thrown in." The entire population, according to Thomas J. Fallon, author of "Dynamite Allen," the picture Mr. Henderson is making, seem to have placed themselves at the disposal of the good natured director.

When it became noised about that George Walsh, the star, would make a spectacular leap from a burning building to a tree, a "stunt" he refused to have done by a subturned out "en masse," some to watch the athletic leading man, others to watch the cameras grind when Mr. Henderson shouted the word.

"When I left," said Mr. Fallon describing the scene of action, "they were digging a sluice of approximately two miles in length which will be used in flooding a dis-used mine, with a torrent of water from the Delaware River. Of course there are interiors taken in the mine, for which we took canary birds for the test of its safety from gasses. The flood scene, which will picture Mr. Walsh in the actual escape from death, is going to be the most daring thing he has ever done.

"Had the town not supplied us with 'extras, extras everywhere,' we could have chosen our types from the thousands of tourists who visited the location daily, sometimes blocking the road and interfering with traffic of automobiles to and from other towns."

Dell Henderson, with a reputation for a perpetual good humor, may stand a chance to side track a bit the day the flood is turned loose.

Harry Beaumont, one of the best known of the younger directors, has left Goldwyn for the purpose, it is said, of establishing his own producing company. He holds the rights to several famous novels and will announce his plans shortly.

Mr. Beaumont has been with Goldwyn for the past two years, during which time he directed nearly all of the Tom Moore features. He also directed Madge Kennedy and some of the Eminent Author productions.

Before joining Goldwyn he established himself with his sensational, "Skinner's Dress Suit."

In the past four and one-half years he has made twenty-five successful productions without rest or interruption and before taking up his next work will enjoy his first vacation in that time.

Most of the successful motion picture directors of today started as actors on the speaking stage. Alfred Green, director of Jack Pickford, is no exception. He began his career in a small musical comedy company.

For her production which will follow "The Tiger Lady," in which she was directed by Maurice Tourneur and which is now being finally cut and titled before distribution, Hope Hampton and her company are busily engaged in filming interior scenes at the Paragon Studio in Fort Lee. The production is being directed by Jack Gilbert, who will be remembered as a prominent member of the Tourneur forces in California; in addition to directing this picture, Gilbert is also the author of the story.

"The Killer," Stewart Edward White's latest novel which ran in magazine serial form and is now on the list of recent best-sellers, has been selected for production by Benjamin B. Hampton.

Warren Fromme, for several years assistant to Hobart Hanley, has been engaged in a similar capacity by Mr. Storm. Fromme's long experience in the studio will make him a distinct asset to the Storm organization.

Ida May Park is a director who makes her cast work hard but at the same time does not spare herself. Even now, before production has begun, she is working far into

Another "Hoosier" Comes to the Front

EVERY State justly lays claim to her great men and women. Some were only born there, and "grew" in another, some were born in other territory and were "brought up" in the State claiming them, while some "just happened to be from".

Indiana, however, has laid claim to a generous share, beginning with Oliver P. Morton, the great civil war Governor, and including names familiar to the literary world such as George Ade, Meredith Nicholson, James Whitcomb Riley; talented players in all kinds of stage work; names familiar to the world of finance, William B. Leeds, Daniel G. Reid, and many more. Then, suddenly, down the sloping green hills in ideal location, iris in six feet and two inches of regular Indiana he-man, with a promising future, already with a contract to star, the "Hoosier" screen actor. Monte Blue.

He is a "young feller" with an unmistakable Indiana twang of which he is justly proud. He thinks Indianapolis is the best place in the world to come from, but "bein' as how" he had screen aspirations, he thinks California is the next best place to "home", and "in some ways" as he terms it, California is a better place for a strugglin' movie actor than the Hoosier State.

Monte Blue did not have wild ideas of making scads of money and spending it in cabarets and sundry places when he packed the old straw suit case and "set out". He was a serious sort of chap, even then, with a grave respect for wholesomeness which he sets upon a pedestal today and states his ambition is to "popularize the simple life" via the screen.

"There is one thing you are safe in saying about me", declared among the latest of Famous Players' acquisitions, "and that is that I am not of the 'lounge lizard type'. I have a semi-insane obsession against ever being mistaken for the 'house plant variety' of male, the kind who seem to think breakfast of cubes of toast and coffee in an iridescent china cup, served in bed, will put 'meat' on a man, the kind of 'meat' he will need to withstand the obstacles in life which intrude upon one's peaceful journey. Seriously, my idea of a 'hero', if that is what they want me to play, is the opposite from the type mentioned, and I base my opinion upon experience.

"Back in Indiana—men get up mornings and attend to their work. It doesn't matter how much money they have personally, nor what their 'folks' are worth, the men who have made the Hoosier State respected by the Union, in fact, many of the men who have made the United States respected by all other nations, have been the kind who were not afraid to work.

"I had no idea of 'getting into the movies' without earning my opportunity. I admit I had an idea of 'getting in', but I was willing to and did, work for it. Good old Indiana labor served as my introduction.

"I was doing day labor, and some times filled in as an 'extra' in the days when 'extras' sold at newsstand prices. Mr. Christy Cabanne was making a picture and there was about to be a 'riot scene'—something like the B. R. T. strike. Three or four of the fellows who played 'bits' were tried out as the leader of a gang. But the leader was to push his way right through the mob and 'advance' with his followers. When Mr. Cabanne megaphoned the word to that mob to 'hold him', 'don't let him through', well, it was no boy's play to make it. Finally, discouraged, Mr. Cabanne sat down on a boulder, throwing off his broad-brimmed slouch and started to think. Suddenly he voiced 'Where's that young Hoosier who throws a wicked axe?'

"That was my first 'cue'. I have never worked so fast before or since. 'Right here,' I called out, fearing there might be some other ambitious Indianan in the crowd awaiting the same opportunity.

"Cabanne took a look. 'You're on' is all he said and that is how I became a 'movie actor'. I was directed to push my way through the mob, regardless. No 'toast and coffee in bed' would ever have supplied the strength it took, but I had been up early and probably devoured mush and milk, ham and eggs, fried potatoes and everything else within reach, so I was 'fit as a fiddle' supported with that wild eagerness to 'make good'. It was my firm belief that there was room for a player who had lived 'work' and I learned toward the simple life and whose accustomed ways would reflect 'natural' or what I have learned to call 'realism'—an' so, here I am.

"I have but one fear in connecnection with my work I will never put in a request for a 'substitute' as long as they keep me doing 'stunts' on horseback or any other old way unless they want me to play sitting in the lobby of a hotel, flicking imaginary specks off my freshly pressed clothes, smoking perfumed cigarettes, like those fellows who have been brought up on gold fish food which they inhaled through a silver straw!"

Indiana! May you ever point with pride to "The Hoosier Poet", author of "When Knighthood Was In Flower" and two yards, two inches and possibly one hundred eighty pounds of all-wool—"Monte Blue".

Jerome Storm Ready to Shoot on Gish Picture

AS yet the photoplay has no name. In the immediate motion picture industry it hardly needs one, since both director and star are names in a class all by themselves.

Jerome Storm, signed by the Frohman Amusement Corporation to produce, with Lillian Gish, the first picture this popular star has ever made under any supervision other than that of David Wark Griffith, is ready to begin work. During the past week he has been busily devouring the scenario prepared by Anthony Paul Kelly, and after thoroughly digesting it, started selecting the supporting cast.

It is now two years since Jerome Storm has filmed a production outside of the Charles Ray studio. During that period Mr. Storm produced every one of thirteen pictures Ray made under his Paramount contract, and one he will release through First National.

Before taking up the direction of Charles Ray, Mr. Storm directed Enid Bennett for Thomas H. Ince, so that in working with Miss Gish he will not be entirely unaware of the wiles of the female before the camera.

Upon his completion of the Frohman production, Mr. Storm will begin producing with his own unit, arrangements for which have now been concluded. The details, however, will not be announced until after the completion of the Gish picture.

Exhibitors who have followed Mr. Storm with Charles Ray, know his value to the box office. To Jerome Storm, more than to any other individual, is due the credit for the rapid rise of Charles Ray to the forefront ranks of cinema stars. Mr. Ray's greatest strides toward popularity were made during the past two years and the competent direction of Jerome Storm, who always exhibited a keen insight into the star's screen fancies, was largely responsible for it. He knew the kind of stories best suited for Charles Ray, and above all, he knew human nature. Upon this great attribute of successful drama was the popularity of the young star founded.

During the two years with Mr. Ray, Jerome Storm directed: "The Egg Crate Wallop", "The Village Sleuth" (which is yet to be released by Paramount), "Greased Lightning", "The Girl Dodger", "Peaceful Valley" (which will be a First National release), 'Hayfoot, Strawfoot", Alarm Clock Andy", "Bill Henry", "Crooked Straight", "Homer Comes Home", 'Paris Green" and 'The Busher".

Mr. Storm has his own ideas as to the pulse of the public. He has carefully observed the varying degrees of success with which the Charles Ray pictures have been received. With every production he attempted to strengthen the box office value of the next by making it more 'what the public wants". The answer is that he has never made a production that has not declared big dividends at the box office of any exhibitor.

When Jerome Storm begins operations with his own organization he will follow out his established plan of making "box office pictures". All his productions will have a distinct audience appeal, and profiting by the knowledge he gained by directing Charles Ray, will be of "the human interest" type that go as well in the so-called "tall grass" as in the great motion picture centers.

Sees Reason for Change in Adapting Classics

Joseph de Grasse, director of Charles Ray, utters a few words in defense of the practice of changing English classics when adapting them to the screen. Regarding the mental type of the "average fan," he says:

"He or she is not generally well read or well educated, and for such the movies are essentially recreation. Therefore to successfully present classics, which in their original form would never be read by many fans, one must sugar-coat them, so to speak, with a bit of love interest, just enough to get those who have not had educational advantages over the deepest places without destroying their interest.

"It is unfortunate that this is so, but truth cannot be dodged. When the public demand unadulterated literature they will get it. But so long as they continue to prefer the diluted forms no producer is going to risk heavy investments to please a few critics."

Directors' Activities

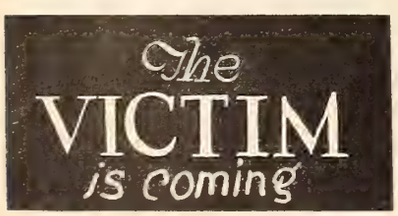
During the absence of J. D. Hampton in the East the responsibility of studio management has fallen upon the shoulders of Henry King, the ace-director of Hampton pictures. King has complete charge of the technical, scenario, casting, and administrative departments. He is also directing H. B. Warner in a screen version of "When We Were Twenty-One."



Bertram Millhauser, during the absence of the Pathe supervizing director, George B. Seitz, won a permanent place as a director of serials while Mr. Seitz and another company were "locationing" in Spain. While the golden opportunity offered, Mr. Millhauser lost no time, but proved to himself and all concerned that having written serials for y'ars and y'ars does not prevent a man from becoming a director of the "continued next week" variety of film. He is directing the third serial starring Juanita Hansen.

It is finally, authentically announced that Lillian Gish will be directed in her first picture under Froham Amusement Enterprises management by Jerome Storm. For seven years Miss Gish has been under the direction of D. W. Griffith. For fourteen pictures in succession, Mr. Storm directed Charles Ray. Is it any wonder, with a play by Anthony Paul Kelly to work on, that the director and star are equally interested in getting started? Congratulating William L. Sherrill, President of the producing company, seems in order. Everybody who can reach him by telephone hook or written crook, has done so.

Because of the success of his recent pictures, Charles Maigne has been signed on a long term contract to produce special "Charles Maigne Productions" for the Famous Players-Lasky corporation.

An impostor representing himself to be D. W. Griffith has been fleecing guests in poker games at Eastern resorts. The real Griffith says he never played poker but once and that time he committed the offense of trumping his partner's ace.

T. Hayes Hunter, who traveled from Los Angeles to New York to witness the introduction of his masterpiece "Earthbound," welcomed the rest anticipated in five days' of travel returning to the coast. While Mr. Hunter was in New York he was the center of inquiry regarding his cinematagraphic presentation of Basil King's widely read novel.

According to James Vincent, president, and to members of the Entertainment Committee, a lively winter is anticipated. A number of accepted candidates are awaiting initiation.

Start Work on New H. B. Warner Picture

James . Morrison has begun work on "When We Were Twenty-one," H. B. Warner's next production. Mr. Morrison has been cast for the part of "The Imp" in this picture. Mr. Morrison left New York for California two months ago to play opposite Anita Stewart in "Sowing the Wind," his first picture with her since their work together for Vitagraph.

Robt. G. Vignola After New Speed Record

Robert G. Vignola is out to set a new speed record with his third special Vignola Production released by Cosmopolitan-Paramount, "The Manifestation of Henry Ort." Vignola, who directed both "The World and His Wife," and "The Passionate Pilgrim," his first and second special productions respectively for Cosmopolitan-Paramount, in exceptionally good time, expects to complete his third special in even better time.

Work on "The Manifestation of Henry Ort" was begun only last week but progress has been so remarkably rapid that Director Vignola believes he will hang up a new speed record in production, in which endeavor he is assisted by an exceptionall efficient and loyal staff headed by Phil Carle, assistant director, and Al Liguori, cinematographer.

Screen Writer Not to Supplant Director

Commenting on recent statements to the effect that with the entrance of the established fiction writer, the director's position will become of secondary importance, Lloyd Ingraham says that while it is true that original stories for the screen by such writers will mean closer following of the original story by the screen version and less need for modification yet "it is not the director who will change his tactics but the author who will change his story."

"The advent of the writer and playwright will mean co-operation with and not dominance over the director. Directing is a field by itself and the story is after all but the thread upon which the director weaves his fabric."

Press Agents Retract Wrong Statement

Upon the start of the production of a film entitled "Blondy," starring De Sacia Mooers, at the Biograph studios in the Bronx, Albert Barrett was engaged for an important role in the story. Inadvertently he was given to understand that "Blondy" was to be put out as the first of a new series of productions under the old Biograph (A.B.) trademark. Accordingly, his press agents issued stories along this line to the various trade papers and to newspapers throughout the country. Subsequently, however, they learned that "Blondy" was not to be announced as a Biograph production. Accordingly, they sent out notices to correct any erroneous impressions. An officer of the company which produced "Blondy" issued a story last week castigating Barrett for his announcement but overlooking apparently the retractions which his press agents had made.

Max Linder Is Seen in Strong Come Back

Max Linder has his return-engagement for the screen completed, and it is the unanimous opinion of the hundred or more at the West Coast producing and distributing colony that Linder has staged a come-back that will give him back the popularity he formerly enjoyed. His picture, a situation comedy, is titled "Seven Years' Bad Luck," and when it was shown unadvertised and unannounced except to his friends, at the California theatre, Venice, recently, the people of the audience which completely filled the house, demonstrated that they liked every foot of the subject.

Goulding Will Write Story for Young

Edmund Goulding will write the scenario for "The Devil" which James Young will make with George Arliss in the leading role. Mr. Goulding recently shortened his vacation in London to return and begin work on the script.

DOINGS IN LOS ANGELES BRIEFLY TOLD

Production on the West Coast

BY J. C. JESSEN, 412 WEST SIXTH STREET

FOX

ALL available space at the Fox studio is being used for a number of gigantic sets representing buildings of a biblical time architectural design. The only information given out concerning these wonders is to the effect that they will be used for the next special production to be made under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. The studio organization gave no information but from outside sources it is learned the massive sets will be seen in a spectacular feature titled "The Queen of Sheba." Up to this time filming has not been commenced and no cast has been named but judging from the progress made in the erection of sets everything will be in readiness for making scenes within the next two weeks.

A new policy has been adopted respecting productions starring Tom Mix and hereafter two directors will be in charge of making Mix features. George Marshall is now filming a sequel to "The Texan," which is by the same author, Joseph B. Hendricks, and the subject is at present known as "Prairie Flowers." While Mix is making this subject Lynn Reynolds is editing the recently made Mix picture, "The Texan" and will work with the continuity department in the preparation of the subject next to be filmed.

Jack Ford, former Universal director, who has made a number of subjects starring Harry Carey, has been engaged by Fox to direct Buck Jones and western company. At the present time the casting department is selecting players for a story at present known as "Bimbo" which is from an original story by Jack McDermott, and is being prepared for the screen by Paul Scofield. This will be Scofield's first scenario for Fox. He was formerly with Thomas H. Ince organization.

The Fox Sunshine producing organization was materially increased this week when Hampton del Ruth, supervising director, engaged three additional comedy directors. They are Melville W. Brown, James Davis and Harry Williams. All are experienced comedy directors who have been identified with the leading comedy making organizations on the coast. Williams' most recent engagement was in the making of Hallroom Boys comedies.

BRUNTON

DIRECTOR Fred Niblo has been engaged by Robert Brunton studios and his first work there is editing the most recently made Bessie Barriscale production, "The Broken Gate" for Robertson-Cole.

Scene from the latest Universal-Century comedy in which Marjorie Provost is being starred

The first scenes were made this week for the B. B. Hampton all-star feature, "The Killer" from the novel by Stewart Edward White, under the direction of Howard Hickman and E. Richard Shayer. Eliot Howe, formerly director for Frank Keenan, has been engaged by Mr. Hampton to serve as assistant to the co-directors.

Dustin Farnum has returned to the Brunton studios after two weeks in the timber country in the vicinity of Fort Bragg, California, where he and Director Ernest C. Warde made many scenes for the "Trail of the Axe."

B. B. Hampton gave a preview last week of "The Money Changers" from the Upton Sinclair novel, and the negative and sample film of the subject were shipped east this week. The subject was made under the direction of Jack Conway and principals of the cast are: Claire Adams, Roy Stewart, Betty Bryce and Audrey Chapman.

Robert Brunton is spending the week in San Francisco, where he is looking after business interests of the Robert Brunton Studios.

Berdett I. Kinne, former dramatic critic of the Milwaukee Journal, and Sally Forth, contributor to magazines, have been added to the scenario staff of the Dial Film Company.

VITAGRAPH

THE first of the new 200x300 ft. stages at Vitagraph studio, was given its initial use this week by William Duncan and company who filmed scenes for the third episode of "The Wizard Spy Glass" while carpenters were laying the final sections of the roof. Complete cast for this serial in support of Duncan was announced to consist of Edith Johnston as leading woman, Jack Richardson, George Stanley, Ford West and others.

A new serial was put in the making this week at Vitagraph studios which will introduce Joe Ryan as Vitagraph serial star. William Bertram is directing this serial which is titled, "The Purple Riders" and Elinor Field is playing the opposite lead. The cast is made up of Joseph Rickson, Ernest Shields, Maud Emory and Charles Dudley.

GOLDWYN

THREE original stories written especially for the screen by eminent authors are to be put in production shortly at the Goldwyn plant. Gouverneur Morris, the author of "The Water Lily" is now in San Francisco getting chinatown atmosphere for the scenes for his story. Rupert Hughes and Gertrude Atherton are both at the studio working on original stories.

Six companies are now at work at the Goldwyn plant. Bertram Grasby and N. E. Stimpson have been added to the cast of "Canavan" being directed by E. Mason Hopper, and a number of additions have been made to other producing units. The cast for "Out of the Dark" being directed by Frank Lloyd, consists of Ramsey Wallace, Irene Rich, Ora Carew, Richard Tucker, Alive Hollister, William Scott, Alex Francis, Alan Hale, James Neil and Gertrude Norman. Additional players added to the cast for "Bunty Pulls the Strings" being produced under the direction of Reginald Barker, are Georgia Woodthorpe, Catherine Bates, and Otto Hoffman. Others in this cast are Leatrice Joy, Russell Simpson, Casson Ferguson, Josephine Crowell, Edith Chapman, Cullen Landis and Rollin Rushton. A mammoth Scotch town set is being built on ground adjoining the Goldwyn studio for this production.

The seventh of the Edgar series of child comedies has been completed by Mason E. Litson.

Mabel Normand left for New York this week to replenish her wardrobe for the next production which will be started immediately upon her return.

F. P.-LASKY

THE William C. de Mille subject adapted from the Cosmo Hamilton "His Friend and His Wife" by Olga Printzlau, has been given a releasing title of "Midsummer Madness." The subject is practically completed.

Now that Roscoe Arbuckle has completed all scenes for "Brewster's Millions," his next vehicle has been selected and will be an original story and continuity by Walter Woods of the Lasky staff, which is to be known as "A Dollar A Year Man." It is probable that Joseph Henaberry, who has directed the previous releases for Arbuckle, will continue as director of the big comedian.

The two blocks occupied by the Lasky studio, in Hollywood, are separated by a street which is used only by people employed at the studio. Recently the company petitioned the City Council to close this street, and after the due process of law the petition was granted. No sooner was the mayor's signature blotted than a number of the verbose real estate agents of the film town suburb started a war to keep the street open, if for no other reason than to give that much additional board fence for tourists to peep through, and so the big film plant remains divided even though the check writer has tendered the necessary money to the city treasurer.

SPECIAL PICT.

SPECIAL PICTURES CORPORATION has leased what is known as the Fred Balshofer studio on Bronson Avenue, in Hollywood, and are centering all their producing activities there for the next few months while the new plant is being prepared. In the past the producing units have worked at the old Balboa studio at Long Beach.

The first Comiclassic made under the direction of Reggie Morris, is now nearing completion and has J. Belasco and Charlotte Merriam as principals. This comedy will consist of 1,500 feet, and on the second reel will be a 500 ft. scenic Hanschiegl color subject. Release is set for September 26th and thereafter a Comiclassic every two weeks.

Other subjects in the making for Special Pictures are a two-reel comedy featuring Chester Conklin, the first of which will be released Oct. 17th, and the Milborne Moranti comedy, the first of which will be released Sept. 19th. Moranti is to make a series of twenty-six subjects with a release each week.

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

ALMOST the complete cast has been selected by Alan Dwan for his first A. P. release, "The Forbidden Thing" which is from the story of the same title by Mary Mears, which appeared in the National magazine. Helen Jerome Eddy, James Kirkwood, Marcia Manon, King Baggott, Jack Rosaleigh, Arthur Gallasso and Gertrude Claire are principals. Most of the story is laid in New England and the film will contain a number of scenes of Cape Cod fisher folks.

Announcement is made from Sennett studio that the first Associated Producers release from this organization is practically completed and now being titled. The subject is to consist of five reels.

1st NATIONAL

THE mystery story, "The Second Latchkey" has been completed by Director Edwin Carewe at the Katherine MacDonald studios and preparations are now being made for the next production, title of which has not yet been announced. "The Second Latchkey" has to do with an American master crook who goes to England and is there reformed. Edmund Lowe plays opposite Miss MacDonald in this subject.

President Sam. E. Rork, who has been in the east is shortly to return to the Los Angeles studios. He has been preceded by B. P. Fineman, who has also been in the east.

The first announcement from the Sennett studios respecting the second First National comedy feature, was made this week when the title, "Love, Honor and Believe" together with the cast, were made known. Charles Murray, Phyllis Have and Ford Sterling will be the principals while others in the subject are Charlotte Mineau, Kalla Pasha and Eddie Gribbin.

UNIVERSAL

EDDIE LYONS and Lee Moran have selected "Fixed By George," another Edgar Franklyn story for their fourth comedy feature, and the subject is now being prepared for the screen by C. B. Hoagley. Lyons and Moran have also purchased "One Bright Idea" by the same author, which is to serve as their vehicle following the completion of "Fixed By George." Franklyn was author of "Everything But the Truth," these players' first release and also "Once a Plumber—" which has just been filmed.

"Out of the Sunset," a story by George Rix, has been purchased by Universal, and will star Eva Novak who has just completed work in "Kate Plus Ten" under the direction of Stuart Paton.

Marcel de Sano, who has served as assistant to Herbert Blache, Winchell Smith and Rex Ingraham has been placed under contract by Universal, and has arrived at Universal City from New York. Sano is a young Frenchman who served in the world war and later came to America on a diplomatic mission. His experience in film production dates back but ten months.

The Edna Ferber novel, "Fanny, Herself," has been purchased by Universal and is to be used as the starring vehicle for Carmel Myers. Continuity is now being written by Lucian Hubbard, head of the scenario department.

Norman Dawn has written a South American story titled "The Spell of the Andes" which is being prepared for the screen and will serve to star Frank Mayo. Dawn was born in Argentine and this story is founded upon romance, mystery and traditions of the South American mountains.

The coming week will be a quiet one for Universal City as practically all of the companies will be absent to secure location scenes. Tod Browning, Priscilla Dean and company will be in San Francisco to secure shots for "Outside the Law"; the "Foolish Wives" company will be at Monterey, California; Jacques Jaccard filming the "Throw-Back" will work at Balboa Beach; director R. S. Sturgeon filming "The Gilded Dream" will be at Santa Barbara; "The Queen of Diamonds" serial company will be at Catalina Island and director Val Paul with Harry Carey and company will be at Jerome, Arizona making scenes for "West Is West".

CHRISTIE

ANNOUNCEMENT is made from the Christie studio that the company is continuing the making of one reel subjects to be released as Vanity Comedies through the Educational Film Corporation exchanges. These films are to be directed by Frederick Sullivan, James Clements and Allan Watt, and probably additional directors, will be engaged. The principal players will be Dorothy Devore, Earl Rodney, Irene Dalton, Laura La Plante and others.

The new release will not interfere with recently announced Christie contracts which provide for two two-reel Christie specials each month. The special comedies are to be directed by Scott Sidney, and William Beaudine and the featured players will be Bobbie Vernon, Neal Burns, Helen Darling and Eddie Barry. All Christie and Vanity comedies will be made under the supervision of Al Christie.

Officers of the Christie company have just learned that motion picture contests have been conducted in Milwaukee in which prize winners were assured of positions with the Christie company. As a result of the fake one promoter is in jail in Milwaukee and a contest winner has journeyed to Los Angeles to take the position she was supposed to have won.

SELIG

WITH the completion of scenes for "The Whiskey Runners," a northwestern mounted police tale, Nate Watt has begun the filming of "Hunger of the Blood" with Franklyn Farnum. This is from a story by Will C. Beale and scenario by William E. Wing in charge of the Selig department.

Director Bert Bracken is filming the James Oliver Curwood dog story "Kazan." Jane Novak has the leading role in this subject.

Colonel William N. Selig is planning to make another western feature story which has been written by Will E. Wing, the hero of which will be one of the most notorious scoundrels of recent years.

HERE AND THERE

WILLIAM S. HART is far ahead of his releasing scredule and now has three completed pictures ready for release and is working on the fourth. No titles or information concerning any of the subjects have been given out except with respect to the "Cradle of Courage" which is set for release Oct. 15th. This film play was given prerelease showing at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, as a special favor to Mr. Grauman when "Civilian Clothes" had been advertised for showing and print was not received before opening date. The story by Frederick Bradbury is an after war reconstruction tale that gives Hart the role of a former safe cracker who upon his return from service "Over There" decides to go straight and becomes a member of the San Francisco police force. He is supported by Anne Little, Tom Sanche and Gertrue Claire.

More than one hundred writers for the screen of the West Coast film colony are now enrolled as members of the Guild, and plans are being made for a chapter to be organized shortly in New York. The barbacue was arranged by a committee, of which Doris Schroeder was chairman.

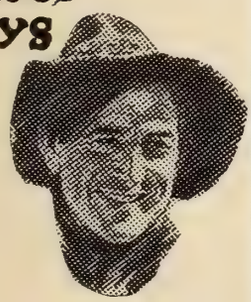
Film Notes From the French Field

By Francis J. Tuckfield, Paris Correspondent



IT has been reserved for a Frenchman to make the novel claim that a hundred ton compound locomtive is something more than a mere mass of iron and steel and complicated machinery—in other words it possesses a "soul" and can be converted into an animated and highly sensitive organism responsive to the variations of the mood of man. In his latest-play "Rose of the Rail" on which he is at present angaged, Abel Gance, the eminently successful producer of "J'accuse" has taken hold of a somewhat hackneyed and stereotyped form of scenario in an entirely novel and original way. The result, when it is achieved, will, I am convinced, prove a personal success for its author and producer as well as a notable addition to the none too extensive and varied repertoire of strictly French Films.

"Rose of the Rail" as its name would imply, is a romance of the Iron Road, but as its name does not imply, and as Monsieur Gance himself imparted to me, it is a romance not merely of the characters therein but of all that pertains to a highly organized modern Railroad System, from the ponderous locomotives and the swiftly passing trains down to the impassive and silent signals which stay them in their course. Monsieur Gance, who is an artist besides being a Frenchman, has woven the thread of romance into this scenario with the mind and imagination of a poet. For him there is unheard-of fascination in the Iron Road.

Needless to say that there is a strong love element in which the display of passion is remarkable. The scenario calls for four principal roles. The heroine is the well known English actress, Ivy Close, who will be remembered as the winner of the beauty contest in England some years ago. Severin Mars, the noted French actor who proved such a powerful figure as the aggrieved husband in the same producer's "J'accuse," plays a prominent part as the engine driver who is struck blind. One of the scenes shows a collision at night as a result of which a signalman loses his reason and rushes out of his cabin to rave on the line. "Rose of the Rail" is now being completed on the glaciers of Mont Blanc. Its first two parts were enacted on a stretch of line of the P.L.M. Railroad in the vicinity of Nice. While the total length of the photoplay itself when completed will not run into more than ten thousand feet of film, M. Gance assured me that he fully expects to have used up more than three hundred thousand feet by the end of October when "Rose of the Rail" should be terminated.

I learn that after the great success achieved by "J'accuse" in England recently, the French producer contemplates showing his splendid work in America this Fall. Gance himself, who, his critics say, has the "Griffith touch," is full of the lure of his art.

The French are the first to concede that they do not possess in the same degree as the Americans or even the Italians, what they term the "sense" of the Cinema. But when it comes to the question of depicting by a foreigner or under foreign influences and surroundings, their national traits and characteristics, they not illogically hesitate sometimes to accept the foreign version offhand. I was told recently by an individual well known in French Film circles, that in spite of the great success achieved by Tristan Bernard's delightful comedy "Le Danseur Inconnu" there was something lacking in the Film. Although produced by a Frenchman, M. Archmbault, and supervised by another Frenchman, M. Albert Capellani, it was "made" in California and might have been made in Timbuctoo for all the atmosphere of Paris that it contained. Now Tristan Bernard is a Parisian of the Parisians and without the savour of his typically Parisian humor, his characters remain without flavor. Be this as it may, it will serve as a prelude to the reporting of an interesting and amusing controversy which is being waged in the Paris press these days, as to whether or not Douglas Fairbanks is or is not a sufficiently qualified and equipped figure to interpret that incarnation of all that is typically and characteristically French, the role of D'Artagnan in the "The Three Musketeers."

When Douglas Fairbanks was in Paris recently he expressed to me his unbounded enthusiasm and delight at the prospect of returning to France in the Fall for the role of Dumas' dashing hero. The French however, in spite of Douglas' popularity, which is as much a cult as is the vogue of Charlie Chaplin, have expressed doubts as to his suitability to interpret the chivalrous and adventurous Gascon who is regarded almost as a national hero of France. The American actor, according to some, despite his prowess on the film, is lacking in finesse, in distinction, in plasticity and in "race" as they term it. But let not Douglas despair! There are not wanting those who readily attribute to him all the requirements for the adventurous hero and who have faith in his versatility and marvellous adaptability. As to the contention of some that the role can only be adequately filled by a Frenchman, here is what one eminent critic has to say. "If an American cannot because he is an American, grasp the character of D'Artagnan, the French have no right, because they are French, to attempt the portrayal of foreign characters. We might as well argue that the role of Hamlet should be played by a Dane or that of Shylock by a Jew." The controversy is still being waged.

There is no denying the fillip that has been given to the art of scenario writing by the action of the French Minister of Agriculture's scheme in starting a competition for the best practical scenario that will help to revive the flagging interest in the agricultural needs of the country. I understand from an authoritative source that the late President Poincaire has agreed to the suggestion made to him to create a cinematographic subject intended to depict for the world the great pity of the land in France, devastated, pillaged and laid waste during the war, and the great efforts that are being made to restore it to its former flourishing condition. The project is a meritorious one and worthy of a great mind. I understand that several of the most prominent French stars have been approached on the matter also.

Among the forthcoming productions in France may be noted the following:

Le Silence—a dramatic comedy in two parts by Louis Delluc who is also the producer.

La Bombe—a comedy in three acts, a Pathe production.

The A.B.C. of Love, also a Pathe work featuring May Murray.

The Holocaust—a poignant production, the work of Maurice de Marsan and by the same writer, The Right to Kill (Le Droit de Tuer) featuring Christiane Vernon.

Front entrance, marquee and sign of Beverly theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

A Commodious Lobby is One of the Beverly Features

The Beverly, a Single Floor House with 1,600 Seats

This Theatre Is the First of a Circuit to Be Built by the Promoters

REALIZING the possibilities of a high class motion picture theatre in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn, Mr. Theodore Schneider and Mr. J. J. Framer formed the Beverly Amusement Corporation and the Beverly theatre at Church and Gravesend avenues, pictured in the accompanying photographs is the result of their efforts.

This theatre, with a capacity of sixteen hundred seats arranged in stadium style, is fireproof throughout of brick, steel and concrete construction. The contractor for this work was M. Shapiro & Son, who make a specialty of the single floor stadium style of theatre.

The theatre front as shown by the cover page is of imitation granite with terra cotta trim, the windows above the marquise open directly into the projection room and furnish an abundance of light and ventilation.

Entering the theatre building one is confronted with a spacious vestibule finished in solid mahogany, leading into a large and roomy lobby. The lobby is decorated in sienna marble, with caen stone walls and mirrored doors opening into the theatre foyer. Current and coming attractions are tastefully arranged in frames conforming with the general color scheme and set off by two large oil paintings of prominent stars.

The theatre foyer, which is 40 by 80 feet, is fitted with large and comfortable lounging chairs, and a large open fireplace adds to the attractiveness of the decorations. Right off the foyer are completely fitted ladies and gentlemen's retiring rooms.

Entrance to the theatre proper is gained by means of two dormitories leading to the main floor, with stairways at either side entering the stadium. Exit from the theatre is made by doors on both sides of the main floor so that the incoming and outgoing crowds do not hamper one another in the foyer and lobby. The auditorium is 145 feet long and 85 feet in width, without a pillar or post to interfere with the vision of the stage and screen.

The ceiling is hung from a steel roof truss, and in the center contains a forty foot dome with a high relief ornamentation. The ventilation of the theatre is produced by two 48-inch exhaust fans placed above the ceiling space and taking air through perforations in the ceiling dome. The heating of the theatre is accomplished by means of indirect radiation from low pressure radiators placed along the side walls. The theatre is lighted by semi-indirect fixtures and ornamental side wall brackets.

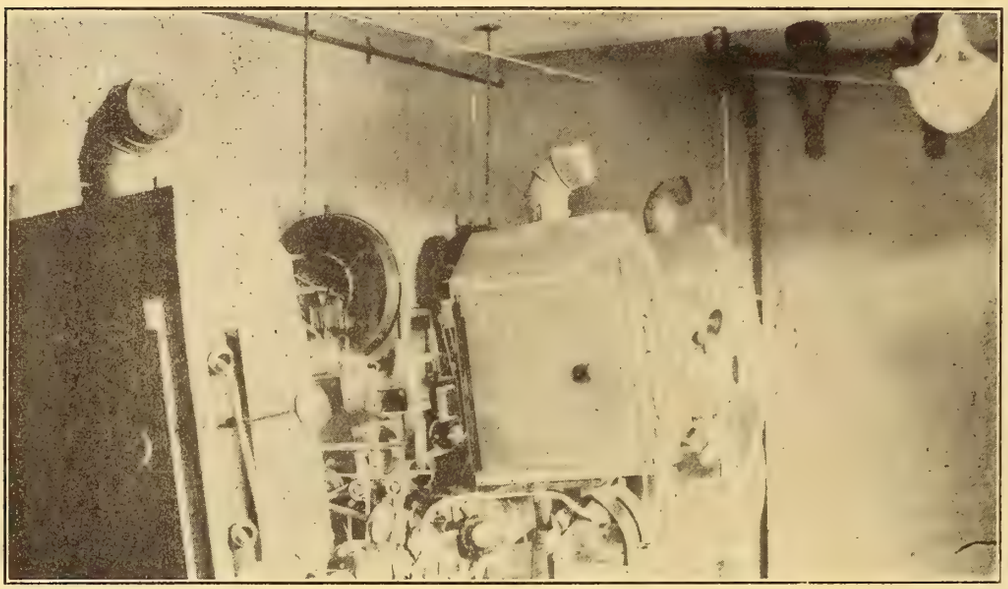
The ceiling proper is worked out in decorative paneling, the color scheme being in cream and gold. The furniture and fitting are in silver gray ash and blue leather.

A Seeburg-Smith organ costing $30,000 is presided over by Prof. George Zorn, who furnishes the musical settings for the photoplays. The organ comprises a full string and military orchestra, including church chimes and a set of trimolant xylophones, with a vox humano.

The manager of the theatre is Thomas F. Costello, who has introduced several novel features. As the old saying goes, "Variety is the spice of life," so in conjunction with the picture program there has been introduced, Song Publishers Night, Amateur Singing contests, Instrumental contests, and Dancing contests.

Since the opening several months ago the house has been well filled every performance, which proves that the theatre with the program chosen by Manager Costello produce a very pleasing effect on the patrons.

The projection room, which is of ample size and equipped with every modern convenience is presided over by Herbert Allen, a member of the Local 306 I. A. T. S. E. and a member of the old school that never tires of keeping well informed of every new device that will help put perfect results on the screen. Herbert Schwartz, his assistant, is also an old timer who is always on the alert, so that as a result the projection at the Beverly is almost beyond comparison.



Empire Theatre to Be Remodelled

The Empire theatre of Glens Falls has been taken over by the Stacy Amusement Company, which controls the Majestic theatre of this city. About $40,000 will be spent in changing and improving the house, after which it will be opened with a combination program of feature pictures and vaudeville.

located in Brooklyn, can be considered a perfect type of the community house. From the projection room to the lobby entrance nothing has been omitted that would help make the theatre attractive to its clientele. Warm tones used in the decorative scheme, aided by a variable lighting system and a well laid-out auditorium floor, give the interior an atmosphere many managers and owners have strived to achieve.

Thousands of Dollars Will Be Spent to Remodel and Re-equip Buffalo Theatre

Old Star Will Be Completely Altered and Modernized and Renamed the Criterion

THE Shea Amusement Company has acquired control of the Star theatre, which was recently purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. With this acquisition the Shea interests now control seven theatres in Buffalo and it is understood that negotiations are about to be closed with several other houses.

About $100,000 will be spent in modernizing the Star, which will be known as Shea's Criterion. The house will show super-specials exclusively, depending on the productions of this class released by the Famous Players-Lasky company for three entire bookings. This deal will in no way affect the policy of Shea's Hippodrome, which will be operated as heretofore on an independent basis.

Shea's Criterion will be under the direction of Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome and other motion picture theatres controlled by the Shea interests. The alteration of the Criterion calls for the addition of 280 seats, rebuilding of the stage, remodeling of the front, installation of new furniture throughout the house and redecorating from front to back.

The lobby will be moved to the square facing Genesee street and will be approached by a large marquee, patterned after the Criterion theatre in New York. The electrical display will be most elaborate, the front of the house being illuminated with about 10,000 bulbs. New carpets will be placed throughout the theatre and the lighting of the interior will be changed from direct to indirect.

The boxes will be razed and in their place ornamental arches will be placed decorated with majestic draperies. The decoration motif will call for brocaded panels throughout the theatre. A permanent stage setting has been designed which will permit the introduction of several scenic novelties such as are unveiled from time to time in Shea's Hippodrome.

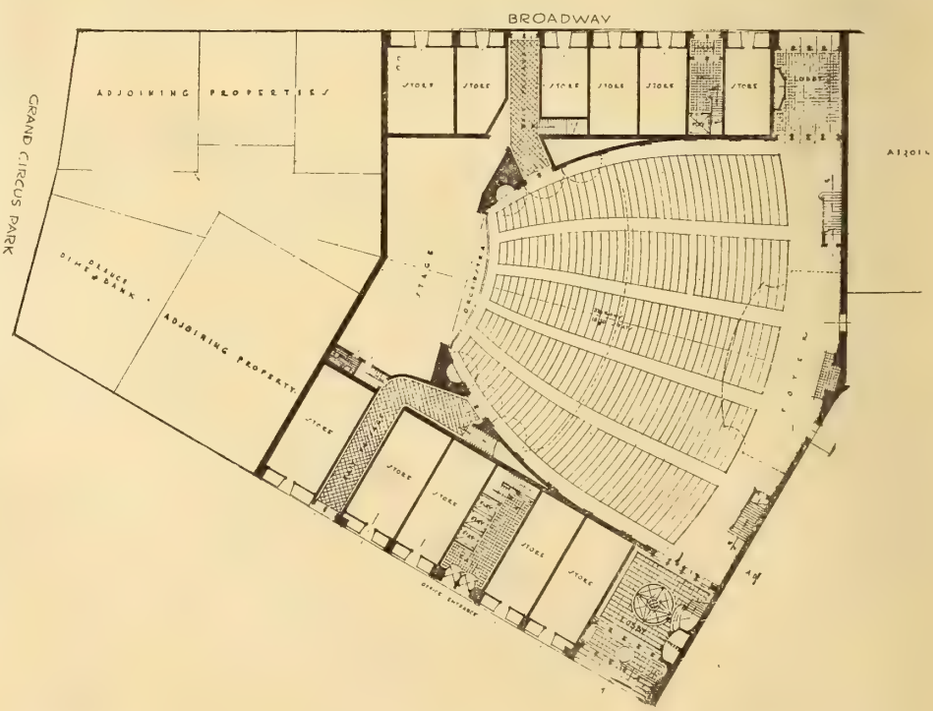
The Criterion will have a large orchestra and a Hope Jones Unit organ, manufactured by the Wurlitzer company. Simplex projection machines will be used and the booth will be equipped with a Robins speed indicator and every other innovation recently introduced into the projection world.

Each production will be run for an extended period, being held as long as the box office receipts hold up. New rest rooms for ladies and gentlemen will be installed. The entire theatre will be rewired with the three-color unit system which will permit the house to be flooded with vari-colored lights. Several other novelties will be announced when the house is opened September 1. The prices will be 50 cents for orchestra and 25 cents for balcony at night, and 25 and 35 cents will be the matinee scale. The opening attraction will be "Humoresque."

The remodeling work is being done under the direction of the Russell B. Smith company of New York.

Last week MOTION PICTURE NEWS announced the acquisition of the new Hertel avenue theatre by the Shea interests. The big Metropolitan is being built on Main street, near the present Hippodrome, and according to Harold B. Franklin it will be the climax of motion picture construction.

The Star, which has just been acquired, is one of Buffalo's historic houses. During the more than a quarter-century of its existence most all of the well-known stars of the stage have appeared on its boards. Dr. Peter C. Cornell, who is now managing the Majestic, was at the head of the theatre for almost twenty-five years. The Jesse Bonstelle stock company occupied the house for several summer seasons. Last fall some Rochester and Buffalo men took over the house and operated it for a time with a popular vaudeville and picture policy which, however, was not a howling success. During this time, John Fennyvessy, "Bill" West and Al. Sherry managed the house in succession. It eventually closed and a few weeks ago the Famous Players-Lasky company purchased the building.



A large force of men are at work remodeling the theatre, which is being completely changed, and it is doubtful whether many Buffalonians will recognize their old theatre when it bursts forth in all its glory on September 1. Mr. Franklin is beginning to place a series of attractive ads this week in the local papers, announcing the policy of the house.

One of the big jobs in the remodeling process will be the sand blasting of the yellow paint from the building. The marquee has been removed and all the old signs are now down. The new stage and seats are being installed.

It will be interesting to watch the future of the Star, when under its live-wire management it opens for the entertainment of Buffalo theatregoers with special film attractions.

Luna Enlarged to 1500 Seats

THE Luna theatre, Lafayette, Indiana, Herbert H. Johnson, manager, which is the local home of pictures distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., reopened the week of July 26th after having been closed for remodeling and redecorating. The Luna, which seats fifteen hundred people, is now one of the most attractive playhouses in Lafayette. The entire interior has been redecorated at a cost of $10,000, the walls being adorned with massive panels of mural paintings, and the exterior has been improved by the addition of a huge Flexume illuminating display sign, the largest of its kind in the city.

One of the special features of the Luna theatre is a massive pipe organ, recently installed, but not infrequently, for extraordinary productions, the management engages a special symphony orchestra and vocalist. The record-breaking audiences which appear at this theatre give evidence of its attractive powers.

The Luna Amusement Company, which operates the Luna theatre, has just broken ground for a new quarter of a million dollar playhouse which, when completed, will be Lafayette's only legitimate theatre. The city has not had a home for the spoken drama since the Dryfus theatre was destroyed by fire eight years ago and the amusement seeking public is eagerly anticipating the opening of the new house. It will be known as the Mars theatre and during the theatrical season of the fall, winter and spring it will house some of the biggest productions on the road, being the logical stopping point between Chicago and Indianapolis. During the summer months super-photoplays will be presented there. It is expected to complete the Mars theatre by January 1, 1920.

A Concentrated Arc Type Automatic Lamp for Projection

In the Sperry concentrated flame Automatic Projector Lamp we have a new source of light giving the desired intensity and color of illumination with the expenditure of less energy. It is not a pure carbon arc, like those now generally used, but is a special flaming arc of similar nature to that which revolutionized the big army and navy searchlights about four years ago.

It is called a concentrated flame type of arc because of the fact that a part of the flame, usually distributed, is here concentrated in a small globule within the positive crater and therefore the intrinsic brilliancy of the crater is greater than it is possible to obtain with the pure carbon arc at any current. The color of the light is that of sunlight, and is more pleasing to the eye than that from the old arc.

Tests of our new lamp have been made at a number of the best theatres with most wonderful results. At the Strand theatre in New York where the screen is 18 x 15 feet and the throw 160 feet we found that the illumination on the screen was 10 foot candles when using our lamp as against 2.2 ft. candles with the regular lamp. In the Strand theatre in Brooklyn we measured 7.5 foot candles on the screen when using our lamp as against 2.1 foot candles with theirs. There the throw was 200 feet and the size of the curtain 21 x 18 feet. In both the above tests the value of the current was the same in the Sperry arc as in the standard carbon arc used for comparison. The optical systems used were identical on the machines compared. When "flooding" the curtain with light from our lamp and then substituting it by the light from one of the standard projector lamps the difference, as recorded by the unaided eye, can best be described by saying that the former appears like bright silver while the latter looks like old gold.

One of the great advantages of our new lamp is its automatic features. In most of the theatres up to the present time we find the old methods of hand feed and manipulation of the carbons. These methods are all very unsatisfactory as it is almost impossible to obtain uniform result. The operator cannot, or will not, feed the carbons just at the right time or so frequently as to avoid altogether variations in the arc length. If the arc length varies, the rheostat setting remaining the same, the current and arc volts will necessarily vary and this causes periodic changes in the screen illumination. Another difficulty that the operator has to contend with is the proper locating of the crater on the end of the carbon so it may face the condensers as much as possible. This is accomplished by frequently changing the "line-up" of the carbons with relation to each other as the carbon gradually burns away unevenly. It is evident that a comparatively slight change of position of the positive crater on the end of the carbon could easily change the illumination on the screen by 200%. Within the last few years a number of attempts have been made to devise semi-automatic accessories for feeding the carbons together and compensate for consumption. In many cases these have been a great help to the operator, but they do not relieve the operator of his most difficult task; that is, to keep the crater properly located.

Lamp in operating position

In the Sperry lamp the positive carbon is horizontal and in the axis of the condenser lenses, and the crater therefore faces exactly toward same and the positive carbon is rotated automatically which gives an extremely even and uniform crater with no possibility of side-burning. A very simple and positive focusing device automatically maintains the proper distance between the crater and the condenser lens within 1/64 of an inch. In other words the positive carbon is automatically fed forward in steps of 1/64 inch as it burns away.

The negative carbon is at a steep angle with the positive so that it casts no shadow on the condensers. It is fed automatically backward or forward and its control is entirely independent of that of the positive. Its backward or forward motion is governed by an electro-magnet and a set of ratchet wheels and pawls, which in turn depend on the value of the arc current for their action. The electro-magnet is in series with the arc. With no current flowing across the arc the regulating magnet is not energized but the "feed forward" pawl is held in engagement with its ratchet wheel by means of a spring. This spring is adjustable and so connected that it opposes the pull of the magnet when this is energized. As we close the switch to start the lamp full line voltage is impressed across the terminals of the little feeding motor which drives the negative feed and positive rotating pawls. The negative carbon quickly moves forward until it touches the tip of the positive carbon. A heavy current now flows through the regulating magnet which immediately throws the feed forward pawl out of engagement and the "feed backward" pawl into engagement. The negative carbon feeds back until a point is reached where the resistance of the arc reduces the current and the pull of the magnet till it just balances the regulator spring. A slight increase of the current will cause the negative carbon to feed back and again reduce the pull of the magnet till a state of balance is reached. As the carbon burns away the value of the current drops, the pull of the magnet is overcome by the spring, and the feed forward pawl engages, and the arc current is thus held within 2% of the desired figure throughout the run.

The Sperry Automatic Projector lamp is the result of an endeavor to reach the ultimate in motion picture projection. It is not an experiment but simply the adaptation of the well tried and dependable high intensity searchlight lamp, with to make it suited for this new branch in the illuminating field.

Gentlemen:

You will no doubt be interested in knowing that in the first shipment of Power's Machines, which will be a part of our order for fifty (50) of these equipments, will be included the projectors for our new Tivoli Theatre.

From the results we have obtained from the Power's Projectors, we feel sure that the projection in the Tivoli will be thoroughly up to the high standard we have set for this theatre in every line.

It has always been the policy of this Company to give special attention to projection in all of our theatres, and we take pleasure in advising you that the Power's Machines have given such satisfactory results that we have decided to standardize on this equipment.

When our order for the fifty Machines is filled, and these equipments are installed, our entire chain of theatres will be equipped—100% Power's.

In taking this step, we have of course, had under consideration, practically every other type of professional projector, as we have used at least three other makes during the past few years.

Will you kindly see that prompt attention is given our order for the first shipment, as we are very anxious to have these machines on hand in the near future, especially the equipment for the Tivoli?

Relying upon your prompt attention to shipment referred to, we are,

Very truly yours,

Practical Electricity—XXV
Study Lessons for the Projectionist

The Direct Current Motor

AN electric motor is exactly the reverse of a dynamo, in that it is a machine for transforming electrical energy into mechanical energy by performing some kind of work. The electrical energy produced by the generator is obtained from energy set up by a prime mover, such as a steam engine, gas engine, or water wheel.

Machines which are constructed to work as generators will also operate as motors when connected to an electric circuit. Generators and motors have practically the same properties of design, the difference being chiefly in the mechanical adaptations depending on the service for which they are to be used.

The principle of an electric motor depends on the fact that a loop of wire carrying current when placed in a magnetic field will be acted upon by a force tending to revolve it. The amount of force is dependant on the amount of current flowing.

In a similar way in which the right hand rule is used to express a relation between the direction of current, the direction of the magnetic field and the direction of rotation for a generator, so the left hand rule is used to express the same relations for a motor. This rule is as follows: If the thumb, fore, and middle finger of the left hand are placed at right angles to each other, then the fore finger placed in the direction of the magnetic field, and the middle finger in the direction of current flow, the thumb will point in the direction of motion. If it is desired to change the direction of rotation of the conductor, and consequently the direction of the armature, this may be accomplished by changing either the direction of current flow in the armature, or the direction of the magnetic field. If the direction of both the current flow in the armature, and the magnetic field, are changed then the direction of rotation will be the same. Thus in order to change the direction of a direct current motor it is necessary to reverse either the field terminal or the armature terminals.

The construction of a direct current motor is identical with that of a generator, the essential parts being a magnetic field and an armature. Connection to the armature winding is accomplished by means of a commutator so that a reversal takes place in the armature winding at the proper time such that the forces tending to produce motion act in continuous rotation.

D. C. motors are divided in classes, similar to the classes of generators, the difference being distinguished by the method in which the fields are excited. These classes are namely: Shunt, series, and compound. The shunt motor may be operated by means of a permanent field, or one set up by a separate source of current, or it may be excited directly from the line.

Although generators and motors are similar in general construction and may be interchanged, when the current flow is properly cared for, yet there are certain differences in the connections and auxiliary apparatus which must be used when a generator is used as a motor. A machine when operated as a generator is brought up to speed and the terminal voltage adjusted before being connected to the load circuit. However, when starting a motor, it is impossible to connect it directly to the line without proper precaution to regulate the flow of current, as the current when connected direct would be so great as to injure the windings. Accordingly it is necessary to connect a variable resistance, commonly known as a starting box, in series with the armature circuit in order to cut down the current flow until the motor is brought up to speed.

Speed control and direction of rotation of the various types of motors obtained as follows:

Shunt motor: When starting a shunt motor the field circuit is connected directly across the line so that full field excitation is obtained. This field winding consists of a large number of turns of small wire which has a resistance sufficiently large to keep the current flow at normal value. The added resistance in the armature circuit is then slowly cut out until the motor is brought up to speed. Additional speed control is then obtained by adding resistance to the field circuit and thus weakening the magnetic field. Care should be taken that a shunt motor is not started with a weak field as this would cause an excess armature current which would result in overheating and blowing of the fine fuses.

The current in a shunt field is independant of the armature current so long as the line voltage remains contact and is not effected by an increase current flow in the armature. The direction of a shunt motor may be changed by reversing the direction of current in either the field or armature circuit, the most common practise is, however, to reverse the armature, as this will not necessitate the building up of the field in the other polarity.

Series motor: The field of the series motor consists of a few turns of heavy wire, the total current flowing in the armature also going thru the fields. The field current thus increases with the load and speed regulation is maintained by inserting a resistance in the circuit which controls a gradual increase of current in starting. Because of the characteristic of a series motor to run away at no load, it is necessary that this type of motor be continually under load. The speed of the series motor is dependant upon the load, an increase of load tending to reduce the speed, it also has a large torque and is therefore used where such conditions are required. This motor is connected direct to the load and not by means of belts, as a release from load caused by a belt slipping off would allow the motor to attain a dangerous speed. This type of motor is specially adapted to electric railway traction work and blowers, where a load is always applied. The direction of rotation is changed by reversing the direction of current flow in the armature circuit.

Compound motor: The field of this type of motor is made up of a combination of a shunt and series winding. This form of winding is used where a constant speed is required, since an increase in load will cause a change in the field excitation by means of the series field, while a constant excitation is maintained by the shunt field circuit. Variable speed is obtained by changing the resistance of the shunt field circuit and a reversal of direction of rotation is made by reversing the armature leads.

A Plea for More Active Co-operation Between Exchange, Theatre and Projectionist

What One Observing and Broad Minded Projectionist Has to Say on This Important Subject

Misframes and breaks are to be expected occasionally, but remember that every break, misframe and short title that appears on the screen is blamed on the projectionist and he, not you, is the one that gets the knocks from the audience. In closing let me remind you of the film after it has been used a few times. Much of this is done while the film is on the rewind and is caused by the person who is rewinding the film when they hold the reel on the dummy end of the rewind and slide the film on the clank end. Flm gathers dust and dirt readily and when the film is allowed to slide one layer over another it grinds this dust and dirt into the soft emulsion, scratching it and giving you the rain effect on the screen. Instruct your inspectors as to this and also instruct your shipping department to keep your film cases CLEAN. Your film should be renovated at your exchange regularly and that will go a long way toward helping your service to the exhibitor. First class cement, patching blocks and scraped film when making a patch will help also.

Now Mr. Exchange Manager, after reading the above, check things over and see how many faults you are allowing to go on in your exchange and if you can be truthful with yourself and say that you are not guilty, then you are doing your bit in keeping film service up to the standard that it should be kept.

The Projectionist

(Sometimes Called "Operator")

In the following article, Mr. Projectionist, I want to mention to you a few of the causes of poor film service and I think you are the guilty party for the same. Some of you, I hope, are NOT GUILTY, but I do know that there are plenty that ARE GUILTY and it is to them that the following applies.

Let us take up the question of the damage done to film and begin with the film as you receive it from the exchange. For your own protection, especially you who receive service from outside your own city, I would recommend that you inspect the service CAREFULLY before you ever use it and cut out all bad patches, misframes and punch marks and turn them over to your manager at once. I do not believe in the projectionist being an inspector for any film exchange but I do believe in his doing his work right, so that when a claim is made by some exchange that their film is damaged you will be in a position to show the exchange that you are on the job at all times and that the damage was done before you used the service.

I know from my seven years experience on the road as inspector for exchanges, that more than one projectionist has been accused of damaging film simply because they failed to report the condition of the film before using it. If you are working for a manager that knows anything about the theatre business he will take up the matter of bad service with the exchange at once. If the service does not improve he will change service in short order, no matter how good the subjects are. Film exchanges as a general rule are glad to have reports and try to improve their service. If poor inspection is not reported to them they have no way of finding it out. Any REAL MANAGER of a film exchange WELCOMES complaints where a complaint is justified. They do not WELCOME the chronic kicker. A bad patch, misframe or a break is to be expected once in a while, so do not be a chronic kicker and make a howl every time something happens UNLESS it happens regularly and if that is the case then KICK and KEEP ON KICKING until your manager takes up the trouble with the exchange and has it remedied or else changes service, and I know whereof I speak when I say that he will get results if you kick hard enough.

You Mr. Projectionist are the cause of film damage in more ways than one. Regardless of the make of machine that you are in charge of you must watch the idlers and BE SURE that they are set RIGHT. Set them (both upper and lower) so that the space between the idler and sprocket is the thickness of two pieces of film. Examine these idlers often. I will not mention any names, but there is one make of machine that is in general use today that is notorious among film exchanges for the crimping of film. I do not blame the machine in a way as the trouble is caused by the idlers work done due to vibration of the machine. It looks to me that the manufacturers of the machine would either remedy the fault or at least attach a card to each new machine, warning the projectionist to watch for this defect. Many pro-jectionists have allowed this machine to damage film through ignorance, that is he had had no previous experience on the machine and the damage was done before he discovered the cause.

UNITED MIRROROID

Regardless of the maker of machine, watch the tension. Much film is being damaged every day by projectionists not knowing how to apply tension to the film. Set your tension springs so that when a crank is revolving at ninety the picture will be steady on the screen. When a crank is revolving over ninety the picture should climb a little on screen and when set in this manner the tension will be about right.

Examine your magazine valve rollers. They should be kept clean at all times and should revolve freely when film is passing between them. Dust and dirt from the film will collect on the rollers of the magazine valves and if not removed will scratch the film. Get in the habit of running a rag between the rollers just before you thread up each time and wipe out the top magazine at the same time. Examine your magazine valve rollers and if they are sticking (generally caused by dirt) and are worn flat on one side or side of the valves are cut through, get new valves at once, for if you have not damaged the film already with them you will damage it sooner or later. Be sure that the valves on your top magazine line up true with the top sprocket, then film is put on a strain, and the sides of the magazine valve will be out. Some "OPERATORS" (cannot be called "projectionists") have a habit of setting the magazine on the door side a little high so that the film will not jump out when he opens the magazine door. This causes a strain on the film and wears out the magazine valve. I do not suppose that I will live to see the day, but I hope that I do, when magazine doors will have some kind of an attachment that will break an "operator's" arm if he opens the door while the machine is in motion. Ninety per cent of the fires can be laid to defective magazine valves and open magazine doors.

Another thing, have your take-up tension adjusted so that there will be just enough tension on to take up to carry the reel when full. Use the large hub reels if possible. The exchange does not furnish the large hub reel, but it will save the film to a great extent. The use of the large hub is entirely up to you and the manager of the show. The exchange owns the film and the damage done is done to their property and if they do not protect it, or at least make an effort to protect it, then they have no right to expect you to do it for them. Another one, watch out for oil on your machine. Remember that ONE drop of oil to each oil hole at a time is enough. Do not give your machine an oil bath on Monday and then neglect it the rest of the week. One drop of oil to every six reels will keep your machine in good condition and any more than that is waste. Keep your machine CLEAN. Have plenty of clean cloths in your projection room and USE them. Another one, and I am going to step on lots of toes when I say this,—Do not attempt to repair your machine UNLESS you are an experienced repair man.

This is the one place in the projectionist profession, and do not let it slip your mind that it is a PROFESSION, that is a bone of contention between the projectionist and the manager of the theatre—and that is repairing of machines. The projectionist has it in his mind that he will display ignorance or lack of knowledge if he admits to the manager that he is not capable of doing all repair work. If he only knew it, he and the manager, as well as the projection machine, would be a thousand times better off if he would have the manager send the machine to some one who was reliable and had the equipment to do the work right. I believe that every man in charge of a projection machine should be able to make emergency repairs on the machine, BUT if he will watch his machines and take the proper care of them emergency cases will be few and far between.

A Real Automatic Arc Control

The Peerless Automatic Arc Control is made for use on all projectors having direct current at the arc. The device is so sensitive that less then one sixty-fourth of an inch increase in gap will start the motor and bring the carbon back to the proper position. Operation is so slow and delicate that the carbon movement is not noticeable to the eye.

Practically frees the operator from giving any attention to the arc, and enables him to attend to other duties. Durably made of best materials. Can be adjusted to maintain any desired arc gap.

Operating Advantages of GE Compensares

1. Steady strong arc.
2. Easily operates two arcs at the same time for change-over.
3. Quiet arc strike and quick settle-down.
4. Self regulating arc voltage.
5. Current stays at set value.
6. Current easily raised and lowered.
7. Cannot be damaged by short circuit.
8. Fading made easy.
9. Not affected by changes in current conditions.
10. Quiet in operation.

GE Compensarcs Furnish Dependable Light

The GE Compensarc automatically protects itself from burnout or the blowing of fuses where the operator changes the projection from one lamp to the other. In fact, there will be no burnout or blowing of fuses even if the generator be short circuited by leaving the projection carbons indefinitely together.

Fading, also, is made easy by the GE Compensarc because the capacity of the set is sufficient to carry the two projection areas in series during the change over period. The arc on the second machine can thus be started and adjusted before the end of the first reel. One reel fades into the next without interruption or flicker.

Compensarcs are safe, easy to operate, efficient, economical and reliable—GE offices or distributors everywhere for prompt deliveries and service

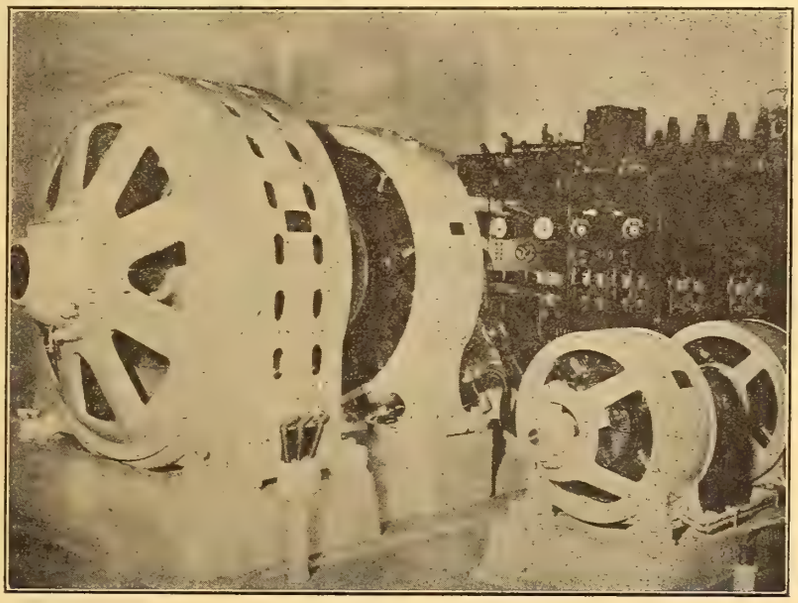
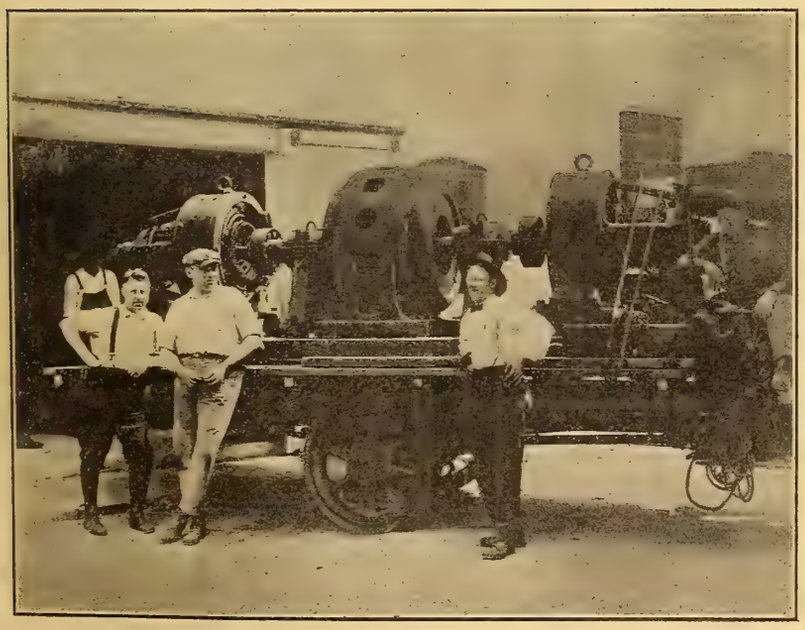
Selection of Proper Power Equipment for the Modern Studio



With Explanations of the Various Systems Now in Use

Two Two-Wire Machines Connected Permanently in Series (Continued)



Realizing that the question of unbalanced load also affects the voltage regulation and that it is absolutely essential to the studios to secure good voltage regulation regardless of what their unbalance would be, after consulting with electricians of several of the larger studios in the West ,the use of a three-unit set was recommended as a solution of this problem. That this recommendation has worked out to good advantage is without question. The first three-unit set tried out was installed at the Robert Brunton Studios in Los Angeles, California, and this set has now been in operation for more than two years and has given perfect satisfaction. Since then, additions have been made until their capacity is now 460 KW., all in three-unit sets, on which they have standardized.

IV. CONCLUSIONS

Therefore, after a careful consideration of the many features that have been brought out, the conclusion is reached that the two types of apparatus best suited for converting alternating-current supply for direct current for studio illumination, are the rotary converter and the three-unt motor-generator sets for three-wire systems. Thetwo-unit two-wire motor-generator sets might be best suited for small installations but it would certainly be third choice on larger installations.

500 K.W. two unit motor generator set with balancer, Metro studios, Los Angeles

150 K.W. three unit set, Clune's studios, Los Angeles

Furthermore, we would especially call your attention to the fact that while the selection of proper equipment for supplying direct-current to the studio is of great importance, it is by no means the only problem which will have to be sold. The selection of proper switchboard for controlling and paralleling the generators and providing for the proper selection and protection of stage feeder circuits must be given careful consideration. Power transformers, where used, must be of ample capacity and of the most suitable voltages. Proper protective devices must be installed to insure continuity of service and protection to human life.

Care should be used in placing apparatus in the powerhouse of the studio so as to keep to a minimum the amount of floor space required and yet make all parts easily accessible for times of unforeseen emergency.

In laying out a new studio it would be well to make provisions for future extension. Failure to do this has already proven somewhat expensive to some of our large studios.

There are many other factors which should wisely be considered in making a complete electrical layout for the studio but we have discussed with you what we consider to be the most important and which must be settled before other details can be decided upon.

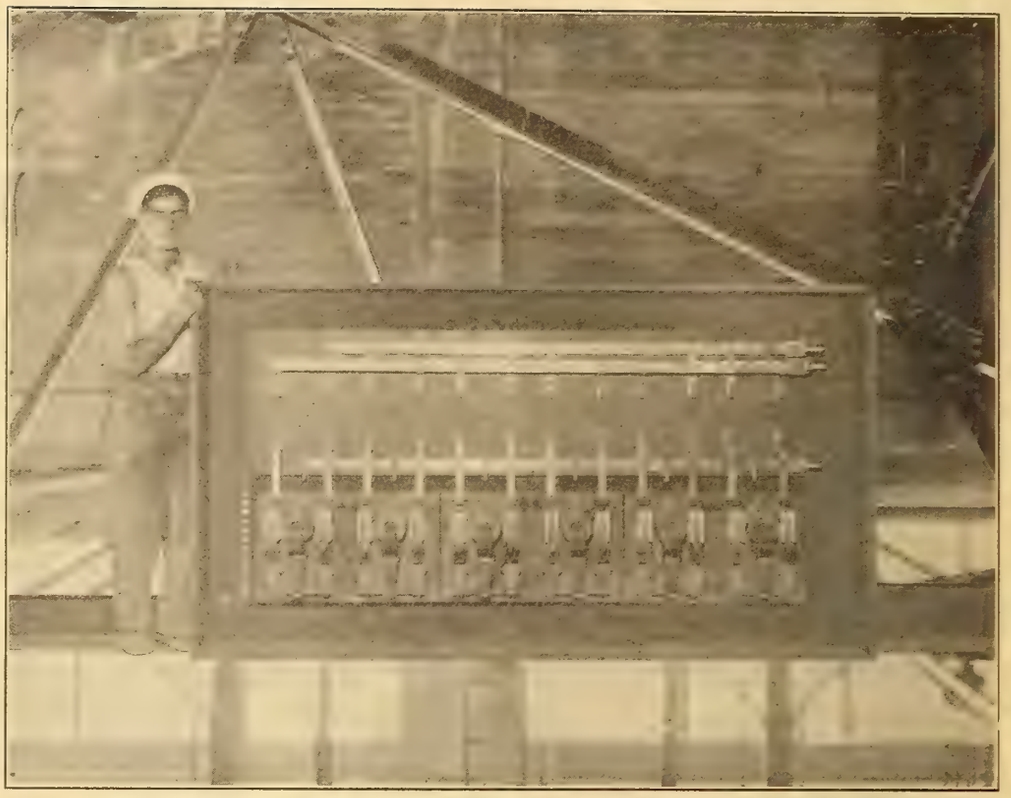
New Exchange Building for Chicago

Harry Weiss, president of Superior Screen Service, Inc., announces that he has purchased the property at 21-23-25 East Seventh street, which is in the heart of Chicago's new film exchange district, together with a one-story building now occupying the ground. Contractors already are at work reconstructing the building, which is planned to have ready for occupancy October 1st, which means it will be the third exchange building to be completed in the district.

The building will house Superior Screen Service, the National Exchanges, Inc., Harry Weiss, Inc., and a new concern controlled by Harry Weiss, now in the course of organization, which will be known as A—W—Enterprises. The first three firms mentioned will rent films and the purposes for which the A—W—Enterprises is organized will be announced as soon as a charter is received.

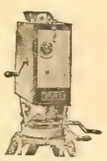


All the firms are Illinois corporations and are controlled by Mr. Weiss, who asserts that there is no stock for sale and no money sought.

The new building will be the future home of the business started by Mr. Weiss in April with two employees and five hundred feet of space, and will contain ten hundred feet of space and house nearly one hundred employees.

Rialto Opens at Hamilton, Ohio

After delays due to material shortage and labor scarcity which delayed the completion of the new Rialto theatre in Hamilton, Ohio, for more than six months, it has been announced that the new structure will be opened to the public on September 1. The new theatre is owned by Messrs. Broomhal and Schwalm who are the proprietors of the Jefferson and Grand theatres, also in Hamilton. The old St. Charles hotel at Front and High streets, was razed to make way for the construction of the Rialto.



Charles Ray in "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway" will be the opening attraction as the result of a rather unusual selective system. From the time the new theatre was projected all star productions at both the Jefferson and Grand were checked for popularity as judged by the attendance at all performances. It was found that this comedian is the most popular of all the stars which have been shown in the past fifteen months at the other two theatres owned by the proprietors of the Rialto and accordingly a production by him was selected for the premiere of the new theatre which is larger than either of the other two and up-to-date.

Music for Your Theatre

No. 14

"Ways of Announcing Your Music Venture"

By Charles D. Isaacson

(Author, " Face to Face with Great Musicians ")

THIS is the third installment of my discussion on this phase of your musical development—ways and means of acquainting the larger public with the importance of what you are doing.

In the issue two weeks ago, I gave the principles and appeals which should underlie the publicity and advertising of your Music Department. Last week, I turned into more explicit channels of exploitation. To give you a notion of what this included (in the event of your having missed reading it), let me recapitulate the argument. I said that there are publics devoted to violin, 'cello, singing, orchestra, etc., and that it behooves the advertising and press men to direct the appeals to these publics which will aid in arousing curiosity, interest and action. In fact, I gave complete stories which could be used in an appeal to draw the violin public.

Now I want to go on to show how to draw the piano public, orchestra public and pipe organ public. I shall not endeavor to go into detail on all divisions, but what I give here will no doubt stimulate the imagination of the press man and send him scouting for facts in the libraries and music stores.

Here is the way I would go at the PIANO division:

" Leopold Godowsky, who, according to Huneker, is the pianist's pianist, was discussing pianos and players of pianos with me the other day. DePachman has the most delightful way of performing. He plays everything all wrong, he disregards every rule of technique, phrasing, and style, but he has the true piano touch, and hence he is enchanting. Friedheim brings out orchestral effects; with him everything seems to be transcribed from a large score; he is not content with his medium; he has not the true piano touch, but nevertheless he is enchanting.

" The true piano touch is something utterly distinct from all other things. It is the method of the artist for whom the keyboard is a specific entity, an instrument complete in itself.

" Take the piano, as Godowsky says, and you find there a world of music. Nothing else is needed. No other musical device is like it: yet all other instruments seem to need the piano for accompaniment. You can express any emotion on the piano; the tone will sing and prolong itself; you can bring out the faintest whisper, piano, pianissimo, meaning softly; you may bring out thunderous crashing chords, forte, fortissimo, meaning loudly. That is the meaning of the name, the pianoforte, the instrument which may play soft and loud.

" It seems a very natural thing to us that we should be able to play softly and loudly, doesn't it? But it didn't to Cristofori, or to all those who came before him.

" When we examine the great, majestic concert grand, like a queen in its full graceful lines regal and dominating on any stage or in any drawing room, we hardly wonder how it happened to grow that way. We just take it for granted—it must have always been. When we think of how empty homes would be without their pianos, how many lives would grow duller without its music and its solace, we might be willing to pay a passing compliment to the inventor of the instrument. Did it have an inventor? Why, of course, we never thought of that before. Like Topsy, it must have just 'growed'."

" Down the street comes the equipage of royalty. The Grand Duke Cosmo the Third of Florence is returning to his city, and taking with him the harpsichord maker, Cristofori. The artisan is dressed in his best—he wears a violet cloak with a silver design embroidered on the shoulder. He is very happy and yet he is loath to bid good-by to his birthplace.

" ' God keep our good Cristofori,' the burghers shout as the carriage goes by. ' May he continue long enow to make good music for the people's merriness.' And as the carriage disappears—' There goes the best harpsichord maker in Padua.'

" ' In Padua? Aye, in all Italy, if not the world. The Grand Duke of Florence knew what he was about when he picked Cristofori. When you get a Cristofori harpsichord, you then get something of the best.'

" ' Yes, but the duke had to pay a price.'

" ' And a fool Cristofori would be to give up his business here to go live in a palace, working only for the duke, if he were not paid a price.'

" In the meantime the carriage had reached Florence, past Sante Croce's sacred portals, past the Santa Maria Novella, past the bridge old Taddeo Gaddi built, past Giotto's tower and the statues of the Medicis.

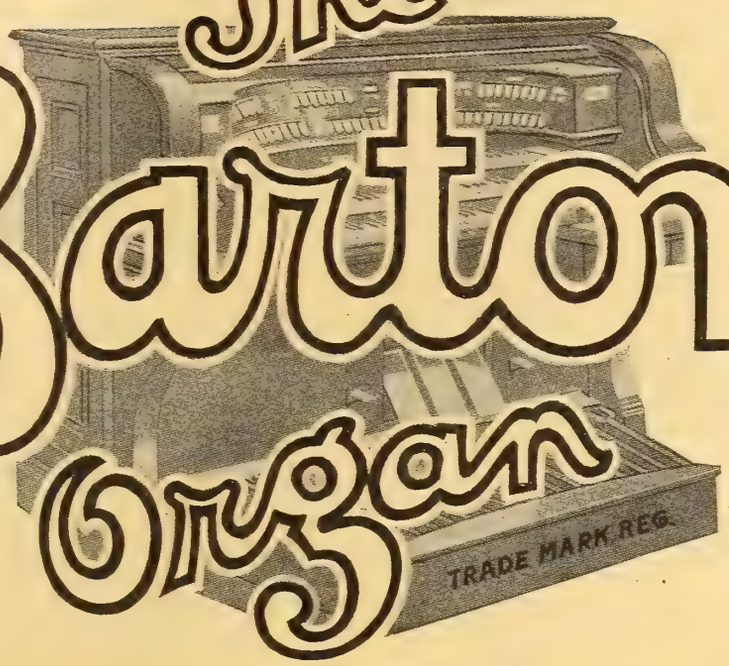
" ' This will be your private shop, my dear Cristofori. And I am very anxious to watch the development of that idea of yours. It sounds very interesting to me. Let me help you, if I can.'

" Bartholomeo inspected his new quarters. Yes, they were sufficiently large. The view was beautiful, looking over San Lorenzo, and what further need to worry? No more selling instruments—just satisfying the duke, that's all. And time to work out his great idea!

" The olive skin wrinkled into a smile at the thought of it. Time now to work it out! Wonderful! Cristofori rubbed his hands in unfeigned delight and eagerly busied himself on the marvelous invention which was to revolutionize the world. So fast did he develop the invention that less than a month after his arrival he had asked the grand duke to ' pay me the great honor to be the first to hear my humble idea.'

" ' Now, your grace, this is what I have done,' he says. ' You see, I play the harpsichord. So, what do you hear? The picking of strings. As I touch the key, the string is plucked. I want to do something quiet; I pluck. I want to do something loud; I pluck. It is the same, I want to play a short note; I pluck. I want to play a long note; pluck. There is not any difference. Is that music? Now, see this violin. I play a long or short note by drawing the bow across the strings. I draw heavily, it is loud; I draw softly, it is quiet. But on the harpsichord I can play many notes at once like this—harmonies, harmonies, beautiful. Oh, I think for years, if only you could make the harpsichord to play soft and loud, piano and forte.'

" ' Yes, yes, Cristofori,' impatiently urged the duke, ' but your invention.' The olive skin wrinkled into a smile—it is good to make a duke curious and eager, the realization will be so much the more enchanting and valuable.



" ' I am not the only one who thinks about this, but the one who is responsible for solving this idea, he will be very important. And I believe your grace, that you will be able to say that your court was the birthplace of the new invention.'

" ' Yes, but show it to me, Cristofori, without delay,' the duke ordered.

" Now, listen your grace, I strike this note very soft and piano, very quickly and delicately, so-la! Is that not very soft?' and Cristofori looked at the duke with a triumphant air, ' But wait. Now I strike the note very loud and long, so—boo-e-e. What do you think?' and the artisan stands with his fists on his hips, his head perked on an angle.

"'Do it again,' orders the duke, bending over the keyboard. 'Why, Cristofori, what does this mean? You don't pluck the strings at all. You hit them. You strike at them. You have. instead of quills to pluck, a lot of hammers!'

"'Hammers,' and Cristofori resents the word, but then on reflection rather likes it. 'Yes, hammers, your grace. And the harder you hit the hammers, the bigger the tone. Just try it; you can control the volume of tone yourself.'

"The duke tried it, and smiled, smacking his lips as if he had eaten of a rare delicacy, and did it again.

"'Congratulations, my Cristofori, you have accomplished the long-sought woonder. But wait, you haven't thought of something,' and the duke appeared to withdraw his approval. 'What's there to prevent the hammer from staying down, so that when you want to repeat the note, you've nothing to hit?'

"'Easy; see this spring that brings the hammer back to place. Look, I can repeat all I like—look, la, la, lala—soft and slow, loud and fast.'

"'There's no doubt about it, Cristofori, you've done it. And we must let the world know about it, for your fame and mine. Your stipend, Cristofori, shall be increased, because of this, materially.'

"'But, I have not shown you all, your grace. See this foot lever; this releases the dampers.'

"'The dampers, Cristofori?'

"'Surely, did you not think that when the hammers hit the strings (hammers is a good word) when they hit the strings that the tone might go on a long time?'

"'See this cloth over the strings? When you touch the key the damper lifts from the string and lets it vibrate. As long as you hold down the key the string is free of the damper. Release the key and the damper drops. Now this foot lever lifts the dampers a long way to as to make even a louder tone. There are many other points about my invention, but you see what this new piano and forte instrument can do?'"

. . . . . .

And here is another which describes the master pianist Liszt:

*"He came towards us—the master, Liszt. A figure of medium height, just inclined toward stodginess. His face, smiling—those caressing eyes glistening beneath huge, bushy eyebrows. His hair long, white, with the snowy purity of his seventy years, brushed back from his forehead, and resting on the shoulders which had learned to bear so much.

"He wore his abbe cloak—and he was indeed the very picture of the priest of infinite goodness. Some there are who preach the gospel of good, and some there are who enact the deeds of humanity. Of this rare samaritan cult was Liszt, friend of all, caring neither for religion nor nation; ready to aid the oppressed, holding forth his hand to guide the new ideals and ideas. We wondered how this good, kind old man could be the same as that perfect lover—that dreamer—that romancer whose life was one long trail of feminine hearts, broken.

"We were overcome as we grasped his hand, those soft, limpid fingers which could call forth fire and crashing thunder from the keyboard of a mere piano. We knew not what to say. He understood, and with kindly voice, he asked:

"'You want to play some of your music for me?"

"With courtly mien, Liszt motioned to us to be seated."

. . . . . .

"It was a great afternoon—Liszt was to play a new rhapsodie.

"He moved to the pianoforte, sat down without ceremony, threw back his hair, leaned mysteriously over the keys, and let his fingers touch them. Instantly the whole room was transformed. Stars on a blue black sky twinkled forth. Beautiful women curtsied and smiled. Grim tragedy leered out, desolation was upon us—we wept and then smiled; we trembled—and the piano seemed to be pleading just as a lover of ancient romance. We beheld a handsome youth fallen on his knees, before the woman he adored. At first she was cold, heedless, petulant. But gradually the ardor of his words adwakened her—the heat of his passion warmed her. Something within her began to stir, and in a moment more she was in his arms. Kisses showered upon her, and as the vision dimly faded away—

"We came back to listen for another mood of the spirit of the piano—

"And thus it pealed forth its messages—softly at first. like the gentle murmurings of the breeze in gentle summer weather. We heard the cricket and the katydid. We basked in the silver moonlight. In a canoe the lovers splashed the waters of the lake and glided past us. But now the air grew restless, the moon hid behind a cloud. The storm approached. Suddenly the thunder crashed; the lightning crackled and raged—the world was in a tumult. We listened, frightened and cowering. The sobbing of the wind ceaased; the rain gradually lessened—until all was quiet as a tomb. Then, with a mysterious accent, there came from the distance churchbells—the singing of a heavenly choir. We lifted our heads and came out of our dream.

"It was the spirit of the piano.

. . . . . .

"Then Liszt had risen, and with an all-embracing smile was bowing to us."

. . . . . .

Concerning the PIPE ORGAN, you can understand how this would be likely to attract new listeners to the instrument.

"This, my friends, is the Church of Saint Clotilde. Hush, we will enter. High is the vaulted roof, silent the grayish atmosphere. Figures angelic are carven in the walls, and glasses stained with pictured history of the church lot in the sanctified light of the outer world. You cannot talk aloud in such a place; you feel yourself to be so humble in the unmistakable presence of the Great Spirit. If churches do not more than make you realize the infinity of something, they have done their part. Soft light, echoing silences, and the pipes of the organ near the altar.

"What voice is that which almost as soft as the silence filters down through the church and trembles like an angel's wing? The organ! Oh what religious fervor, playing and sobbing with a pulse and a breathing like a majestic overpowering priest who is the spirit of the church itself. He seems to be standing aloft, his head drooping,—the walls are his arms and legs, the ceiling is his shoulders and his is the organ loft. He is singing and chanting to his Maker. Such pathos in a note, such strength of faith in a phrase, such beauty of humble offering in a chord.

"Up there in the organ loft is the maker of this music, the master of that organ, who for thirty-two years has been the mind and the heart of the organ instrument.

"Do you dare to approach him and meet him face to face? The angelic being, that father priestly—that Father Franck?

"We will find the way to the organ loft. Dark is the way up and as steep as the forest to Paradise itself is the spiral staircase. An occasional port-hole (as in a ship) lets in a bashful glimmer of light, as you climb aloft. Suddenly you encounter a dreadful, ominous beast, which is panting like a horrid creature of the jungle. Be not afraid, it is the bellows of the organ. And now to the final section of our pilgrim's progress—to the consol of the organ, to the seat of the organist, to the throne of the master. This is pitch black, this end of the path, you stumble up a few narrow steps—

"'sh—hush, shh'—

"Half a dozen angry faces appear out of the light above you. Fingers to their lips they adjure you to silence—the Master plays. We stand stock still, suspended, as it were, half way between the pavement and the vaulted roof.

"The face of the organist—look! A streak of white light falls on the features which are lit with a radiance resembling a halo. I have never seen such a near approach to a halo, as that light about the face of Cesar Franck as he plays the organ at the Chuch of Saint Clotilde. His rolling white hair brushed back from his expansive brow, his noble mouth drawn to restrain the sobs which are arising in his breast. His hands, long, slender, graceful, trembling with the spirit of the Vox Humana. So he improvises to the end."

Now, there are scores of people who want to know something about the ORCHESTRA. Therefore if in connection with your symphony orchestra or any part of one that you might be offering, you ran a series of bits like this, the effect would certainly be to draw new public.

Capsule Lecture

"Any aggregation of musical instruments is called an orchestra, three instruments are a trio, four a quartette; generally a group under twelve is called an ensemble. The modern orchestra is generally never fewer than 30 men and in symphony work is nearer a hundred. There have been orchestras of over two hundred men.

"An orchestra is an attempt to express a narrative, poem, drama, to reflect life by calling on all available instrumental devices. To write for an orchestra is the ambition of all composers. Orchestration is the finality of a composer's art.

"The orchestra is controlled by the conductor who reads the entire score or manuscript and is supposed to have a complete understanding of each instrument's part. The players take the time, the spirit, the emotion, the interpretation from the conductor. The concert-master is generally the first of the first violins and is nearly always assistant to the conductor. His duty is to be spokesman for the orchestra in all matters of technique.

"Modern orchestras are made up of violins, violas, cellos, base violins, or strings; flutes, clarionets, bassoons, oboes, or wood wind; cornets, French horns, English horns, trombones, or brass wind; drums, cymbals, tympani, or the battery; and occasionally organ, harp, and novelty instruments."

Taking up a specific part of the orchestra, you might treat the strings as follows in your general advertising.

CAPSULE LECTURE

"Today we describe the string section. Includes violins—first and second—violas, cellos, double-basses. This is the heart of the orchestra—the instruments not included in a band and hence the part which really dominates the character of an orchestra proper. Violins are to be compared to the soprano voices in the choir, the second violin to the altos, the violas to the tenors, cellos to the baritones and basses to the same-named singers. The violins are the most versatile of the orchestral instruments, the violas are lower and more weird to their tone, the cello is exceedingly romantic and

Don't Think You Can't Afford An ESTEY THEATRE ORGAN

It doesn't cost as much as you may have imagined—and the Estey is a sound investment because it draws the crowds and adds to the effect of your pictures.

The largest theatres—such as the Capitol in New York—have installed Estey Organs—but one can be built in a theatre with only 600 seating capacity.

An Estey will play the latest song hit or the most difficult classic composition. It has the effect of a complete orchestra, yet one man can operate it.

The Estey is a boon to small theatres whose receipts make the maintenance of an orchestra impossible.

Ask us to inspect your theatre and tell you what an Estey of the proper size and tone volume will cost you.

first violins are generally placed at the immediate left of the leader, the first of the first violins being the concert-master. The second violins are at the conductor's right. The violas are at the right of the seconds; the cellos generally face the conductor, and are placed on the floor, the musicians holding the instruments between their legs for support. The basses stand at the back of the orchestra, and are larger than most of their players who must stand to reach them."

Thus from this you can see that your musical publicity is somewhat in the nature of an educational campaign. Your interest is not essentially to educate, but to bring people to your theatre, buying admission. So don't imagine for one moment that I have forgotten my original promise:

I will show you how to use music to make more money for you.

Next week I want to establish another appeal which could be used from now to doomsday in directing the people to music.

Next week's installment, Mr. Isaacson calls "The Story in the Music."

Questions, Answers and Discussions

"WHILE reading the MOTION PICTURE NEWS I noticed that you are willing to give musicians employed in theatres advice on certain subjects, and the question that has been bothering me is whether or not I am playing the right kind of music for the pictures.

"I noticed also, that you state the selections from the operas, classics and symphonies, are very good to use during the pictures.

"I have been playing for pictures about two years now. I am a great lover of music and I always try to please the public by playing the best music I can obtain. For love themes I use pretty waltzes, slow music, and I follow the picture as close as I can. I do play selections from the operas, as from Il Travatore, Bohemian Girl, Martha, and Andantes, and overtures also. I have quite a few classics that I play, some of which are Souvenir (Drdla) Scarf Dance, Humoreske, the Swan, and Prelude. (This number I use mostly for dramatic scenes.) "I also play pieces such as Legend of a Rose, Sparklets, and others for moderate scenes. For comedies I play ragtime numbers and selections as Watch Your Step, and Going Up, and others.

"I have music composed by Zaneonik, adapted especially for the pictures, and I always use cue sheets; they are a great aid to me. I am a pianist, but am present I am playing the Bartola, an instrument similar to an organ. I have no symphonies and I would be very thankful to you if you could inform me as to where I could secure some of them. Remember, for the piano. I would certainly like to hear from you very soon in regard to telling me how to fit out the music programs. I am not a wonderful player, but I can read quite well at sight, and I can play some difficult pieces, as Overtures to Zampa,

J. Wesley Lord, organist Le Petite theatre, Ocean Park, Cal.

Poet and Peasant, and Hungarian Lustspiel.
Earl J. Smith, Palace Theatre, Waseca, Minn.

You have the right idea about the type of music to use, and I would say that if you increase your musical library and familiarize yourself thoroughly with the motifs of the music of as many compositions as possible, that you will find your task an easier one and your performance of greater pleasure to the audience.

"The first thing to keep in mind in selecting music for the film, is this: The wrong theme will neutralize or even destroy the meaning of the actors, while the right theme will accentuate and make truly perfect the same scene.

Unquestionably for any one episode you could find hundreds of appropriate phrases and movements in music, but you will discover, as you go on, that certain compositions are superior to all others under certain circumstances.

For instance, the Swan of Saint Saens has never been approached as a description for utter calm and lack of movement. This is not only a description of the swan in its movement over the waters, the slow action of the wings, but is an ideal figure for scenes where utter calm is being enacted on the screen.

If I had a bit of scenic showing a lovely lake in midsummer, no human life present, I would play the Swan. Then for a very characteristic bit, where a Chinese scene were to be enacted, I could find nothing more appropriate than Kreisler's Tambourine Chinois. To this you could give a perfect description of a scene in a narrow Chinese street, a Chinese serenade, etc.

You will find this for yourself as you go along, and as you develop your own apprehension of the absolute connection between literature, painting, dramatics and music. You can find an absolute translation for any ideal mood in music. In music you can translate any idea into words or dramatic action.

I would suggest that you procure some of the excellent collections of piano transcriptions taken from symphonies, sonatas and operas. I would also suggest that you communicate, for instance, with the Century Music Co., or G. Schirmer of this city, mentioning my name, and telling them that you want this sort of music.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

"I am a follower of your interesting articles in my favorite trade journal, and I look forward to each issue. I am sure that there are hundreds of musicians who are benefited by your contribution each week. I hope that in the near future you will be nationally recognized as the medium between manager and musician."

Grant E. Linn, Winter Theatre, Akron, Ohio.

"It appears at the present writing, that owing to the new scale in Columbus ($56.00 for six hours per day, seven days), there will not be an orchestra working in a picture house after August 28th.

"The manager association has taken for an example of the 'uselessness of an orchestra,' the Colonial Theatre, Columbus, which has never had an orchestra, but have always done an exceptionally good business. However, the Colonial has had the advantage of the pick of the Famous Players Lasky and all of the first national productions."

Buel B. Risinger, Southern Theatre, Columbus. Ohio.

"The department inaugurated by you in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, designed to assist the theatre manager and the musician seeking a position to get in touch with each other, will certainly fill a long felt want.

"Hundreds of musicians in common with myself would gladly pay a fee such as make the department a paying venture, for the inestimable privilege of having a position when one is needed rather than resort to the 'hit or miss' method involved in advertising in various theatrical papers with the hope that fortunate circumstance will quickly achieve the end that experience conclusively proves is not feasible under existing conditions."

W. A. Richards, 13 Spring St., Box 21, Manchester, N. H.

"A number of salesmen representing different firms, from time to time tried to get me interested in a theatre organ, claiming that with an instrument at a cost say from $7,000 to $9,000 I would be able to get much better results and save money.

"While, of course, I'm interested to save money, I consider the danger to do so at the wrong end, and would only care to invest in one of these instruments if I could be convinced that I would profit by an investment of this kind, not through a saving in salaries, but through increased patronage attracted by the organ."

Henry Bishop, Bishop Amusement Co.

Specializes in Picture Music

The New York Concert League, an old established concert bureau, announced this week the formation of a Motion Picture Department, to take care of the needs of the first class motion picture theatres the country over, specializing in the booking of soloists in conjunction with pictures.

The department has been placed under the expert direction of Mr. Joseph Mann, who for the past ten years has been engaged in the music business, specializing in the popularization of music through the medium of the motion picture theatre. Associated with him will be Mr. H. S. Kraft, formerly music writer for several of the leading New York dailies, and a concert manager of note. Together, they have been responsible for the introduction of some of the leading concert artists at the New York Strand, Rialto, Capitol.

The organization has opened offices at 1664 Broadway and invites exhibitors to get in touch with it.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Twin Beds"

(Carter De Haven Production—Presented Through First National)

IT is fitting that "Twin-Beds" should be released under the auspices of an exhibitor organization—for "Twin Beds" is in every sense of the word an exhibitor picture. It is an exhibitor picture and an "audience picture" from start to finish—from the very words of the title to the final fade-out.

As a more extended review of "Twin Beds" will appear in the pages of "The Complete Plan Book" at a later date it is perhaps only necessary in this advance tip to say that the screen production contains in its fullest all of the elements that made "Twin Beds" on the stage a two season record holder. The stage play presented a tried and true farce formula in an entirely original setting, spiced with a piquant title, and developed in rapid-fire fashion. Carter DeHaven's screen production, after the unwelcome business of introducing the characters has been disposed of, moves with all the speed, zip, and certainty of the original hit.

It might be well for the benefit of squemish exhibitors to add the statement that "Twin Beds" need not be feared for the average audience. The title will give welcome spice to the advertising, but the danger ends there. "Twin Beds" contains some odd hundreds of laughs, a swift succession of them, but each one is the sort that all the family will enjoy.

Mr. and Mrs. DeHaven head a most capable cast and the producers have not stinted in statging the piece. We extend a hearty welcome to the DeHavens in the ranks of feature producers. —ROBERT E. WELSH.

"Thirty-Nine East"

(Starring Constance Binney—Realart)

RACHEL CROTHER'S play "Thirty-Nine East" of life in a typical New York boarding house has been adapted to the screen in a way that makes the screen version preferable to the stage production and tells the story with much finer detail and in a "more true to life" manner. Cast in the role which she created in the stage production, Constance Binney portrays one of the finest characterizations of American girlhood seen on the screen or stage for some time. Her long stage experience in this play does not seem to have wearied her. In fact, she has brought to the screen a portrayal of the independent little Penelope Penn that is delightful in its freshness.

The supporting company is strong, and the comedy is natural, being the direct result of exact portrayals of the usual types to be found in the so-called "better-class" New York boarding house. The stage settings are of the best, particularly the boarding-house interiors. Exact attention has been paid to the production details so that nothing is lost in the novelty of plot-development or in the necessary background for this sweet and wholesome comedy. The director is to be congratulaed upon retaining the correct atmosphere thereby producing a convincing picture.—KEMPER F. COWING.

Reviewed at Washington, D. C.

"Madame X"

(Starring Pauline Frederick—Goldwyn)

THERE is no doubt but that Pauline Frederick does the greatest work of her career in "Madame X," taking advantage of the opportunity offered by the piece. Avoiding overacting and excessive dramatics, she has made a masterpiece of the character of Jacqueline Floryet. After viewing this Goldwyn production one realizes that Frank Lloyd has directed a feature that will prove one of the big offerings for the coming winter season.

Though the original play is replete with good lines the piece as adapted to the screen retains every bit of its original punch. The cast is a very capable one in every particular, while the setting with the exception of one or two exteriors are very good and in keeping with the work of Miss Frederick, which alone could easily make the photoplay the meritorious production which it is.

The story which is well-known in every city and village has through its play on mother love a powerful heart interest throughout. There are tearful parts, but no exhibitor need be afraid that his patrons will not like the picture. They will talk about it for months to come.—J. W. MARTIN.

"Seven Bald Pates"

(Christie Comedy — Educational — Two Reels)

ONE may classify this newest comedy from the Christie lots as a breezy, entertaining contribution to the screen—a piece which is quite the best that ever presented Bobby Vernon. It takes a good story sometimes to make a comedian score. When one doesn't measure up to requirements, the interpreter of it is apt to suffer too. The irrepressible Bobby is placed in a familiar pattern which has been dressed up with many new features. The marital ceremony is catalogued in a sure place with comedy directors and it usually scores as sure-fire providing a little imagination is used in subordinating the time-worn ingredients.

"Seven Bald Pates" hinges upon a subpoena. Which is a new wrinkle, indeed. Bobby is warned by a friend to beware of the Law disguised with a bald pate. The server is really a lanky individual whose hirsute adornment is still with him. Bobby drops his marriage license unbeknown to himself, and when a kindly disposed bald-headed man offers it to him he takes to his heels and hides behind the skirts of the assembled bridesmaids. His friends "hox-tie" several bald-pated guests under the belief that they are process servers. And the action is fast and often furious when the real representative of the law arrives and starts his search.

At the Rivoli, New York, the comedy put the audience into high jinks of laughter especially as it concerned the predicament of the bald-pated guests. A good finish comes when Bobby, endeavoring to enter the auto, discovers the subpoena man hiding within. The young benedict promises to be back in three weeks. The picture doesn't relp upon much slapstick and what is revealed has its place. It carries a snap, a zest, which enhance its value not a little. Length Two Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"A Bit of God's Country"

(Single Reel Scenic—Released by Reiben Film Corporation)

THIS latest edition of Hy Mayer's clever combination of current events pictures and his own cartoon contributions ranks well with its predecessors which is a guarantee of its being a decided novelty.

The subject matter of "Such is Sporting Life" is a camera trip into various places where summer sports are to be found, such as baseball, golf, horseracing, etc., together with the cartoon drawings by Mayer sandwiched in between the scenes.

Very entertaining is this strip, and probably will add greatly to the number of the Pathe Review in which it is to be placed.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Such Is Sporting Life"

(Capitol Theatre "Travelaugh"—Produced by Hy Mayer—To Be Released as Part of Pathe Review)

THIS scenic is just what the Capitol theatre program announces it to be: "An unusual scenic tour through Yellowstone Park." However, since this famous National institution has been shot so many times the picture losses somewhat in its historical value. In fact we have a sneaking suspicion that we have seen the whole reel previously.

As a scenic with delightful bits of sky, rugged mountains and beautiful waterfalls this is seldom equalled. The shots of the Park for the most part are excellent and the photography and tinting exceptional.

A very good short subject suitable for any program, no matter if as we half suspect it is a reissue.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"45 MINUTES FROM BROADWAY"
(Kane-First National)

Picture Is Entertaining, Though Ray Appears to Be Miscast

THE picture public has grown so accustomed to Charles Ray in homespun characterizations that the fact he appears in a role far removed from his erstwhile gallery of portraits, is certain to cause some little discussion as to whether he is adaptable for anything else. He has played the country youth so long that he has mellowed it into a perfect study of its kind. It is commendable, however, for any star to break away from traditions. By such a course one gains in versatility. But where is Ray's successor? The public is certain to demand that he be placed back in the study which only he can do on the screen. The type as he plays it is too sure in its appeal to be relegated to the background.

From our point of view the star appears to be miscast as the pugilist in Cohan's famous play. He carries too much refinement, too much gentility in his make-up to live the character of Kid Burns perfectly, no matter how he takes care of the portrayal. A sweater, a cap, and tough gestures, cannot turn Charlie Ray into a "diamond in the rough." He is artist enough, however, to lend his own interpretation to the role. There is no imitating of Victor Moore or George M. himself. But after seeing these two and remembering them one must say that Kid Burns was more like their conception in our mind. The play depended upon crisp Cohanesque dialogue, and such song hits as "So Long Mary" and "Mary's a Grand Old Name" for its success. The pieces can be used for the musical interpretation and thus carry on to a degree the spirit of the play.

It appears like a perfect adaptation, although there is evidence of padding in many of the sequences. Slapstick is resorted to in some instances which surely has no place when Charles Ray is around. One looks for interest and finds it in the studies of Burns and his sweetheart, Mary, the maid. Several bits of homely humor are generated from their efforts to express themselves in terms of conversation and incident. And one or two scenes are positively uproarious. It is a sure-fire touch, the scene wherein Burns jazzes the professional mourner out of the house. The audience at the Strand, New York, apparently enjoyed the picture. Ray can make any spectator respond, no matter what constitutes his plays. "45 Minutes from Broadway" will get over.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

That celebrated play by George M. Cohan which delighted theatre-goers a decade ago, "45 Minutes From Broadway," is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— as First National's first production for Charles Ray. The star makes a big departure from his previous essays in enacting the role of Kid Burns, the pugilist, who becomes secretary to the heir of New Rochelle's richest citizen. The play proved immensely popular partly due to its human appeal, its humor and its song interpolations. Deprived of the human voice it still carries on the identical spirit. And Charles Ray is a fitting successor to Victor Moore and Mr. Cohan in the part of the breezy prize fighter.

Kid Burns falls in love with the maid of the household and succeeds in thwarting the plans of certain schemers who have an eye on the financial resources of the estate. When he discoveers that Mary has inherited the property, he gives up his day-dreams. But the girl prizes his love above material wealth. The play permits Mr. Ray abundant opportunities to display his homespun touch, his humor and genuine good-fellowship. It carries no little humor since it is quite a perfect adaptation. The star is supported by Dorothy Devore in the part of Mary, a most sympathetic character, Hazel Howell, Donald MacDonald, Eugenie Besserer, and others.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ———— takes great pleasure in announcing the appearance of Charles Ray in "45 Minutes From Broadway," the screen version of George M. Cohan's celebrated play which met with such popular approval a decade ago. Many of our patrons will remember the song hits of the piece, "So Long Mary," etc. As a picture it brings Charles Ray a part which fits him like a glove. It is a new role for him. While the captivating songs are missing, the picture carries other appealing qualities. Kid Burns and Mary are two characters which will live in the memory—probably the two finest characters Mr. Cohan ever conceived. The picture carries abundant humor, a touch of pathos, quaint characterization and other sure-fire touches. Be sure to see it.

SUGGESTIONS

An exhibitor doesn't have to be told how to advertise this feature. The very fact that Charles Ray is coming to his theatre is sufficient notoriety in itself. But you can state that he is making his first appearance on the First National Exhibitor's Circuit in a role which is quite a departure for him. Play up the fact that he appears as a pugilist and run stills of him. Treat the picture as a romantic comedy-drama. You can have your orchestra play a medley of Cohan airs. The songs, "Mary's a Grand Old Name," and "So Long Mary" can be used as the musical interpretation of the picture. Bill it as George M. Cohan's greatest play, the one which met with the greatest popular approval.

"THE TRUTH"
(Goldwyn)

Clyde Fitch's Play Misses the Mark as a Picture

THE late Clyde Fitch had a faculty for writing subtle dialogue. He could fashion a play from time-worn ingredients and dress it up with a smooth running plot, and perfect characterization. And beneath the surface of his ideas one could find a good lesson aside from the moving moments of the drama proper. Clyde Fitch, adapted to the screen, most always misses the mark. For an example of this, take Madge Kennedy's latest picture, "The Truth." Deprived of its subtleties, its innuendoes, and with the director running around in circles jumping at one conclusion, then at another, undecided as to making it a comedy or a straight drama, it doesn't loom up with the same class and distinction as its original.

There are times when one imagines it is developing into farcical dimensions. Which development should have been carried out consistently for the sake of the excellent farceuse who lends her captivating personality to the story. Then, presto! the action becomes dull with moralizing captions and trite incident. The director, or the adaptor, has used a middle course and the result is nothing tangible in the shape of good entertainment. Two figures in the play are permitted too great a latitude and the episodes which present them border upon the domains of slapstick.

"The Truth" is based upon the rupture of domestic happiness by the conscious and unconscious fabrications of the charming wife. They are mostly little white lies and she absolves herself from blame by telling her husband that everyone indulges in an innocent fib occasionally. But a little white lie can grow. And one found nourishment in the imagination of the pretty spouse. The danger point is reached, but a reconciliation is effected by the simple measure of telling well, a little white lie. One can realize the farcical possibilities if it had been developed to fit Miss Kenndy's personality. A lot of fun could have been derived from it. The action fairly stands still as it is. It never leaves the beaten track. There is no sparkle nor vitality. The conventions have been obeyed. Liberties can even be taken with Clyde Fitch.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Becky Warder.....Madge Kennedy
Tom Warder.....Thomas Kerrigan
Fred Lindon.....Kenneth Hill
Eve Lindon.....Helen Greene
Stephen Roland.....Frank Doane
Genevieve Crespigny.....Zeldo Sears

By Clyde Fitch.
Scenario by A. F. Statter.
Directed by Lawrence C. Windom.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Madge Kennedy, the charming and talented Goldwyn star, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— in "The Truth," a picturization of Clyde Fitch's play of the same name. This is a play which has for its central figure a young wife who unconsciously practices the art of deception by telling white lies. She is above reproach in wifely virtues but wholly incapable of relating the truth. She doesn't fib for any pleasure to be gained out of it, but because she is controlled by ungovernable desire. Eventually her husband discovers her in several little white lies and she endeavors to vindicate herself by elaborating one falsehood after another.

Finally matters come to a showdown. She flees to her father's domicile and another white lie reunites the young couple. But Becky has learned her lesson and resolves to tell the truth no matter the cost. The play gives Miss Kenneoy ample opportunity to display her emotional capabilities and she takes full advantage of them. Supporting her are the capable Thomas Kerrigan, Frank Doane, Zelda Sears and others. A. F. Statter adapted the play while Lawrence C. Windom directed.

PROGRAM READER

It is pretty hard to tell the truth sometimes. A little white lie may cover a multitude of sins. And who doesn't tell one occasionally? You may spare a tragedy or much unpleasant feeling by indulging in this form of deception. And a white lie has saved a great deal of trouble for married couples. But one can practice these tiny falsehoods too far. Madge Kennedy did in "The Truth," and before the picture ends she learns the penalty. There is much in this picture which teaches. Certainly it shows just how far one can tell a falsehood and not be caught. The picture is an adaptation of Clyde Fitch's celebrated play of the same name and is excellently acted and directed. At this theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture provides ample opportunities for advertising. The title can be exploited simply through a question mark which might indicate a white lie. Use the bill boards in this manner. It will excite curiosity. Then follow up with the announcement that Clyde Fitch's celebrated play, "The Truth," is coming to the theatre soon as a picture. You can arouse a lot of discussion by playing up the theme, asking your patrons just what constitutes a white lie and how far one can indulge in these tiny falsehoods before discovered. You can certainly play this idea to the limit. Use teasers, door-knob hangers and catch lines written around the idea. Exploit the star. Exploit the playwright.

CATCH LINES

Try as she might she couldn't give up the practice of telling white lies. Then one day she was discovered. What happened? See Madge Kennedy in "The Truth."

It is correct and proper to tell a fib in order to cover some mistake of your life. Or should one be amazingly frank and tell the truth.

See "The Truth," and find out how Madge Kennedy answers the question.

"THE SKYWAYMAN"
(Fox)

Slight Story Is Excuse for Average 'Plane Stunts

THE late Lieut. Ormer Locklear and his trusty aeroplane, fly through a great part of this picture. We think, however, that their stunts are going to be a trifle disappointing to the public, who, knowing of the star's death, are likely to expect something absolutely reckless and look for a new record in screen daredeviltry. Lockyear loops the loop, lands on a roof in a large city, jumps from his plane to a moving train, and does a tailspin downwards with the machine apparently on fire, but even all this, while thrilling, will not cause any cases of heart failure. Some of the stunts have been seen in news reels, and one of them has been in a recent feature. The plane-changing in the air has been omitted, perhaps purposely.

The story hinges on the "loss of memory" idea. This has been tabooed so long by producers that it may have the effect of novelty. Capt. Locke (Locklear) returns from France after receiving a wound that causes aphasia. The heavy, a hypocrite, offers a plan to give him another shock which will restore his memory. His true purpose is to kill him in order that he may win the girl. The plan fails inasmuch as the star is not killed, and succeeds where it was not intended, for Capt. Locke regains his memory.

Playing opposite the star is Louise Lovely, who carries out her work in her customary attractive manner. Others in the cast are up to the average. There are few dramatic spots in the star's role and he will get by with little criticism as to his faults or ability.

The photography of the air scenes is all that could be desired with the possible exception of the jump from the plane to the train. The fall (or tailspin) with red lights burning to give the impression of fire, is the best thrill afforded. Some of the interior sets are lavish and leave a good impression, but the main asset is Locklear's daring, and this will not make screen history, although it is sufficiently entertaining.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Capt. Norman Locke.....Lieut. Locklear
Virginia Ames.....Louise Lovely
Dr. Leveridge.....Samuel de Grasse
William Elmer.....Ted McCann
Nobby Brooks.....Jack Brammell
Mr. Locke.....Edwin Booth Tilton

Story by Julius G. Furthman.
Direction by James P. Hogan.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The most thrilling drama of the air ever filmed, "The Skywayman," featuring Lieut. Omer Locklear, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on————. "The Skywayman" was produced in California by William Fox, who saw the opportunity to picture the thrilling deeds of the daredevil of the air and record his deeds permanently. He has rightly been called "the crusader of the air," for he was among the first who dared to step from one plane to another thousands of feet in the air.

"The Skywayman" is a dramatic story which gives him ample opportunity to display his wonderful talents as a daredevil aviator. In it he leaps from a low flying plane to a swiftly moving express train, and repeats the stunt by jumping from the train to the rope ladder that hangs from the aeroplane. A daring landing on a roof from the air is also a feature of this unusual production.

Supporting Lieut. Locklear is Louise Lovely, who has been seen in many previous Fox pictures in support of well known stars, and who is now to be starred in pictures herself. Ten per cent of the profits of the "Skywayman" will be given by William Fox to the families of the late Lieut. Locklear and his pilot. It is a picture that does more than entertain and thrill—it will instruct mankind and aid in the future in the great conquest of the air, which made such headway when men of the stamp of Locklear blazed the path during the past four years. "The Skywayman" will run at the ———— theatre for ———— days.

PROGRAM READER

One of the greatest of the aviators developed by Uncle Sam during the Great War was Lieut. Ormer Locklear, who is the star of "The Skywayman," a stirring photodrama which will run at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————. All the tricks and daring of this actor aviator were pictured to give the motion picture fans such thrills as they have never enjoyed in the past. Locklear leaps from a train to a flying plane, and from the plane to the train. There is a realistic collision with a church steeple high in the air. These and many other daredevil stunts warrant that this Fox picture will take its place among the photoplay offerings for the season. Supporting the star is Louise Lovely, whose work in this and other pictures in which she has played the leading feminine role have won her stardom. Ten per cent of the profits of "The Skywayman" will be devoted to the families of the late Lieut. Locklear and his pilot.

SUGGESTIONS

If you exploit the aeroplane stunts in this too much your patrons are liable to be a little disappointed, but at that they are good for a generous space in all copy, for either the story or the acting of the cast can be boosted very well. It is probably just as well not to mention too bluntly the death of the star while making this picture, as some people will feel resentment towards the producers. You have the "benefit" idea to attract, however, and this will always pull. Mention in your copy that ten per cent of the profits are to be devoted to the dead men's families. Do not neglect Louise Lovely, who is growing in favor every day. Brief histories of Lieut. Locklear make good news stories.

CATCH LINES

All the daredevil stunts of this famous actor-aviator in a thrilling drama of a returned soldier.

Too-Familiar Story Causes Interest to Lag

"LOVE, HONOR AND OBEY" is an all-star production with a story that seems to have come direct from the stock room of movie themes, despite the fact that it is an adaptation of a novel. This fault hides behind careful production and photography, two good characterizations, and well developed suspense. The fact that the picture lags is also due to its six-reel length. There is repeated attention to detail that is intended to emphasize character; too many close-ups of the attractive leading lady, Wilda Bennett, and unadulterated padding which is used to bring in some elaborate society scenes.

Eugene Walters, who scenarioized the novel, has followed each of the two threads of the plot to their respective ends, without demanding innumerable cut-ins of the heroine to show that she is still alive while her lover is working out his destiny far away. This may be a little novel, but is not a flaw. The histrionic honors go to Henry Harmon for his characterization of the Puritanical paralytic. He has not, of course, the opportunities allowed him by "Old Lady 31," but he leaves a very vivid impression. George Cowl is the heavy, and brings out his character very well. The leading female part is in the hands of Wilda Bennett, who is entirely satisfying in the lighter moments, but has a tendency to overact in the dramatic high spots. Kenneth Harlan is not very forceful, while Claire Whitney and E. J. Ratcliffe are quite perfect.

The story deals with two lovers and a jealous third party; intercepted letters and the consequent misunderstanding; marriage of the girl to the jealous individual and final discovery of his treachery. She calls upon the hero, who arrives and throws friend-husband into a lake and out of the picture. While this is the plot, the picture carries a theme that protests against stern Puritanism on one hand and too free thinking on the other. Director de Cordova has gotten over the incidents in fine style, but seems to have left the climax to take care of itself.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

Stuart Emmett.....Kenneth Harlan
Eben Tollman.....George Cowl

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Another "best-seller" has found its way to the screen in "Love, Honor and Obey," which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. In novel form this popular story by Charles Neville Buck, was known as "The Tyranny of Weakness." It has been read by thousands and just as many thousands are going to welcome the screen version, for it has been adapted for pictures by the well known dramatist, Eugene Walter, and enacted by a thoroughly capable cast. Leander de Cordova directed the production and while he has seen that the beloved characters of Mr. Buck's novel have been faithfully portrayed on the silver sheet, he has elaborated and beautified the story by his careful direction.

Included in the cast are beautiful Wilda Bennet, Claire Whitney, Kenneth Harlan, George Cowl and Henry Harmon, that veteran actor who here gives one of the best characterizations of his career. He will be remembered for his work in both the screen and stage version of "Old Lady 31."

The story of "Love, Honor and Obey" is built upon an absorbing theme. The scene is laid in a Puritanical New England town, where old William Williams, stern and unbending, attempts to enforce his standards upon his daughter. To him there can be no deviation from his Spartan principles, not even for the most overwhelming circumstances. How he finally comes to realize that there can be good beneath the radiant faces of youth as well as under the Puritanical exteriors of the Elders, forms most of the interesting drama in the picture.

PROGRAM READER

"Love, Honor and Obey," an all-star porduction of the popular novel, "The Tyranny of Weakness," by Charles Neville Buck, will be the feature attraction at this theatre on ————. The only thing changed in the screen version is the title, for the book has been followed closely by Eugene Walter, who adapted the novel for the screen. Eugene Walter is one of the best known of American dramatists and the picture is as well developed dramatically as any of Mr. Walter's stage successes. "Love, Honor and Obey" is a story of quaint New England with its rigid code of morals handed down through centuries. There is drama, pathos, and a few touches of humor, all deftly blended to form one of the most entertaining photoplays of the season. It will be shown at the ———— for ———— days.

SUGGESTIONS

There are teaser possibilities in this title. Also, editorial discussion may be aroused on the old question of whether a woman should promise to obey her husband after marriage. Charles Neville Buck and Eugene Walter should come in for their share in the ad. copy. In the larger cities Walter will be better known than the author. The best bet in the cast is Henry Harmon. This is especially true if either the screen or stage version of "Old Lady 31" appeared in your town. We think almost everyone who saw that comedy-drama will remember Harmon. Go in for a "theme" discussion—should stern Puritanism or free thought guide today? Tell them the picture strikes a mean between the two.

CATCH LINES

His sweetheart's father was a Puritan of the old school, and he was the author of a book on free thought.

A story of old-fashioned New England meeting modern New York.

"LADY ROSE'S DAUGHTER"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Mediocre Picture Made from Best Seller

THE entertainment values in this screen version of Mrs. Humphrey Ward's novel, "Lady Rose's Daughter," are practically negligible. Here is a perfect illustration that what may constitute an interesting piece of fiction cannot always hope to qualify in terms of film drama. There is nothing in the contents of Mrs. Ward's book which looks like picture material. Reading it via the silversheet, one would place her as a keen rival of Laura Jean Libbey, Bertha M. Clay, Mrs. E. D. N. Southworth, and others who penned sob-sister stuff which had such a wide appeal below stairs a decade or two ago. From inception to conclusion there is not evident one solitary point of interest as far as the plot is concerned. It barely moves—a thing deprived of dramatic meat—a work spineless in the extreme.

Of course, it is adorned with the magnetic personality of Elsie Ferguson. Which is its only mark of favor. One sympathizes with the fact that she is a social outcast, an heiress of ancestral indiscretion, and yet one is secretly amused with her hardships due to such an old-fashioned exposition. Perhaps the director might have done better by it, but it is doubtful. He has simply played safe, and has apparently given more thought to the production than to the plot. Perhaps he assumed it was hopeless and decided to subordinate it wtih atmosphere. The figures belong to an ante-diluvian period when it was the popular fashion to write of British aristocracy. And they are perfectly colorless as represented here. The heroine's name is stigmatized as were those of her mother and grandmother before her. When she has suffered enough the pendulum swings in the opposite direction and happiness is her reward.

The thought strikes home that successful authors need not be held in such great esteem. Unless they really have something to say. Miss Ferguson's emotional capabilities are never given expression. An actress of such histronic caliber deserves stories of strong dramatic fibre. The action here never departs from the beaten path, and most of it comprises a series of groupings. Perhaps some will say that the picture is too highbrow for the average audience. It appears to us as if the average audience has grown too intelligent to accept everything which comes its way.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Of the novels of famous authors which have found their way to the screen, few have attained wider celebrity than "Lady Rose's Daughter," by Mrs. Humphrey Ward. This story will be shown at the ——— theatre next ——— with Elsie Ferguson as the star. Her versatility is splendidly displayed in the fact that she portrays three parts in the picture and her talent is emphasized in each characterization. The tale is divided into three distinct epochs, those of 1860, 1890 and 1920. In the first epoch she plays Lady Maude. In the second she is Lady Rose, while in the present day she has the role of Julie de Breton, the illegitimate daughter of Lady Rose. Therefore the star is seen as grandmother, mother and daughter.

The plot deals with the trials of a young woman who is born out of wedlock. She loves a British army officer of little worth, and after a harrowing experience she learns to love a worthy man with whom she finds happiness. The picture is not only dramatic, but it exerts a powerful heart appeal. Miss Ferguson is supported by a cast headed by such players as David Powell, Holmes E. Herbert, Frank Losee, Warren Cook and Ida Waterman. Burns Mantle scenarioized the story, while Hugh Ford directed.

PROGRAM READER

Mrs. Humphrey Ward's world famous love story of passions and intrigues beneath the surface of British nobility, "Lady Rose's Daughter," is coming to the ——— theatre in the near future with the charming and talented Elsie Ferguson as the star. It begins with a romance of 1860 and sweeps down through the years to a soul-stirring climax today. The star has never had such opportunities to display her artistry than as grandmother, mother and daughter of the story. She gives wonderful expression in each characterization. "Lady Rose's Daughter" is a vivid story of blue blood and red. It is sumptuously staged and splendidly adapted and directed. David Powell is Miss Ferguson's leading man. Watch for further announcements.

SUGGESTIONS

Exhibitors need only to look at the star, author, director and adaptor of "Lady Rose's Daughter" to appreciate the value of this picture and worth while exploitation. It marks the return of Miss Ferguson to the screen after weeks of absence. So play up the fact that she returns and gives one of her greatest performances. The author should come in for some special advertising. Doubtless many of your patrons have read the book. Play the title up prominently and use a fac-simile of the covers for your local paper. Bring out that the excellent actor, David Powell, is the star's leading man. Treat the picture as a vivid story of British aristocracy which carries a full quota of dramatic values.

CATCH LINES

See "Lady Rose's Daughter," by Mrs. Humphrey Ward. It brings Elsie Ferguson back to the screen in one of her greatest roles. A picture of blue blood and red.

"BIG HAPPINESS"
(Robertson-Cole)

Fair Entertainment in Dustin Farnum's Latest

DUSTIN FARNUM'S newest picture is adorned with a pretty "hefty" title—a title which is greater than its story. One visualizes the big outdoors with the protagonist possessing a fine humanity, accepting this or that burden with sweetness and light and generating happiness like a masculine Pollyanna. So one is apt to be disappointed to discover a play based principally upon intrigue with interiors encompassing most of the action. True the hero is a study in humility and exacts sympathy for his manly attitudes. But he is not an outstanding figure by any means. Probably because his success is not measured by any individual effort of his own. Dustin Farnum plays a dual role here, which is sufficient cause to discover a weakness in the plot. Two brothers are represented, one cold and greedy and desirous of power, the other, gentle, loving, although a ne'er-do-well. Events so shape themselves that the former is forced to hide his identity in his search for more power and he intrusts his personality, his business, his domestic welfare in the hands of his brother. A familiar pattern in this day of the screen, but one which carries the conventional punch. Why? Because suspense is surely developing in the certainty that the good brother will eliminate his relative in the scheme of things.

What matters it if the idea that hiding his identity will save the greedy one his whiphand over his rivals when it is certain that such a well-known figure will be recognized departing from Paris? What matters it if certain acquaintances are sure to recognize a difference of voice and gesture in the masquerader despite the fact that one cannot identify them in their personal appearance? These are dramatic licenses which go toward creating the necessary elements that build interest. If one wants truth one will look in vain. However, the good brother doubles the other's income, generates a feeling of sympathy and love in the heart of the wife, and when the climax depicts the unworthy relative returning after a supposed death, the responsiveness of the spectator for a happy ending is achieved. The greedy man is disposed of with quickness and despatch. Coincidence cuts quite a factor here, yet the story in no way suffers on this account. There are a goodly amount of thrills. And the acting and direction are right up to the notch.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Big Happiness" is the name of the feature which will be the chief attraction at the ——— theatre next ——— with Dustin Farnum as the star. Written by "Pan," scenarioized by Jack Cunningham, and directed by Colin Campbell, it presents the popular Farnum in a role which demands a good deal in dramatic feeling. The star enacts a dual role, playing the part of brothers who are identical in personal appearance but totally different in temperament. One is greedy, cold, and with a lust for power; the other is gentle, refined, lovable, but nevertheless a ne'er-do-well. Circumstances cause them to change identities and the subsequent action depicts the sympathetic figure triumphing over his brother.

Love comes to him and to the figure of the other's wife who had married the greedy man for mercenary reasons. The climax is charged with a deal of suspense and brings the story to a gripping conclusion. Be it said that when the greedy brother returns he finds that his lust for power has eliminated his material gains. Mr. Farnum brings to the dual role a keen differentiation, one that call's for much vigorous acting. His support is entirely adequate. The direction is capable. Many of the scenes are enchanting and not a few quite thrilling in their quota of action.

PROGRAM READER

One was a cold, greedy, mercenary type of man; his brother was exactly opposite in temperament. The former offered his relative an opportunity to masquerade as himself. Only a rogue, an adventurer, could carry on the deception. But the gentle, lovable brother entered the other's scheme of things and triumphed with the result that Big Happiness was his reward. The picture is dramatic and often thrilling and offers Dustin Farnum a splendid chance to prove his histrionic capabilities. The backgrounds are quite enchanting. Come to the ——— theatre next ——— and ——— and see this virile star in "Big Happiness." It is a most interesting drama.

SUGGESTIONS

The title looks like the big angle to emphasize here. Make much of it in catch lines, teasers, and newspaper space. You can stimulate interest by offering a small prize as to what constitutes Big Happiness. Is it power? Is it money? Is it love? Tell that Dustin Farnum will appear in his greatest role. Make much of the scenic embellishment of the picture. Treat it as a powerful drama of adventure, intrigue, love, hate, jealousy, sentiment and romance. Use stills of the star and the various scenes. Mention the highlights. Use all the advertising aids such as accessories.

CATCH LINES

He was a ne'er-do-well. But into his life came an opportunity to prove his worth. Did he avail himself? See Dustin Farnum in "Big Happiness."

He assumed his brother's personality, and adventure and intrigue were his allotment. See "Big Happiness," the gripping drama with Dustin Farnum.

"DEMOCRACY"
(Democracy Photoplay Company)

Cost a Lot of Money But Is Doubtful as Entertainment

THE best method of reviewing this picture is to make comparisons with two of the notable releases of the past year, "The Right to Happiness" and "The World Aflame" both similar in theme. "Democracy" is not in the class with the first named picture, lacking its dramatic values and falling below it from a technical standpoint. Compared with "The World Aflame" it does not possess so dominant a personality as Frank Keenan.

The picture is frankly a preachment and for this purpose the producers have resorted to long titles, many of them platitudes. That a considerable amount of money has been spent in production is evident, but so far as entertainment goes, most of this has been chucked away on two or three spectacle scenes that have little bearing on the actual plot.

From the standpoint of acting the picture is most praiseworthy. The entire cast is competent unless one is to consider William Nigh, a very clever character actor, miscast as a leading man. Mr. Nigh also officiated as director with a display of only average skill. He has done better work both as an actor and director.

The brightest spot in the whole production is the work of Maurine Powers, a new comer to the screen, who portrays the character of the blind girl. She makes her role very human and likeable, besides possesses beauty and a screen personality. J. H. Gilmore, veteran screen actor, also comes through with much personal glory.

The plot of the picture is rather intricate resorting a lot to coincidence and with not much incident provided to break the monotony of the multitude of titles used. The theme is the not new theory that if we would all live by the Golden Rule everyone would be happy and contented. The program in use at the Casino theatre, where the production is playing at this writing announces that the "story is not a sudden inspiration."

In this assertion the sponsors are absolutely correct. The picture is very much an illustrated lecture on the disparity of views that exist between the classes commonly defined as "Labor and Capital." It has a certain box office and to some people, audience value, however. Those inclined to socialist views will hail it as a wonderful picture. Those who have a sense of right and justice will be more apt to look on it as a very much overdrawn drama, not any too skilfully produced.—Length, 7 reels. —J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Democracy," augmented further in its title with "The Vision Restored," is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— as a picture with a message. The basic theme of the subject is based upon the idea that Love conquers all and that the millennium may be brought about by a little right thinking. The story indicts the autocracy of wealth and that of force, developing in its trend of thought the idea that industrial democracy is the only method to thwart bolshevism and capitalism.

The idea gains emphasis through the employment of a monopolist who has two grandsons. One is a dreamer, the other is of a practical mind. And events so shape themselves that idealism and practicalities are brought to the foreground. The inevitable conflict takes place with the resultant defeat of the monopolists. The picture has a tendency to be allegorical which makes it in harmony with its message. It carries a deal of pointed truths which if practiced by mankind would make the world a genuine Utopia. An adequate cast interprets the subject with acceptable sincerity. William Nigh, who appears as one of the actors, also directed. The picture is presented by Lee Francis Lybargar.

PROGRAM READER

A picture of vital import is "Democracy" which is coming to this theatre next ————. The author has presented a theme based upon universal happiness, which can only be gained by doing away with the practicalities of life and becoming idealistic. The story indicts the autocracy of wealth and the autocracy of force. The sequences offer a deal of thought which if credited by an audience is certain to create a spirit of true humanity. Lee Francis Lybargar wrote the subject while William Nigh directed. The latter will be remembered as the director of "My Four Years in Germany." Manager ———— guarantees a worthy entertainment. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

The principal plan to pursue in exploiting this feature is to concentrate upon the theme, advising your patrons that the chance is theirs to see how America can become a genuine Utopia. Play up the fact that the picture offers a deal of thought and that it teaches a wonderful lesson. Make a bid to obtain the patronage of the people who don't often go to movies. You can stimulate interest by concentrating upon the message preached here. The majority will respond to the idea which indicts the commercial element. The title is attractive and has immense advertising possibilities. Play up the fact that the director also directed "My Four Years in Germany."

CATCH LINES

Would you learn how to effect a broad humanity in the world? Then see "Democracy," a picture certain to strike a responsive chord everywhere.

"HOMESPUN FOLKS"
(Ince-Associated Producers)

Rural Drama Is Interesting Despite a Theatrical Touch

THE first Thomas H. Ince production for Associated Producers is a rural drama which is going to bring them on its title. And once in their seats the patrons will be entertained if they don't ask for too much truth in the offering. "Homespun Folks" is by Julien Josephson, the author who has been contributing the stories of country life for Charles Ray. Which is enough to make him know what he is writing about. He has fashioned a tale which moves with vigor and vitality. Its simplicity, to the climax, is a mark in its favor, even though the plot and characterization lack inspiration. The truly rural touch in the rustic backgrounds, the figure of the hard-hearted farmer who turns his son out of home because he has studied law on the side, the subsequent trials of the youth in his attempt to gain a livelihood at his profession, the twist of the plot which permits the introduction of an old-fashioned country election campaign—these are the units which compose the pattern.

Obvious you might say. Yet it pleases. There are times when the director stretches a point or two and certain details miss fire. The story is not Josephson at his best. The climax seems like an added afterthought —as if the action up to this point had appeared too weak for the sponsors with the resultant display of theatrical fireworks. The hero has won back his father's respect. Family pride softened the old man and by his own electioneering succeeds in making the youth, district attorney. The subsequent action seems anti-climatic. It is melodramatic to the core.

A villain who has hidden his true color reveals himself and an innocent man is charged with murder—the very man who attempted to ruin the youth politically. When the trial takes place the district attorney squashes the false evidence. The people who were ready to acclaim him suddenly develop brutish instincts. Tar and feathers are made ready, but the hero is spared such a disgrace by the timely arrival of the innocent man's daughter. This scene is false and not in harmony with the intelligence of New Englanders. Mob display doesn't flourish on such little pretense as smashing false evidence. However, for the most part it is good entertainment and acted convincingly by Lloyd Hughes as the youth, Al Filson as the fire-eating editor, and Charles Mailes as the father. The others are not so conspicuous. The atmosphere is splendidly real.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Homespun Folks," the Thomas H. Ince-Associated Producers' special which will come to the ———— theatre next ————, is a rural drama depicting the homespun life of a New England farm and an adjacent village. It is said to offer vital, gripping action, a touch of humor, or a moment of pathos may occupy the foreground, but the quiet peaceful atmosphere of rural New England is always present. The story details the trials of a country lawyer in his effort to make a name for himself. His stern father expels him from home and he makes his way to a neighboring village where in the course of events he is nominated by the Republicans for district attorney.

It is when the old man discovers the opposing forces attempting to coerce the voters that he relents and bends his untiring effort to elect the boy. The youth wins, but his troubles are still with him when he performs his duty as he sees it. The climax furnishes a goodly thrill and is well punctuated with flashes of homely humor and pathos. Lloyd Hughes, who is featured, gives a good account of himself and his support is praiseworthy. Julien Josephson wrote the story.

PROGRAM READER

An epic of rural America is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "Homespun Folks" by Julien Josephson. It marks the first production sponsored by Associated Producers and presents Lloyd Hughes and an excellent cast of associate players in a subject the appeal of which cannot be denied. The characters, here are real human beings, humorous at times, in deadly earnest at others, but always sympathetic and homespun, which means that they are honest. The story revolves around local politics and presents an accurate account of small town life. The story is universal in its appeal. Really it is a big theme reduced to terms of homespun folks. It is not unlike the memorable play, "The Old Homestead." Come and be genuinely entertained.

SUGGESTIONS

You can tell your clientele that this picture bears the stamp of Thomas H. Ince and that it is the first offering of Associated Producers. Play up the name of Lloyd Hughes, who is rapidly making a name for himself as an actor of keen understanding. Feature the drama for what its title indicates, a rural picture of small town life. Bring out the charming atmosphere. Play up the title. It is a wonder and will attract patronage. You can go in for local color in several ways. Dressing up your lobby accordingly, staging a prologue in harmony with the farm background and if you run the picture around election time you can make it timely by elaborate advertising in the shape of old-fashioned political parades and circus features.

CATCH LINES

See "Homespun Folks" and get in harmony with the country. The people are real, the incidents charged with humor and pathos, and the atmosphere is wonderful.

"THE FOURTEENTH MAN"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Some Entertaining Moments in Warwick's Comedy

ROBERT WARWICK has been given a clever enough comedy, and in some spots it is good, in a farcical way, for good spontaneous laughs. The idea is practically a farce, and the climax is worked up with all the characters being brought into a dinner party. There is no end of misunderstandings waiting to be cleared up and it is easy to imagine the last act of the play, with everybody running in and out and explaining his or her part in the muddle, until the air clarifies sufficiently for the curtain.

The story opens in Scotland with some good incident. Warwick is a British army captain, ever filled with a desire to "help the under dog." These meddling tendencies get him into serious trouble, for he strikes a superior officer and is forced to flee to America. In New York he believes that he is being pursued by a Scotland yard man. He falls in with the girl, who is being forced into marriage by her guardians. At the engagement party, in order to prevent thirteen from sitting at table, a "lord" is "hired" for the occasion. Warwick is mistaken for the lord when he comes to prevent a robbery. There is considerable mistaken identity until the end.

In incident the picture is entertaining and the star gets over some better-than-average comedy scenes. It is the little things throughout that impress and provide most of the merit. Giving Joseph Henaberry, who directed, credit for this is necessary. There seems to have been, however, a curtailment of extras. It is noticeable in the prize fight scene, and more so in the Greenwich Village masquerade. There should be more than fifteen or twenty couples dancing. The cast is splendid, but Robert Dudley looks too old for his part. Bebe Daniels plays the leading feminine role, and is as pleasing as ever. Walter Hiers and Kid McCoy are the two other attractive members of the cast.

"The Fourteenth Man" has, with its unique theme of a man possessed of the idea of helping the weak; its clever bits of business throughout, and its cast, the requisites of an entertaining comedy.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Captain Gordon ..... Robert Warwick
Marjory Seaton ..... Bebe Daniels
Harry Brooks ..... Walter Hiers
Jenks ..... Robert Milash
Sylvester ..... Norman Selby (Kid McCoy)
Monk Brady ..... James Farley
Major McDowell ..... C. H. Geldart
Mrs. McDowell ..... Viora Daniel
Tidmarsh ..... Robert Dudley
Mrs. Tidmarsh ..... Sylvia Ashton
Winslow ..... Lucien Littlefield
Dawes ..... John McKinnon

From the play by F. Anstey Guthrie.
Scenario by Walter Woods.
Directed by Joseph Henaberry.
Photography by Karl Brown.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Fourteenth Man," the photodrama which will be the attraction at ———— theatre on ————, is a picture for the superstitious. The Tidmarsh family would not sit down with thirteen at table, so their accomplished English butler offered to find them not only a guest, but a lord at that. The "lord" turned out to be Robert Warwick, who is starred in this absorbing photoplay. Playing opposite him is Bebe Daniels, who won a host of friends for herself by her work in "Why Change Your Wife," and who is now to be starred in pictures herself.

The Story of "The Fourteenth Man" was adapted from the play by F. Anstey Guthrie, who is known to the reading and playgoing public as "F. Anstey." The play was known as "The Man from Blankey's" and served as a vehicle for Charles Hawtrey, a well known British actor, for two years.

Joseph Henaberry, who formerly directed Douglas Fairbanks in "The Man from Painted Post," and "Say, Young Fellow," handled the megaphone in the making of "The Fourteenth Man." He recently joined the directorial forces of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation after a varied experience before and behind the camera.

Those who come to see this picture are not going to be made sad, for the comedy is excellent. The opening reel is laid in Scotland, with Robert Warwick as Capt. Gordon, of the British army, who just can't keep from helping the "under dog" if there is a fight around. His experiences are sad, for he pays the penalty of the meddler by having both parties turn upon him.

PROGRAM READER

Captain Gordon, of the British army, was the kind of a man who would fight to the last ditch for the "under dog." It didn't matter so much about the cause, but as soon as the Captain saw a man being beaten, his heart went out for him, and his fists soon followed. But the strangest thing of all was that even those whom he befriended failed to be grateful to him, and those he helped and those he fought both turned on him. Such is the type of story behind "The Fourteenth Man," which will be shown at this theatre on ————, with the popular actor, in the leading role. In addition to Mr. Warwick, Bebe Daniels, the dainty star of "Why Change Your Wife," and a newcomer to stardom herself, will be seen in the leading feminine role. Another face that will be easily recognizable is that of Norman Selby (Kid McCoy), the well-known pugilist, who dons the gloves in this picture and shows his old time skill and speed in the ring.

CATCH LINES

Mix a little Robert Warwick—an old time favorite; a bit of Bebe Daniels—a comer for sure, in a real comedy drama—and you have "The Fourteenth Man"—good enough for any human.

Do you come to see pictures to cry or to laugh? You may do a bit of each at the showing of "The Fourteenth Man."

"OUT OF THE DUST"
(Apex Films)

Old Time Western, Well Produced and Acted

PICTUREGOERS who attend the showing of "Out of the Dust" are certain to rub their eyes and gaze in amazement at a film which goes back to the pioneer days of the industry and the West at the same time. This is not saying that the picture bears the stamp of early production methods. Far from it. The offering depicts a story which was the "baby" of them all. The military post, the rampaging redskins, the forlorn wife of the captain who leaves the desolate camp with a picturesque trapper, the dance halls, the ambush of the prairie schooners, the fight between the outraged husband and the trespasser—these are the ingredients, tried and true everyone, but all of which are capable of quickening the pulse when they are brought out for their full values.

It is said that the story was inspired from Frederic Remington's paintings of the days when the West had a glamour about it. This is believable in the reproduction in animated form of some of his memorable groupings. J. P. McCarthy, who wrote and directed the feature, has succeeded in catching the spirit of the times. His atmosphere is perfect, the backgrounds being truly picturesque, not only from a scenic point of view, but also from correct interiors. The story is told by the flash-back medium. The hero of the action is turning over the Remington book and explaining the pictures to his grandchild, and the scenes are immediately visualized. There is a goodly amount of action which is gauged in the right tempo until near the conclusion when it sags a trifle.

The idea has been used so often that every incident is obvious. But that fault doesn't detract from the interest. Indeed with such capable players as Russell Simpson and Robert McKim (both members of the realistic school of acting) carrying out the burdens of the story, one may rest assured that the interpretation hits the high-water mark. These players completely hide their identities in their respective parts. Both are natural in every detail. Dorcas Matthews as the wife plays with a great deal of understanding. And the youngster who eventually reunites the parents is capitally played by "Pat" Moore. "Out of the Dust" may belong to the old school, but it carries a big punch because of its lifelike dimensions.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

John Evans ..... Russell Simpson
His Wife ..... Dorcas Matthews

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

J. P. McCarthy, the author and director of "Out of the Dust," which comes to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week with an all-star cast consisting of such well known players as Russell Simpson and Robert McKim, has contributed a story which seems like an animated Remington. The artist who painted the West in all its glory, in the halcyon days when redskins roamed the plains in search of human prey, inspired Mr. McCarthy to pen this gripping tale of an army post wherein a wife of the captain flees with an adventurous trapper because she has tired of the monotony and desolation.

The story depicts the conflict in their lives—her subsequent sorrow, and the deep suffering of the forsaken husband. Interspersed with this domestic drama is a flash of Indian battle. The prairie wagons are grouped in the circle of death and it is when the soldiers from the post go to the rescue of the pioneers that the desolate wife flees with the philanderer. The West of '75 is depicted. The backgrounds are impressive and range all the way from mountain shots to dance hall interiors. The action grips from the start and easily holds the attention. The picture is remarkably well interpreted.

PROGRAM READER

Do you long to see a good old-fashioned Western of the days when redskins roamed the plains—of the days when an army post in the far West proved the only abode of the white man? Do you long to see an Indian skirmish, the prairie wagons grouped in the circle of death with the pioneers battling for their lives? Then come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see "Out of the Dust," by J. P. McCarthy. It is said that the author found his inspiration from Frederic Remington's famous paintings. Truly he has gathered some remarkable scenes. The picture is gripping in its action and suspense. The acting is some of the best that has ever been flashed on the ———— screen.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the fact that the author, J. P. McCarthy, found his inspiration in the paintings of Frederic Remington. You can distribute copies of these, which are easily obtainable, in the lobby. You can dress up your interiors appropriately and stage a prologue in harmony with one of the outstanding scenes. Your ushers can be garbed in the period of '75. Spread literature concerning the story, its inspiration, its author, and its remarkable cast. Fans are quick to recognize real talent. They will come if you tell them that Simpson and McKim are the principal actors. Play up the title. Treat it as a vital drama of the early days of the West. The picture is being disposed on the state rights basis.

CATCH LINES

"THE HOUSE OF THE TOLLING BELL"
(J. Stuart Blackton-Pathe)

A Weird Story with Plenty of Action and Excitement

AS far as production value goes this feature is in the A1 class for it can be seen at a glance that much time and a tremendous amount of energy must have been spent in the planning and construction of sets and the selection of exteriors to act in conjunction.

The plot of the story deals with superstition of the "spooky" variety which calls for the arrangement of many contraptions, to give it the air of mystery.

The principal scenes are played in "The House of the Tolling Bell" in which hero and heroine have gone to live because hero's grandfather has made a provision in his will that the heir who enters the manor house must live in it for one year, while his body rests in the cupola of the house.

That J. Stuart Blackton has a seventh sense, when it comes to putting on and developing weird and mysterious scenes cannot be denied, for he shows the young couple, living in the haunted house, unknown to one another, their thrilling experiences with the villain and his accomplices in which some very good fights take place, the old grandfather arising from his casket and appearing to them in ghost-like form and then the strong climax with its surprise, when the old man really does appear in the flesh and tells them that he has planned the affair and has been living in one of the upper rooms all the time, being fed by the negro servants.

The plot which is more weird than strong, deals with the life of old Anthony Cole, who has become remorseful because he turned out his only daughter in her youth and has never seen her again. He plans his own death, has his kinsfolk assemble at the haunted house and watches the result, until the affair becomes too serious.

Although the opening scenes are rather weak, the story develops rapidly and has a strong dramatic vein running through it.

The picture should interest and excite wherever played.—Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

J. Stuart Blackton's latest production, "The House of the Tolling Bell," featuring May McAvoy and Bruce Gordon will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of next ———.

It is a drama of love and mystery based on superstition, that elusive something that can be found in everybody's make-up.

The locale is laid in the South, the plot hinging upon the division of an extensive estate among the heirs, upon the death of its old master.

Anthony Cole refused to recognize his daughter to whom he was greatly attached because she ran away and married a poor music teacher. One day the old bell tolled forth the sad tidings that he had died. His relatives gathered at the old homestead to see what disposition the old man had made of his wealth. By the terms of the will the one to receive the money and estate must sleep in the house for one year.

How Cole's grandson, Richard Steele and Lucy Atherton, a relative abided by the terms and how the rest of the kinsfolks headed by the cunning Jules La Rocque, endeavored to gain their ends is all told in a story filled with romance, dramatic moments and superstition.

J. Stuart Blackton's master hand shows throughout both in the carefulness with which the details are arranged and the even continuity which runs throughout.

PROGRAM READER

May McAvoy and Bruce Gordon will appear in this theatre on ——— of next ——— as stars in J. Stuart Blackton's production, "The House of the Tolling Bell."

The theme of this wonderful story deals with the chivalry, the passion and the superstition of the South.

It tells of the life of old Anthony Cole who had refused to recognize his daughter because she ran away and married a poor music teacher. He had never seen her after that day and one day when the bells tolled announcing his death and the relatives assembled to hear the terms of his will, bewilderment seized hold of them.

See "The House of the Tolling Bell" and find out what peculiar terms the eccentric old man made in his will and how it was followed out by his kinsfolk.

The feature is a J. Stuart Blackton production which means that it is up-to-date in production values, the selection of a good story and the portrayal of the principal roles by a splendid cast.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture should interest your patrons and give them plenty of excitement.

The story is a peculiar one of the "spooky" variety and for this reason should give you plenty of exploitation angles to work upon.

If you can run a little story in your town papers telling of the old man's remorse on account of his lost daughter and the methods he took to make his grandson happy.

Feature J. Stuart Blackton's name for he has given the picture a good production, and don't forget the cast which is a good one.

CATCH LINES

Would you care to live in a haunted house for a year to gain a fortune? "The House of the Tolling Bell" will tell you what hero and heroine did under these most peculiar circumstances.

"ITS A GREAT LIFE"
(Eminent Authors-Goldwyn)

Best Ever If You Went to Boarding School

THIS is a grown up brother of the "Edgar" comedies Goldwyn is producing, not only in the number of reels, but also in style of construction, being just a series of incidents which happened in the lives of various members of the student body and faculty of a "prep" school.

Of plot there is none. Of story there is little. The offering begins by showing "Stoddard," played by Cullen Landis, and "The Wop," a role intrusted to Howard Ralston, as the two main characters, and goes from one sequence to another until it is time to put finis on the picture. Each scene, however, is a rare bit of entertainment in itself for a grown up audience, especially those who remember their own school days, the adolescent and "sweet sixteen" period, with a mixture of amusement and profound respect for what then seemed the greatest of life's problems.

The mention of a "grown up" audience is to be taken literally. To enjoy this picture fully one must be grown up not only physically, but mentally. It entertains as did the immortal "Tom and Huck" books, but the yarn has a less wide appeal than did Mark Twain's famous novels, for the reason that "It's a Great Life" is a story of a boarding school and not all of our hundred million are going to see anything humorous in what "The Wop" and "Stoddard" did and that which happened to them for doing it.

There is a big audience for this picture, but it must come from the doctors, lawyers, merchants and priests class if it goes a hundred per cent as entertainment. To fully appreciate "Stoddard" one must have passed through the "Stoddard" experiences, all of which is a long way of saying that it is an attraction for a high class audience and not one for a house where wild melodrama goes over best.

The cast which interprets the various roles is absolutely flawless. Cullen Landis, Howard Ralston, Molly Malone and Clara Horton play the principal parts in a way that establishes a new standard for juvenile acting. Ralph Bushman, son of Francis X., has a part, but is not given any great amount of opportunity. He, however, gets away with his "bit" in fine shape.

Some very good "cannibal island" stuff has been interpolated, the scenes being used to visualize the air castles the boys build from time to time. These scenes have cost a lot of money and are really worthy of being placed in the spectacle class.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Did you go to a boarding school and do you remember the days you put in doing a lot of things you hadn't ought to have done and neglecting a good many that you should have done, including getting your lessons?

If so you will especially enjoy "It's a Great Life," the Goldwyn-Eminent Authors picture adapted from the Mary Roberts Rinehart story, "Empire Builders," which comes to the ——— theatre for a ——— days' engagement beginning ———.

"It's a great Life" is just the kind of humor that Americans love, the kind that made Mark Twain famous. In Stoddard, a role played by Cullen Landis, remembered for his good work in many recent Goldwyn pictures, especially "The Girl from Outside," and The Wop, a part which Howard Ralston, the wonderful child actor who played Jimmie Bean with Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna," are a new edition of the immortal Huck and Tom. They are boys, real boys, full of ideas, building air castles, falling in love, puppy love of course, and doing all those things which make us smile when we look back to the days of our own youth.

Nothing quite so entertaining in the way of a motion picture has come through since the filming of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "23½ Hours' Leave." "It's a Great Life" is a fitting running mate for the first-named picture.

PROGRAM READER

Do you remember a picture called "23½ Hours Leave," written by Mary Roberts Rinehart? Of course you do. It was the film hit of the season. Coming to the ——— next week for a ——— days' engagement beginning ———, is another of Mrs. Rinehart's famous Saturday Evening Post stories, "It's a Great Life," adapted from "Empire Builders." This latest bit of human, humorous fiction has been made into a motion picture that will duplicate the success of "23½ Hours Leave." It is about, mostly, two boys just coming to the puppy love age, who are in a boarding school.

What they do, what they get for doing it makes just one sequence after another of the best fun we expect to be able to offer you this season. Cullen Landis, whom you will remember for his wonderful work in "The Girl from Outside," and Howard Ralston, the "Jimmie Bean" in Mary Pickford's "Pollyanna," have the two principal roles in the picture. The girls are Clara Horton and Molly Malone. Then there are some more famous juvenile players, including Ralph Bushman, son of Francis X. Those who miss "It's a Great Life" will be passing the one best comedy bet of the year.

CATCH LINES

A story of two live wires who went to boarding school, with what they did to get themselves and others in trouble and what happened to them afterward fully explained. A humorous, regular boy tale that will bring back your own "puppy love" days and make you smile to yourself for a week. "The Wop" had the imagination and "Stoddard" possessed all the other requirements to stir things up generally about the boarding school. What happened to these two irrepressibles makes the one great comedy film of the year.

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

CLEVELAND

Motion picture theatre prices will have to be boosted in Cleveland, local exhibitors all predict, to cover the big advance in the operators' wage scale. In fact, several of the leading first-run houses have already gone up forty cents for evening shows. When the Metropolitan theatre opened August 21 with its new fall dress and trimmings, it announced that matinee prices would be thirty cents instead of the old time twenty cents; while evening prices jumped from thirty to forty cents. The Strand, a first-run down town house, all jumped up to thirty and forty cents admission. The Orpheum, another large down town house boosted prices five cents.

The operators are now said to be getting a sliding scale of $1.20, $1.30 and $1.40 an hour as against 80c an hour, their wage scale for the past two years. This scale was determined upon last week in New York, between the committee representing th Cleveland exhibitors, and the committee representing the Cleveland operator, according to unofficial information. The exhibitor committee consisted of Fred Desberg, Al Freedman, and Moe Horwitz. The operator committee consisted of Harland Holmden, Ben Brown, and Syd Gleichman.

Paul Gusdanovic announces that he has sold the sub-franchises for Associated Exhibitors, Inc., in four of the principal cities of Ohio, in addition to Cleveland. The other cities are Toledo, Youngstown and Canton.

Mr. Gusdanovic holds the regional franchise for the northern part of Ohio and states that he will disclose the name of the sub-franchise purchasers as soon as he has disposed of the rest of his territory when the list can be published complete.

"Humoresque" has had a unique career in Cleveland. It opened at the Euclid theatre four weeks ago. The opening Sunday, so it is reported, was poor. Business was slower than it had been all summer. But on Monday it went over a little better. By Wednesday it was filling the theatre for every performance, and it has picked up so consistently ever since, that at no time since the first few days of the showing have the people been able to get into the house without waiting in line. In fact, it has become quite common for those who wanted to see the show without the tiresome necessity of waiting for half an hour or more to stay down town for dinner and get to the theatre in time for the early seven o'clock show, because the later evening show was so overcrowded.

Charlie Schwerin was in town for a couple of days this week. It is rumored about that Charlie is going to open an office in Cleveland and handle "Up In Mary's Attic" personally in Ohio.

Maurice Lebensberger, manager for the Standard Film Service Company, who has been burning up a lot of the stuff that made John Rockefeller rich, touring the Michigan roads with Mrs. Lebensberger, is back on the job again, several pounds of flesh and several tons of pep to the good.

Joseph J. Miller, representing the Stereospeed Productions, was busy this week showing his high speed and slow motion pictures to the exchange managers of Cleveland, in an effort to dispose of the state-selling rights to the series. Miller reports that he has already closed for the distribution of the Stereospeed productions with Abe Dressner of Washington, D. C.; Harry Grelle of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Bob Lynch of Metro in Philadelphia and eastern Pennsylvania, and the Major Film Company for the New England territory.

Specialty Pictures has given Frank Marshall another boost. Marshall came into this territory originally as local office manager for the company. Later he was made manager over several offices. Now he has been appointed division manager covering Cleveland, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Cincinnati and Indianapolis.

George P. Jacobs, manager for Masterpiece Film Attractions, Standard Theatre Bldg., left for New York on Sunday. George took a big bank roll with him, and he hinted that he was going to bring back some picture sensations with him.

DETROIT

Phil Gleichman, president of the Broadway Strand Theatre Co., takes over the Ferry Field theatre here September 1, under a purchase contract signed last month. Sid F. Lawrence, who has been manager of the Washington and Alhambra theatres, Detroit, and of playhouses in Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo, Flint, and Newark, N. J., has been appointed the new manager. New stage settings are being installed, and other improvements are contemplated. Prices have been raised to 30 cents for the lower floor, 20 cents for the balcony, 40 cents for box seats, and 20 cents for the week day matinees.

Charles Perry, Detroit manager for Paramount, has signed up 225 exhibitors to display Paramount pictures during Paramount-Artcraft week, which begins September 5. This is more than double the number of exhibitors who cooperated in this territory last year.

The Associated Producers have completed their Detroit branch organization with the following personnel: Resident manager, E. A. Crane; special selling representative, J. O. Brooks; booker, George Ranshaw. Miss Claire Fitzgibbons will be in charge of the stenographic department.

The Paramount inspection room in Detroit is being enlarged, and new last-word equipment is being installed by Charles Perry, manager. When complete, the room will house twenty-four inspectors, making it by far the largest inspection room in Detroit.

W. D. Ward, Universal manager in Detroit, reports that "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," which was displayed at the Grand Circus theatre, here, played to the biggest business in the history of the theatre, at prices of 25 and 50 cents. Mr. Ward is enthusiastic about other Universal releases for the coming season.

George DeBute, manager of the Arthur S. Hyman Exchange, Detroit, has resigned to engage in the wholesale produce business in Toledo. His successor is Ray Branch, salesman for the Hyman organization for the past eight months.

The New Globe theatre, Flint, opened last week, with "The White Moll," featuring Pearl White.

NEW ORLEANS

W. H. Owen of Starkville, Miss., has leased Casey's hall in Lexington and will spend about $5,000 transforming it into a modern motion picture theatre. At present Lexington has no theatre.

All of the big theatres of New Orleans are ready to open. The Orpheum opened Monday (August 30). Pantages opens September 5 or 6. The Tulane opens September 19. But the motion picture houses and the Palace, the Junior Orpheum theatre, have been running all summer.

J. Eugene Pearce has discontinued the use of an orchestra in his Tudor theatre and is using only a pipe organ. He says he believes the soft tones of the organ enhance the showing of the pictures.

Friday-night services are becoming more popular at one of the Methodist churches of New Orleans since it began showing motion-pictures as part of the service. Educationals and comedies are shown. The pastor is a warm exponent of motion pictures in churches provided "the proper films are used." Another church which has great success in attracting larger congregations with movies is the Holy Redeemer church.

Field-representative Garrac of the newly-formed state organization of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, reports a rapidly increasing membership in the organization, and an enthusiasm that is represented by substantial cash payments for the promotion and sustenance of the corporate body. More than a score of new members have been added in the last two weeks.

It has been decided by the executive committee to permit Mississippi exhibitors to become members in the Louisiana body, and become actively identified in the movement to advance and protect the interests of the "independents."

With the assistance of the American Cane Growers' Association and the New Orleans Pathe Exchange, the Times Picayune, New Orleans' morning newspaper, is giving exhibitions of a picture made specially by Pathe showing the ravages of the sugar-cane borer and the process of its extermination by the Imported Cuban Fly. The picture is being shown all over Louisiana and is offered free to the exhibitor.

Advertising was eliminated from the screen of the Palace theatre some time ago, and now Ben Piazzi has cut out billboard advertising. He is using newspaper space almost exclusively. It is likely other theatres in the city will do likewise.

Howard W. McCoy succeeds Ben Piazzi as manager of the Palace. Mr. McCoy has been managing the Shubert house in St. Paul.

It is declared in New Orleans that Marguerite Clark is planning to make pictures here. The report came from New York where Miss Clark now is. It seems likely she will confine herself to two or three pictures a year, producing from May to November. She will make them in New Orleans, if possible, and will remain in the South for the remainder of the year. The pictures are to be of the super-special calibre.

A man and woman were injured one noon last week when wind blew a sign off the front of the Plaza theatre. The sign was eighty feet by four feet and was resting on a canopy above the entrance of the theatre. There was a large crowd under it when it fell, but only two were hurt.

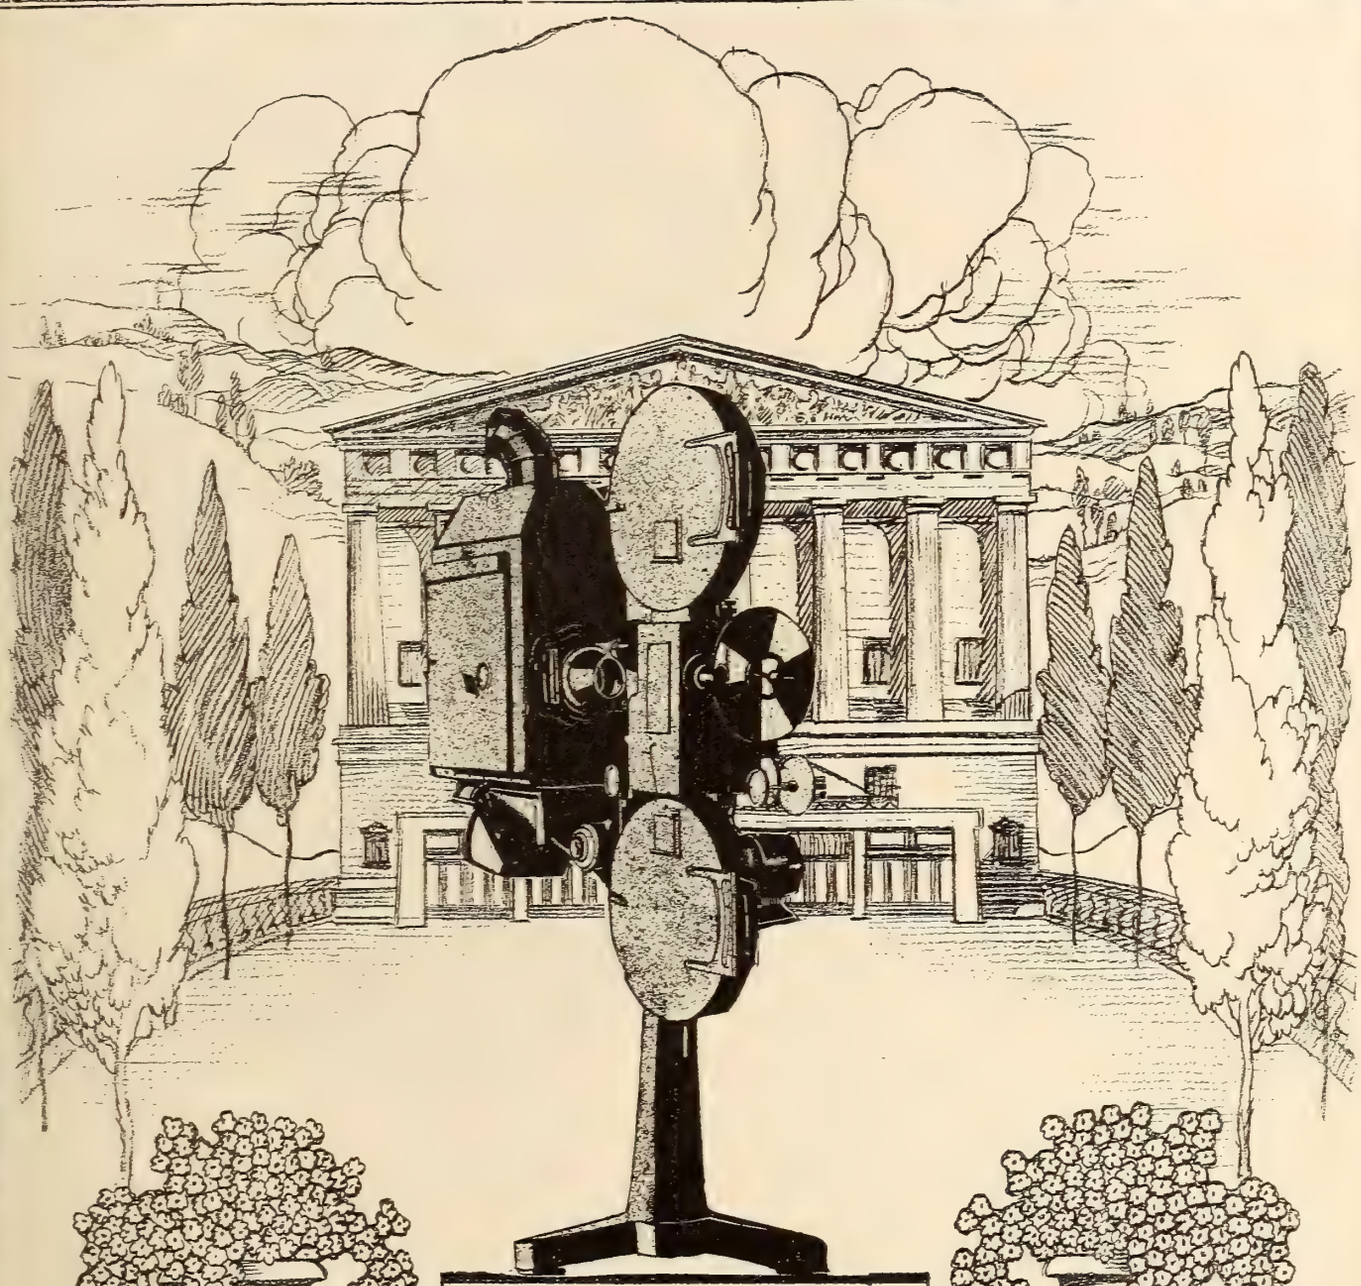
"The Three Hoy Midgets," playing last week at the Palace, gave a reception Saturday afternoon in the lobby to hundreds of children invited by the management.

E. A. Schiller, general manager of Loew's Southwestern circuit, spent a few days last week in New Orleans. He said the business by Loew's house in New Orleans, the Crescent, was beyond expectations. The business here during the summer exceeded the same number of months last winter.

Decorators employed by the Saenger Amusement company of New Orleans are painting the new stage and lobby of the Crown theatre in Biloxi, Miss. A $10,000 pipe organ is to be installed this fall.

SEATTLE

Mr. Hugh Rennie, manager of the Northwest office of the Republic Distributing Corporation and the National and Select pictures, has left Seattle to take charge of the First National at Buffalo, New York. Mr. Rennie has been well liked along Seattle's Film Row and has been very popular with the exhibitors of the Northwest.



When Manager Branham of the Strand, Seattle, was transferred to the Liberty, Seattle, Ralph Ruffner, formerly advertising manager for the People's, the Star and the Majestic theatres at Portland, Oregon, was placed in charge of the Strand, Seattle. Both of these men are well known throughout filmdom.

"The Winter Garden," Seattle's latest motion picture theatre, will open for business about October 9. It is being built for Messrs. James Q. Clemmer, of the Clemmer, Seattle, Edwin F. James and Mr. Meier, and it will cost approximately $150,000. There will be many novel features in the "Winter Garden," among them a seating capacity of 1000 on one floor. The exterior of the theatre will be faced with a special tapestry brick of attractive shade. The first floor front will be of tile. The theatre will occupy a site 60 x 108 feet and will be located just north of Pike on Third avenue.

Waiting until the day's cash was all in and about to be tucked away for the night, two bandits entered the office of the Coliseum theatre at 10.30 one night recently, holding up two employes, Frank Steffy and Ben Larsen, and binding them to chairs with stout fish lines. They carried away a money sack containing $530.

The Jolly Journeys

"The Tamer The Wilder" "Balling The Junk"

ONE EVERY WEEK — SINGLE REELS

FIVE Chester-Outing cameramen are constantly bringing from the unsung portions of the earth all the lands and peoples in their quaintness and appeal to your screen.

From "Seven League Boots," taken in the heart of the Swiss Alps, to the "Naiads of the South Seas," where tropic fashions rule—from the end of the earth at Cape Horn, where no man lives, to the crowded millions of China the Chester camera seeks out the strange and the interesting.

Then the best of the work of these globe-combers, cut to the bone of the best and inimitably titled come to bring you patrons—again and again.

YOU'LL WANT TO SHOW ALL OF THESE:

"PIGS AND KAVA"
"ADAM AND EVE IN ANDES"
"PYRENNES AND WOODEN LEGS"
"WANTED AN ELEVATOR"
"FORBIDDEN FANES"
"OLD BUDDHA'S MAZE"

CASH FOR YOUR BOX-OFFICE

Do You Always Remember You Must Sell Your Bill To The Public

WE offer as an appeal to you the very newspaper ads with which you are provided to make your appeal to the patron.

A motion picture is a success only when it crowds your theatre. These ads are built to create a desire to see these pictures.

And every NEW two-reel Christie Comedy backs up every promise that you make for it.

CHRISTIE

THERE is a "reason why" for every NEW Christie Comedy; there is a purpose behind every ad prepared for your use.

They are made with the exhibitor only in mind. You'll hunt in vain for producer's name, for director's, author's and cameramen's.

And there is no need of that. Show two of these NEW pictures and your patrons will demand them all.

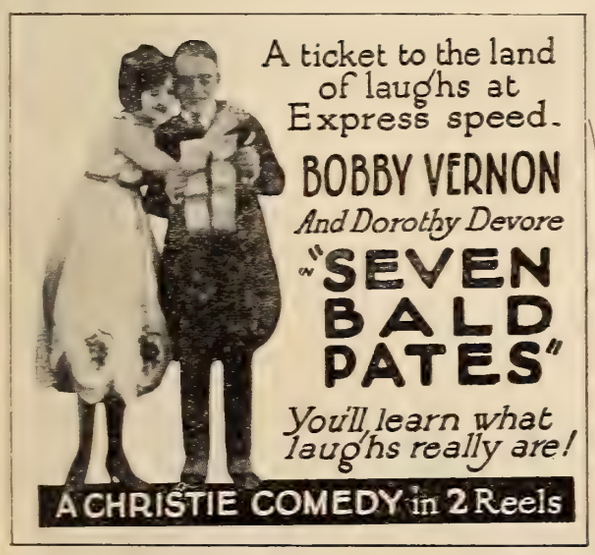
A CHRISTIE COMEDY

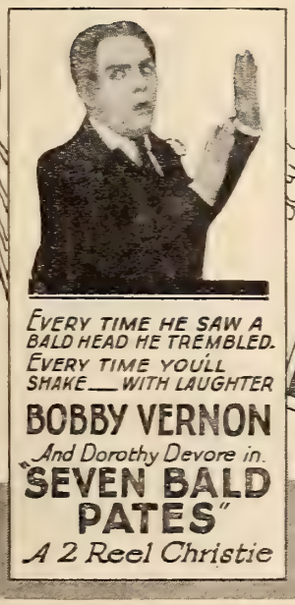
NEW Christie Comedies appeal to the exhibitor purely on the quality of the pictures themselves—that is your appeal, too.

Each comedy stands for exactly what it contains—each comedy is as different as it can possibly be from others.

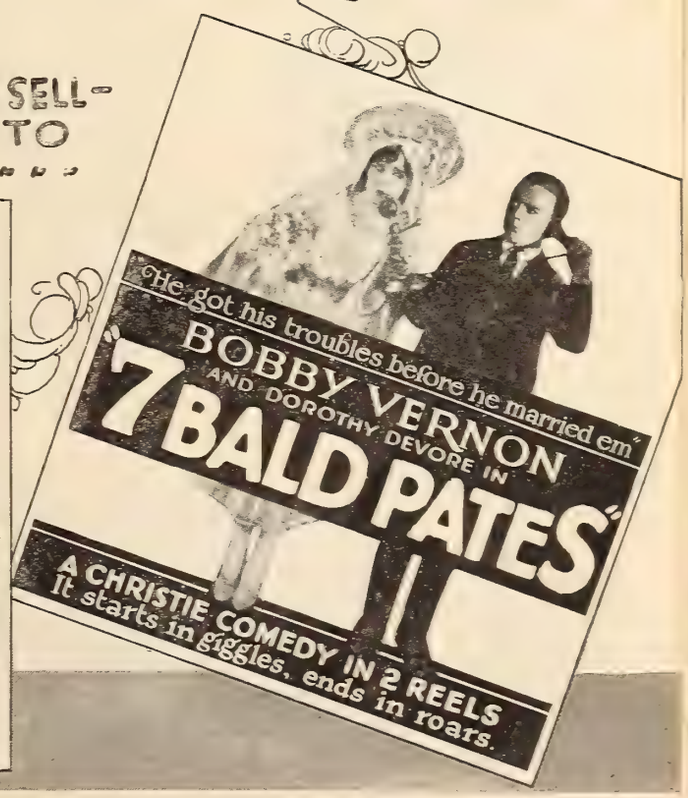
There is the variety that stimulates audience desire—only the sameness of quality is retained.



COMEDIES



THERE are no "accidents" to mar production quality—no excuses that you have to pass along to your audiences.



An assembly of comedians, principals and supporting players that no other can boast, of stories, of directors, insures that.

There are names to use with every release—names that mean something to your own box office.

SOMETHING TO SELL—SOMETHING TO SELL IT WITH . . .

YOUTH AND BEAUTY ALWAYS

IF Ponce de Leon had discovered New Christie Comedies he would have saved himself lots of trouble.

There's the spirit of the Springtime about them—of glad things—of humor like the fountains that play in the sunlight—clear and sparkling and CLEAN.

Bobby Vernon, Fay Tincher, Eddie Barry and Harry Gribbon are the featured players. In their support are performers as well known—Vera Steadman, Teddy Sampson, Helen Darling, Dorothy Devore, Neal Burns, Charlotte Merriam, and many more.

THERE are the Follies Girls—in almost every picture—dazzlingly costumed, the essence of grace and beauty—a rich background for any production.

New Christie Comedies are YOUNG—young in their players, young in their spirit,—young and vigorous in their appeal to all. That's why the Rialto and Rivoli, New York, signed the biggest contract for two reel comedies ever made to get them—why they have cut a nation-wide swath of success from coast to coast.

THE BEST COMEDY OF THE MONTH

KISS ME CAROLINE—Christie

THE real bedroom farce of the screen. Al Christie has, with this rapid comedy, achieved painlessly what other producers have attempted in vain with their lavish picturizations of expensive and risque Broadway hits. They are all the usual complications which ensue when Bobby Vernon impersonates his pal's wife to please his pal's father, and pal's sister and her chum come to visit them. Bobby is a continual scream; while Charlotte Merriam, a pretty blonde, and Vera Steadman who formerly performed in tanks, provide the embellishments. We should call this the best short comedy of the month.

RITCHEY LITHOS WILL ENHANCE HART EXPLOITATION

Western Photogravure Co. Creating Entirely New Style Lobby Photos

The initial steps in the exhibitor advertising and exploitation campaign behind the Neal Hart Pinnacle Productions were taken last week when Eddy Eckels, Gen'l. Mgr. of the Independent Films Assn. O. K'd. the new style of lithographs created by the Ritchey Lithographing Co. and the lobby photos created by the Western Photogravure Co.

To Quote Mr. Eckels: "The Ritchey lithographs are smashingly sensational and different. They possess the dignity of the highest class type of art poster, but deliver their message of action with powerful scenes that stand for the power of the separate threads of the story—that sort of power that stands for drawing power."

"Both the 11x14 and 22x28 lobby photos are the highest example of pastel art in colors of beautiful blends—so different that all of the exchanges have doubled their usual orders and it is a certainty that every exhibitor will look for a more conspicious spot in the lobby of his theatre for their presentation.

TUTTLE WRITING THIRD NEAL HART STORY

H. C. Tuttle, star writer for "Adventure," has already started writing the continuity for Neal Hart's third production to follow "SKYFIRE." Mr. Hart's second vehicle, "SKYFIRE," is also from the pen of Mr. Tuttle.

ROYAL AT DES MOINES BOOKS FIRST RUN HART

C. C. Bridwell, mgr. Magnet Film Co., Davenport, Iowa, long distances the following: "I'll say the Neal Harts are some pictures—just booked the Royal at Des Moines for an excellent first run and got eight other houses on the same circuit."

Bob Savini of Savini Films, Atlanta knows full-well that the Independent Films Assn. is fast making history. As proof of it, he arranged for a special lady correspondent of one of the leading southern newspapers to spend her vacation in Chicago and, at the same time, utilize her trip as an assignment on a big story for Nat Royster of the Southern Pictures News.

INDEPENDENT MASTER FILMS TAKE OVER HART FEATURES IN DETROIT

After negotiations lasting a week, W. B. Seifert and G. E. LeVeque of the Independent Master Films, 105 John R. St., Detroit, Mich., closed all details with Eddy Eckels for taking over the Neal Hart contract, formerly held by Dave Mundstuk of the Strand Feature Film Co.

The Independent Master Films will release the first picture of the series Oct. 1st.

W. B. Seifert believes that, with the closing of this deal, he has secured the greatest "bet" in the Independent Field.

ARROW PHOTOPLAYS BUY "LONE HAND" FOR DENVER

E. J. Drucker of the Arrow Photoplays Co. of Denver closed negotiations last week with Eddy Eckels, genl. mgr. Independent Films Assn. for the Denver territory on "The Lone Hand," featuring Roy Stewart. Arrow will release the Lone Hand September 15th.

FILM CRAFT TRAILERS READY ON FIRST HART PICTURE

J. E. Willis screened the first elaborate announcement film trailer for "HELL'S OASIS" last week for the executives of the Independent Films Assn. and the unanimous verdict of "It couldn't be bettered" was voiced by all.

The "HELL'S OASIS" trailer carries not only a spicy and snappy word description of the picture, but several actual motion flashes from the play itself, which will actually torment the most casual lay fan into wanting to make cocksure he or she sees the real production on its play date.

"HELL'S OASIS" trailers are available within twenty-four hours notice. Special days and dates are inserted without extra charge.

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH'S

new picture

"THE LOVE FLOWER"

From the Collier's Weekly Story "Black Beach" by Ralph Stock

ACCLAIMED BY NEWSPAPER REVIEWERS

"Outdoes in point of art and photoplay 'style' the ordinary lot of films so markedly that it deserves the 'stand up and pack 'em in' patronage that it is receiving. It has the Griffith touch."

New York Tribune.

"Two magnificent scenes are of fights under water, the heroine, looking like a lovely white ghost, pitting her strength and skill against the villain . . . . . You should not miss 'The Love Flower.'"

The Illustrated News.

"Surprise and action through the entire picture and frequent injection of that skilled ability to photograph in dramatic triteness the purr of a kitten or the dropping of tears, inseparable with the Griffith film."

New York American.

"'The Love Flower' takes the lead of New Week's Collection of Film Plays."

New York World. (Headline)

"Is it surprising that after building up this suspense through a series of beautiful and dramatic views that the spectators broke into enthusiastic applause."

New York Sun and Herald.

"David Wark Griffith's magic touch is revealed again and again in his newest film, 'The Love Flower.'"

New York Evening Telegram.

"D. W. Griffith's latest picture, 'The Love Flower', is entitled to a place among the superlative productions of the season. With the instinct of an artist he works his story into one grand thundering climax which abates the spectator's breath and keeps him on the edge of his seat."

New York Evening Mail.

"It is quite up to Mr. Griffith's high standard."

New York Evening Sun.

Headin' Home

starring Babe Ruth

will be ready for you SEPTEMBER 20th

HARRY CROSS in the New York Times says this about the greatest attraction of the day.

Ruth has become such a hero that he blocks the traffic going to and from the club house. Men and boys fought with one another yesterday after the game to reach his side and grasp the mighty hands which clutch the home run bat. Girls and women make him pose for snapshots and proud fathers edge their lads up to him to lay his mammoth paws on their curly heads. At the gates hawkers sell pictures of the Bazoo of Bang and others are selling the latest popular song, "Oh You Babe." Palmists hound Babe to let them read the lines of those million dollar mitts and autograph hunters armed with .45-calibre fountain pens dog his footsteps to get his signature.
